Will, I can tell you for certain that it wasn't by doing a second-rate job. Rowan possessed a positive spirit and a willingness to try. He stopped at nothing short of the best, and he was rewarded for his efforts.

Some of us here today may need to tear down the obstacles we've built, to clear away our own self-doubters—those dusty cobwebs that are holding us back from delivering a message to Garcia. Confidence and determination are the keys; the pride of knowing you've done your best is the goal. That is precisely the spirit of the saying Mr. Truman admired so much—"He done his damndest."

In life we have the opportunity to do our best, no one can ask or expect anything more. And, come what may, we can enjoy a sense of achievement, of self-respect, and of happiness. The challenge that I present to you this day is to fulfill your potential, to be the very best person you can be. For there will always be a need for someone to carry a message to Garcia. I hope that each of you will be such a person who will follow the advice of Winston Churchill:

Never give in,
Never give in,
Never, never, never, never,
In nothing, great or small,
large or petty,
Never give in,
Except to convictions
of honor and good sense.

This challenge I have set before you—to never give in and to always do your best—is a difficult one, yet it is not impossible. A poem written by the American poet Edgar A. Guest best expresses the attitude you need to achieve this goal, so let me leave you today with his words:

Somebody said that it couldn't be done, but he with a chuckle replied that maybe, it couldn't but he would be one who wouldn't say so til he tried.
So he buckled right in with the trace of a grin on his face. If he worried he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing that couldn't be done, and he did it.

REPEAL OF THE WINDFALL PROFIT TAX: THE TIME IS RIGHT

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today President Reagan endorsed the repeal of the windfall profit tax, a tax that has imposed a severe and unfair burden on the American energy industry and oil producer States such as Texas.

This action is very timely, and will go a long way toward establishing a firm foundation for the American energy industry. The windfall profit tax is a burden that contributed to the slump that is now affecting the economies of the oil patch States. I am happy that President Reagan took this action, and will be glad to see this abusive tax go the way of the dinosaur: extinction.

The President has demonstrated that he is aware of the problems that the OPEC oil price war is causing in States such as Texas. I am confident that he will continue to monitor these problems and consider other solutions.

The experience of the past 6 years indicates that the windfall profit tax has been a failure. The anticipated $222.7 billion in tax revenues will turn out to be closer to $44.8 billion, about 20 percent of the tax revenue target. Much of this decline is due to the depressed economic conditions in the energy industry, which were partially caused by the windfall profit tax.

The President's action will certainly be welcome news in my home State of Texas. My constituents realize that President Reagan cares about them and the problems that OPEC is inflicting on the oil patch. His action today is proof that he is prepared to take firm action to maintain American energy security.

EFFECTS OF TAX REFORM ON TRADE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues the recent findings of the U.S. International Trade Commission on the effects of tax reform on the international competitiveness of American industry.

The short answer is that the tax reform bill (H.R. 3838) passed by this House last December will have practically no net effect on U.S. trade.

As part of the ongoing debate on tax reform, representatives of several industries have charged that tax reform would seriously damage their position in international trade. I know that many Members of Congress are concerned about the international competitiveness of our manufacturing firms and have been receptive to the argument.

Because of these concerns, the Senate Finance Committee asked the International Trade Commission to study this issue.

The Commission approached the problem by first estimating the impact of tax changes including reduced corporate rates, repeal of the investment tax credit, and new rules for depreciation on output prices and then calculating the effects on trade flows for each industry. The results indicate that no industry could expect an increase in net imports—that is, a worsening of their position in world trade—of as much as 1 percent of domestic output. Some industries could expect a modest decrease of net imports—that is, an improvement in their trade position.

I am led to conclude that some members of the business community are using the international competitiveness issue as a smoke screen to cover up their opposition to paying their fair share of the Nation's tax burden.

The executive summary of the Commission's study follows along with the key table showing the industry-by-industry effect of the House bill on international trade. The full study is entitled "Effects of Proposed Tax Reforms on the International Competitiveness of U.S. Industries" and is available from the Commission.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Senate Finance Committee asked the International Trade Commission to determine the effects that tax reform proposals made by the President and the House Ways and Means Committee would have on the international competitiveness of U.S. industries. This is the first time in nearly a decade that the Commission has been asked to study the trade impact of major domestic legislation.

In response to the Committee's request, this study estimates how the proposed tax changes would affect the imports and exports of U.S. industries. The study also estimates the effects of these proposals on the cost of capital and on relative prices (but not the overall level of domestic prices). The estimates cover all major sectors of the U.S. economy. The sectors are those of the Commerce Department's small input-output table.

EFFECTS OF TAX REFORM ON TRADE

When looking at individual industries, the estimated trade effects of either reform proposal are small relative to domestic output.

This is true even though our estimating methods tend to overstate the trade effects. Two major determinants of the importance of the trade effects in an industry are the price sensitivity of imports and exports, and the importance of imports and exports relative to domestic output.

Our best estimates show that, for either the President's or the House propsal, none of the adverse trade effects would be as great as 1 percent of U.S. output.

The industries that would be affected most adversely by the President's proposal would be Office computing and accounting machines, and Motor vehicles and equipment. The increase in net imports in these sectors is 0.6 percent and 0.7 percent of domestic production, respectively. No other industries would be adversely affected by as much as 0.5 percent of domestic production.

Under the House proposal, the industry most adversely affected would be Chemical and fertilizer mineral mining. Net imports in the industry would increase by as much as 0.9 percent of domestic production; no other industry would be adversely affected by as much as 0.5 percent of domestic production.

Under both proposals, the industry benefiting the most would be Footwear and other leather products.

The decrease in net imports for this industry would be from 1.7 to 2.4 percent of domestic output under the President's proposal and from 3.0 to 4.4 percent under the House proposal.

Other industries that would benefit under the President's proposal include Other agricultural products, with a decrease in net imports of from 0.7 to 0.8 percent of domestic output; Leather tanning and finishing, 1.1 to 1.3 percent; and Miscellaneous manufacturing, 1.1 to 1.8 percent.

Other industries that would benefit under the House proposal include Apparel, with a decrease in net imports of from 0.6 to 0.9 percent of domestic output; Household furniture, 0.3 to 0.6 percent; Leather tanning and finishing, 0.5 to 0.9 percent; Office, computing, and accounting machines, 0.3 to 1.1 percent; Radio, TV, and communication equipment, 0.4 to 0.7 percent; Aircraft and parts, 0.8 to 1.3 percent; and Miscellaneous manufacturing, 0.4 to 1.7 percent.

EFFECTS ON THE COST OF CAPITAL

The effect on the cost of capital would vary significantly among different types of assets. Most short-lived assets would be adversely affected by both proposed reforms, whereas very long-lived assets would be favorably affected.

After accounting for the asset mix used by each industry, it was found that the changes in corporate taxes in the President's proposal would reduce the average cost of capital for most industries, whereas the changes in the House Ways and Means Committee proposal would increase the cost of capital for every industry except Real estate and rental. The two proposals would raise average corporate taxes by similar amounts. However, the two proposals differ markedly in the rate at which returns from new investment are taxed, and it is this rate that determines the effect on the cost of capital.

A characteristic of the House bill is that it would provide more uniform tax rates among different industries. The marginal effective corporate tax rate (the tax rate on the last, or "marginal," unit of corporate investment) generally would vary more among different industries under the President's proposal than Under the House bill.

Under the President's proposal, the largest reductions in the cost of capital among traded-goods industries would occur in Apparel, Miscellaneous textile goods, Leather tanning and finishing, and Footwear and other leather products. These declines were between 7 and 8 percent. Under the House proposal, the largest increases in the cost of capital among traded-goods industries would occur in Iron and ferroalloy mining, Nonferrous metal mining, Paper and allied products, Paperboard containers, and Motor vehicles and equipment. These increases would range from 9 to 10 percent.

EFFECTS ON PRICES

Even if all of the changes in the cost of capital were completely passed through by each industry at each stage of production, the changes in prices in the traded goods industries would still be quite small.

Under the President's proposal, these price changes (mostly price reductions) would all be less than 3 percent. Under the House proposal, these price changes (mostly price increases) would all be less than 4 percent. Under both proposals, the largest price increase would occur in Communications, except radio and TV. Under the House proposal, the second largest price increase would be electric, gas, water and sanitary services. Under the President's proposal, the second largest price increase would be in Transportation and warehousing.

SCOPE AND LIMITATIONS OF THE COMMISSION'S STUDY

The focus of the study is on the effects of the proposed tax changes on international trade of individual U.S. industries, and these are not the same as the effects on total domestic output of these industries.

The effects of tax changes on domestic output are likely to exceed the effects on trade. For example, even in an industry with no international trade, domestic producers would probably still experience some loss in sales if a tax increase raised their output price.

Without its own macroeconomical model, the Commission was unable to make estimates of the aggregate trade-balance of either tax-reform proposal.

However, the Commission made estimates of what the trade effects would be for each industry if the aggregate trade balance changed in accordance with the predictions of various macroeconomic models,[1] and if it did not change at all. Estimates of the industry trade effects were also made as though the value of the dollar were fixed.

For any industry, tax reform directly affects the cost of doing business, but it also affects the environment in which the industry must operate. For example, the 1981–1982 investment tax incentives lowered the cost of capital to U.S. firms, but by reducing tax revenues they added to the large increase in the Federal budget deficit, which caused large capital inflows and contributed to a stronger U.S. dollar. The stronger dollar resulted in an unprecedented increase in U.S. imports and stagnating exports.

There are other possible macroeconomic considerations that should be mentioned. For example, if tax reform is revenue neutral but slows down economic activity, it would also tend to cause a decline in imports. In such a case, U.S. industries would be harmed by tax reform even while the trade balance is improving.

The above examples illustrate that the effects of tax reform on international trade might be different from what one would expect. In particular, the effects of tax reform on international competitiveness cannot be addressed by looking only at the direct effects of tax reform on the cost of capital. It is also necessary to account for macroeconomic considerations, such as the effects on international capital flows.

In evaluating the effects of the two tax reform proposals on industry trade balances, the Commission considered only the tax changes that would cause a predictable change in business costs. Other changes, such as the treatment of personal income earned overseas, are only discussed qualitatively.

[1] For the House proposal, these were the predictions from Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates, Inc., Jan. 29, 1986, and Lawrence H. Meyers and Associates, Nov. 25, 1985. For the President's proposal, these were the predictions from Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates, Inc., Oct. 16, 1985. All of these models predicted fairly small effects on the aggregate trade balance.

It would have been impossible to take into account the effect of every proposed change, even if more than four months were allowed to complete the study. Included in the analysis were the effects of the changes in depreciation schedules, the elimination of the Investment Tax Credit, the reductions in the statutory corporate tax rates, and the introduction of a deduction for dividends paid. These changes in the tax code account for most of the predictable change in the relative international competitiveness of U.S. industries.

METHODOLOGY

To estimate the trade effects of the proposed tax changes, the first step was to determine the effects on the cost of capital by industry. We overstated these cost changes by calculating the cost changes as though no firm would reduce its costs by changing its manufacturing techniques or accounting methods in response to the tax changes. The second step was to calculate the change in the cost of inputs for each of the industries. To do this the prices of each industry were treated as though the entire change in its tax bill were completely passed on to its customers. Again, no substitution by its customers was allowed for, thus this technique also overstates the cost change for each industry. The final step was to take these upper bound estimates of price change and to translate them into changes in exports and imports by industry. In this last step, three cases were considered. In the first case, an exchange rate adjustment was included that caused the industry trade effects to sum to the aggregate trade balance effect predicted by one of the macroeconomic models. In the second case, the exchange rate adjustment was included that caused the industry trade effects to sum to zero. (The results from the first and second cases were very similar, and are viewed as the "best" estimates.) In the third case, no exchange rate adjustment was included.

THE NATION'S LIBRARIES AT RISK

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, the American Library Association sponsored a legislative day last week to bring to the attention of national lawmakers the plight of a nation's libraries. In a city like New York, the public library system has often been the door to education and learning for the poor as well as the rich. Because of massive cutbacks in support for the nation's libraries, excellent libraries like the Brooklyn Public Library will have to drastically reduce staff and services to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, too often we have viewed libraries as an afterthought. Their contribution to the education level of American society is rarely acknowledged at a time when illiteracy is recognized as a growing problem; and at a time when the high school dropout rates for black and Hispanic youngsters in New York City is often as high as 60 percent. We cannot afford to diminish financial support for an institution that has contributed and continues to contribute to general education in this society. As a graduate from North Carolina A&T University, a college with one of the finest libraries in the Southeastern United States, I understand how valuable libraries are to not only colleges and universities but to our public and private school systems as well.

I want to join my colleague from Brooklyn, Congressman MAJOR OWENS, in urging a reexamination of our funding priorities for libraries. As Members of Congress, we have often relied on the Library of Congress without a second thought. Yet reductions in services have drastically cut back braille materials and other special services to the handicapped. Moreover, the Congressional Research Service has not been immune from the reductions under Gramm-Rudman. The budgetary impact of this resolution on the Nation's libraries is yet another example of the fallacy of budget-cutting by computer.

Hopefully, our Nation's libraries will be able to weather the immediate storm of these cutbacks. I am hopeful that we, as lawmakers, will act more responsively in the future toward one of our greatest educational resources, the libraries of this Nation.

HONORING FATHER FRANKO ON 36 YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to honor Father George M. Franko on the celebration of his 36 years in the priesthood, 30 of those years in ministry to the Holy Name of Jesus Parish of Youngstown, OH.

Born of Joseph Franko and Suzanne Ferencak of Youngstown, OH, on December 8, 1924, Father Franko attended Saintes Cyril and Methodius Parochial School, Ursuline High School, Sacred Heart Seminary of Detroit and St. Mary's Seminary of Cleveland. Ordained on April 29, 1950, at St. Columba Cathedral in Youngstown, Father Franko is now celebrating his ordination anniversary at Holy Name Parish in Youngstown this Sunday.

Father Franko has during his 36 years of service to the parish of Holy Name of Jesus, provided leadership, inspiration and responsible guidance to individuals and groups of the church. It is indeed an honor for me to commemorate this important milestone in the life of a truly loved and respected priest, Father Franko. May Father Franko have many more years of service to those members of the Holy Name of Jesus Parish who deem him their favorite priest.

COLORADO RESEARCHER, THOMAS CECH, SEEKS THE ORIGINS OF LIFE

HON. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, in 1982, a young scientist at the University of Colorado in Boulder, Thomas Cech, published a revolutionary paper which changed forever what we know about the origins of life on this planet.

Cech's research on the nucleic acid, RNA, has given scientists insight into the chain of life—how human life may have formed from the very beginning. His discovery, that the earliest genes may have been able to replicate themselves, represents a contribution which will have far-reaching effects in the fields of biochemistry and medicine. It sheds light on the proliferation of cancer cells and in the treatment of certain diseases in which the body's defenses turn against itself.

Thomas Cech and his dedicated and able assistants, Art Zaug and Paula Grabowski, deserve to be recognized and lauded for their outstanding contributions to our understanding of the possible origins of life.

Empire, the Sunday magazine published by the Denver Post, recently named Thomas Cech the 1986 Westerner of the Year. I commend the following article to my colleagues in the House.

WESTERNER OF THE YEAR—THOMAS CECH FITS ANOTHER PIECE INTO THE PUZZLE OF LIFE

(By John Aloysius Farrell)

(If proteins were needed in order for nucleic acids (DNA and RNA) to do anything, and if nucleic acids were needed to code for proteins, which came first, the protein or the nucleic acid? The chicken or the egg? This is a question biochemists have had since Francis Crick and James Watson deciphered the genetic code locked in the double helix of DNA in 1953. University of Colorado scientist Thomas Cech offers a reasonable answer.)

This was Nobel Prize territory, and here were some lanky pups—an untenured professor and a handful of grad students—about to tell the world that one of the basic tenets of biochemistry, an axiom of all the textbooks, was irrefutably, undeniably, flat-out Wrong.

In the third-floor laboratory at the Boulder campus of the University of Colorado, they remember how they'd mention their work at conferences and conventions and how the Giants of Science would walk away chuckling at this hot-shot young biochemist with a yearning for professional immolation.

"We didn't want to be wrong," says the hot shot, Thomas Cech. "It had better be right, or, when we published, someone was going to say, 'Hey, wait a minute! It doesn't work the way you said.' "

So Cech took it slowly. But he didn't give up—despite the smirks, despite the conventional scientific wisdom. And when the last experiments were finished, and the final evidence was in, and all the results were Ceched and double-Ceched, he popped a champagne cork and gathered his associates around.

They were about to rock the world of biochemistry—no mean feat in a field grown almost jaded by a continual string of startling discoveries.

Using the genes of a hairy protozoan called Tetrahymena thermophila, Cech and his colleagues had discovered a way that life may have evolved from the organic molecules, clays, and salts that formed the primordial earth. In doing so, they found a solution to one of science's most remarkable riddles—how the earliest genes may have formed and replicated. Along the way, they brashly rewrote the rules and axioms and scuttled the conventional wisdom.

And life for Tom Cech has not been the same since.

There's a handwritten sign on the door to his laboratory: "Boulder Home for the Bewildered (Enter at Your Own Risk)."

Inside, the floor is filthy and the tables crammed with bottles and tubing. An ice chest bears the label "Leaks (Slowly)." Shelves in the carrels are lined with the junk of university life: softball mitts, a Van Gogh print, job notices, a shattered clock that only runs backwards.

There's a sleeping bag and a pillow for the mysterious grad student who lost his apartment and moved into the lab. Ten-speed bicycles clog the hallways. A worn dart board, and a pattern of holes in the surrounding wall, hint at deep thoughts and bad aim. The students here call themselves nerds—proudly—and answer the phone, "Cech lab."

This is the realm of research at a major American university, invariably disappointing to the visitor who expects streamlined work stations jammed with clean-cut technicians and high-tech geegaws.

There's only one bubbling beaker here, and it's stuck in the corner, an afterthought, amid bottles of stuff like phenylmethyl sulfonyl fluoride. A set of Mickey Mouse ears sits atop the computer, the lapels of the lab coats sport New Wave buttons.

It's a system based on freedom, where the nonconformist is prized for the originality of his or her ideas—not for the ability to fit into a corporate structure.

And here is Cech. Shaggy hair, Crew-necked sweater. Wire-rimmed glasses. Bright and confident, somewhat sardonic. No white-frocked scientist lifting a test tube to the sky, like the illustrations in fourth-grade science books and GE ads. More like Donald Sutherland, portraying the anarchist Hawkeye Pierce in the motion picture M*A*S*H.

Like most scientists , Cech is consumed by the complex challenge of his quest. Unlike many, he has a sense of humor, and the patience and ability to explain what he does and why it's significant.

He declines to carry the burden of self-importance and takes great pains to give credit to Art Zaug, a research associate, and Paula Grabowski, a former graduate student, and the rest of his staff of more than a dozen fledgling scientists.

"I think the thing that is uniformly ignored is that these things are a team effort," Cech says. "People always focus on me. But that's really not the way science is done. I'm directing a lab that has a lot of really good independent workers who make their own observations that led to these discoveries."

Not surprisingly, his associates return the compliment. Cech's a man you want to work for, says Zaug, because he trusts you, and because you can go to him with a particularly sticky problem: "I'm allowed to go out on my own. Rarely does he tell me what to do. But when you just don't know which way to go, he's very helpful to talk to."

It was at just this sort of juncture that Zaug came to Cech, in 1981, with what the professor would later call the "screwy and bizarre" results of an otherwise routine experiment.

Cech was spending more time in the lab then. His daughter Allison had not been born. And he and his wife, a biochemist who also works at CU, were not expecting their second child. Nor was he burdened with the politics and paper work of success. So he analyzed the findings, weighed their significance, risked ridicule and the loss of his funding, and made the decision to chase a glimmer of a gleam, an ephemeral possibility.

He decided to tackle issues that have, for centuries, confounded and inspired: What is the nature of life? How did it begin?

In trying to understand his work and its significance, it's necessary to back up a bit, to unravel the prevailing scientific theory for the beginning of our universe. We think it began with a Big Bang, 10 billion years ago—a primeval fireball flowing from the instant of creation.

After three minutes, temperatures cooled enough for the first atomic particles to form. After a million years, clumps of matter were seized by gravity and spun into stars. After a billion years, some of these stars exploded as supernovas, casting gas and dust through the universe. After 4 billion years, the scattered ashes of these distant novas collected to form our solar system. Our earth and all its creatures are, as they sang in Woodstock, stardust.

Now a world was formed, with water collecting in oceans and lakes and pools. The water was chock-full with chemicals, and some of those compounds were organic bits of billion-year-old carbon. Simple molecules were tossed and tumbled; lightning struck the surface, and particles of matter began to cling to one another, forming a chain.

These chains were the primordial ancestors of life on earth. They may have been made of nucleic acids like DNA or RNA—which carry the genetic program through succeeding generations—or they may have been made of proteins, which take the genetic information and put it to use, acting as the building blocks of cells.

In modern cells, the nucleic acids act like computer software. They form an information bank that tells the machine how to run a program, over and over through the ages. The proteins are like computer hardware.

They free the information stored on nucleic software and go to work.

And there lies the enigma. Without the software, the machine is useless. Without the machine, the software sits unused.

And so scientists, in the early 1980s, were stymied. Which came first, the hardware or the software?

"It's the chicken and the egg," says Leslie Orgel, whose work at the Salk Institute for Biological Studies has made him one of the world's leading experts on the origin of life. "Without nucleic acids you can't make proteins. And without proteins you can't get nucleic acid to replicate. So how do you get started?"

Thomas Cech found one possibility.

In 1982 CECH published a revolutionary paper: "Self-Splicing RNA: Autoexcision and Autocyclization of the Ribosomal RNA Intervening Sequence of Tetrahymena," in the November issue of Cell magazine.

Forget the title, it's all very simple, Cech says.

"Genes are made of DNA, and DNA contains the code which specifies how all the proteins in the cell are going to be made. The DNA is the storehouse of the information."

But DNA is a rather dumb acid. It does the thing for which it is known—strands, the famous double helix—very well, and not much else.

"That is what it is supposed to be," says Cech. "For stable storage of information you don't want it doing interesting things, because then it would be mutating its genes."

Before anything can get started, DNA must be copied into something more flexible; freed from the double helix. And so, in the cell, there is RNA.

Chemically, DNA is quite similar to DNA, but it plays a different role. The genetic information is copied from DNA onto a single-stranded RNA molecule (a process called transcription), which conveys the data to the cell and teaches it to create proteins that go on to become eyes or feet or flippers or fur.

There was only one catch. In Tetrahymena, and in higher organisms like frogs and human beings, the RNA copies of DNA also contain a set of haywire sequences—bits of garbled software, if you will—called introns, or intervening sequences.

Cech came to work in the CU chemistry building in 1978 after graduating from Iowa's Grinnell College and the University of California at Berkeley and working at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge. He had developed an interest in biochemistry "because of the way my mind works," he says.

In 1978 no one really knew what introns did. "The higher purpose of introns is still in dispute," Cech says. "They may, in the long term, serve some positive function. Or they may be a negative thing. But what is absolutely clear is that they have to be got rid of. In the short term, RNA is interrupted. The message, which has this nice set of information on it, is interrupted by blocks of nonsense. The excess baggage has to be removed."

There's only one way to remove the introns and debug the software: snip the RNA molecule at both ends of the offending sequence, then splice it back together.

Until Cech made his discovery, it was widely believed that the only substance that could act like a catalyst and snip and splice was a protein. But proteins couldn't be made unless RNA unlocked the information in DNA . . . and RNA couldn't make proteins without being spliced, so . . . .

"If proteins were needed in order for nucleic acids to do anything," Cech says, "and if nucleic acids were needed to code for proteins, which came first, the protein or the nucleic acid? The function or the information? The chicken or the egg."

Within a few months, fate smiled on Thomas Cech. He and his colleagues were working on the bug Tetrahymena because, as a one-celled protozoan, it offers a simple system of genetic expression. In examining the tiny creature, they discovered it was full of DNA molecules with introns. "There were 10,000 copies of this gene in Tetrahymena," Cech says. "That's a lot. A lot of genes are only present in one copy per cell.

"So we said, 'Oh wow, 10,000 genes! And they all have this intron! That must mean there is a huge amount of splicing going on.' "

The fortunate make their own luck, of course. It takes a certain amount of confidence for a young assistant professor to devote the energies of an entire lab and almost $300,000 in federal grants to a study of Tetrahymena on the basis of "Oh wow, 10,000 genes!"

Before his research was over, the National Institutes of Health would give Cech more than $1.3 million, and the American Cancer Institute another $240,000. He would win a National Cancer Institute Career Development Award of $30,000 a year for five years and a Guggenheim fellowship of $20,000.

The gamble paid off—all because of a screwy result in Zaug's test tubes.

After winning money from NIH, Cech and his team had gone to work in the lab searching for the protein that (conventional wisdom told them) must be sniping the introns from RNA and splicing the molecule back together.

The experiments weren't too tricky: isolating a strand of RNA and adding various proteins until one acted as a catalyst and began the splicing process. One test tube was reserved as a "control," without any proteins at all—just RNA in a benign solution.

Things were proceeding uneventfully until the day Zaug checked the control solution and found, with some exasperation, that the RNA was spliced. The test tube must have been contaminated, he thought, and vowed to be more careful the next time around.

"I kept saying, 'This is ridiculous. How did it happen?' " Zaug says. "I thought I was screwing up."

Then it occurred again. And again. And again. And it happened in Paula Grabowski's test tubes, too. The RNA in Tetrahymena appeared to be splicing itself.

"I don't know that accident is the right word," Cech says. "Certainly it was a totally unexpected finding. We were thinking we were going to find some proteins involved and, instead, we found that all you needed was RNA. We were very skeptical."

For a year, Cech says, he searched the literature and ran test after test to try and find the flaw in their procedure. The concept of self-splicing RNA was so radical, so revolutionary, that he and his team didn't trust their own results. They had found an answer which contradicted the textbooks and the long-standing axiom that, in biology, only proteins act as catalysts.

"There was a period of about a year when we kept pushing the view that there was a contaminating protein in the RNA preparation. The problem was that, for a long time, all we had was circumstantial evidence. You can do things like boil the RNA containing the hypothetical protein. Usually when you boil proteins they're inactivated. Well, we boiled it, and it worked.

"Then we told ourselves that it's well known that proteins are deactivated by detergent. So we said, let's add detergent. Well, it worked at least as well in detergent as it did without, and in some respects even better.

"So then we boiled it in detergent. And it still worked. But all of that was still circumstantial evidence. So what we finally did was use genetic engineering."

Cech and his team stole the genes from Tetrahymena and inserted them in the common bacterium E. coli, the workhorse of bioengineering. There they grew the Tetrahymena gene in a cell where RNA splicing did not normally take place.

Once the genes blossomed, the CU researchers extracted them from E. coli and added purified chemicals to initiate the transcription process. The RNA that formed was now completely removed from Tetrahymena and its proteins.

Then they held their breath.

"It still had the self-splicing activity," Cech says. "We were ready to announce to the world."

Science magazine said Cech's work "revolutionize ideas on biological catalysts and early evolution." Prominent scentists like Harry Noller, from the University of California at Santa Cruz, called it "one of the most exciting discoveries of the decade."

Zaug added to the excitement in 1985 when he discovered that the intron sequence snipped from RNA went on to organize short strings of nucleic acid into longer chains of RNA. It was another momentous discovery. The possibility that RNA could reproduce itself no longer could be ignored.

"The reproduction of information is the most essential component in having life start," Cech says. "And this is something we have only come to grips with recently in Art's discovery. The RNA could replicate itself. It could reproduce.

"Instead of just being able to cut and rejoin, it can actually string little pieces together to make a big chain of RNA. And so it looks like RNA can not only be the information, but can actually catalyze the reproduction process. Like a software program that directs the machine to reproduce itself."

In Tetrahymena, Cech found a model of how life may have started. The first strand of RNA forms through what Nobel laureate Francis Crick (who, with James Watson, deciphered the genetic code in 1953) calls "a happy accident"; it splices itself and goes on to teach proteins how to build a cell; the newly freed intron goes on to create more RNA, and only later does DNA evolve as a storehouse for genetic information.

"I think it is extremely reasonable that life didn't happen in just one little pocket," Cech says. "There's a famous experiment where scientists took some of the chemicals presumed to be on earth 4 billion years ago and put them in a vat and had an electrical discharge go off. And it turns out that the molecules that are formed during that process are exactly the most common ones that you find in human beings today.

"And so that says to me that the basic precursors, the little molecules that make proteins and nucleic acids, are not improbable. Then the question is: Once you have these very small biological molecules, how did they get strung together to get nucleic acids and proteins?

"And I think that from our work I can see very clearly, only in the last year actually, how RNA might be able to direct the stringing together to make a large RNA molecule and to possibly even replicate itself."

The discoveries in Cech's lab could someday pay off in the battle against cancer and in the treatment of certain diseases in which the body's defenses turn the body against itself. Cech's work could result in a new set of chemical tools for genetic engineers who work with RNA as well.

"It turns out there are many tools for genetic engineering that are enzymes that work on DNA—specifically cut and rejoin DNA so you can manipulate genes.

"There are many fewer such enzymes around that can be used to manipulate RNA in the test tube. So there's a great interest in having an equal set of tools for genetic engineers to use at the RNA level," Cech says.

Thomas Cech's life is moving faster now—with invitations to lecture in Canada, Europe, and Japan, and at Harvard, Yale, MIT, and Stanford. But he has come to grips with the awards and the acclaim. His team helps maintain his perspective. Everywhere in the lab are signs of irrelevant affection directed at the boss.

Did Cech win a Guggenhiem fellowship? Here's a photo of his head pasted on the body of a lady weightlifter.

Did Esquire honor him along with Jessica Lange, Garry Trudeau, and Bruce Springsteen, as a member of "America's New Leadership Class: Men and Women Under Forty Who Are Changing the Nation?" Here's a sloppy shelf filled with old scientific journals and a sign: "The T.R. Cech Esquire Library."

Does Orgel hail Cech's work as "A major discovery?" Here's a tattered "Bloom County" cartoon, in which a wired and scruffy professor informs his class: "Original ideas? There are no truly original ideas in science."

What Thomas Cech hasn't come to grips with are the repeated efforts of others to interpret his work as a neat solution to the origin of life. He is a scientist, after all, and modern science frowns on those who stray from the strict protocol and objective proof of the laboratory.

Science should be precise, Cech says, so each published finding can serve as a verifiable block in a tower of knowledge. He's uncomfortable with those who interpret the significance of his work in cosmic terms: "It seems to be a sort of pseudo-science. I like to be able to go into a lab and do an experiment to test an idea, and, if you're talking about things that happened 4 billion years ago, it's impossible to test."

But the 38-year-old professor—so much more at home in the realm of snurps and introns, codons and polypeptides—knows such talk is inevitable. The implications of his work are too significant to be ignored.

In many ways, Cech is an anarchist. His discoveries, like those of genetic engineers and high-energy physicists, undermine the religious beliefs that buttress Western society. His was once the territory of priests and mystics—the province of prophets, not Ph.D.s. Stirred by these questions, man constructed great religions, soaring cathedrals, fine art, tender fugues.

Cech works with more mundane tools. There is art in his lab, but little magic. Here the sacred is stripped from the secret of life. The discoveries made in laboratories, like his reinforce the theory that life began as a chemical fluke, not by Divine design.

"I have a very strong personal view of life and how people should live," Cech offers, "but I don't believe in a higher being—I don't believe in a personal God.

"A modern scientist, if he is perceptive enough, often has the strange feeling that he must be living in another culture," says Francis Crick of the scientist's role in a period of history when bits of the old world, of the popular religions, are collapsing.

Cech faces the scientist's dilemma squarely. Trained to research, not popularize, he nonetheless takes on the responsibility of explaining his work and integrating its meaning into a cosmology mankind can carry into the next century.

He finds he must walk the line between sensationalizing his findings and ignoring the public altogether. He declines to appear at speculative "origin of life conferences," but, as a man who sees the similarity in a well-planned experiment and the work of his favorite authors, John Irving and Herman Hesse, he dedicates part of his time to lecture and write about his findings.

"I don't find the origin of life to be something that I particularly enjoy thinking about," he says "It's something we've been forced to think about because everybody else thinks our work is so related to evolution. And we better put it in context before they do.

"We aren't attempting to say that we understand what happened in early evolution. We are not saying, 'This is the way it happened.'

"We are saying that it is plausible that things could have started out with just RNA. But it's very hard to prove.

"You can draw out a scheme for the origin of life on paper, and you can do experiments in the lab to say that different steps can be reproduced today. But that doesn't prove that's the way it happened. That just proves that it's chemically reasonable to happen.

"In the end, belief in any particular scenario for the origin of life still requires an element of faith."

HYMAN BOOKBINDER

HON. SIDNEY R. YATES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the able Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee, Mr. Hyman Bookbinder was honored at the third annual leadership luncheon of the Washington Jewish Week. Those of us who were there that afternoon heard an inspiring and timely speech and I ask that Mr. Bookbinder's remarks be printed at this point in the RECORD.

HYMAN BOOKBINDER HONORED

I learned the value of brevity a few years ago when Who's Who invited me to add to my biographical summary a statement on "Thoughts on My Life . . . those principles, goals, ideals and values that have been guidelines for success and high standards." And then they directed that such statement be included in "the space provided below"—a space one by six inches! This is what I submitted and appears in the present edition: "Born into a world that soon exposed me to depression, war, and the holocaust, I fast acquired an almost compulsive interest in public affairs. It has been my good fortune to be able to combine career development with opportunities to help shape public policy. Government's principal purpose must indeed be to implement the great promise of America—the securing of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The Hebrew sage, Rabbi Hillel, has provided the guideline for my life's work: 'If I am not for myself, who will be for me? But if I am only for myself, what am I?' "

That was it. What else was there to say? If I were smart, I would now say: "That's it. Thank you very much." But I'm not that smart. So I'll say more—but not too much more.

Yes, I have indeed been fortunate—all my life—in being able to do professionally things in which I believe passionately. And for the past 19 years, my association with the American Jewish Committee has been particularly gratifying. If I did not at first fully appreciate why it would be so gratifying, my recent years with the Holocaust Memorial Council has made it quite clear. Let me explain.

Recent years have seen an explosion of articles and books about the failure of American Jews to do enough to save some of the six million victims of Hitler's genocide. I sometimes think this exercise is excessively accusatory and guilt-ridden. But perhaps not. Let the examination continue. But for me the primary lesson of that period has always been clear. It is that, with all the good intentions and all the anguish felt and expressed by American Jews in the Thirties and the Forties, the Jewish community had not yet developed the political know-how, the political clout, the political effectiveness that we have today. It boggles the mind—and it pains the heart—to ask this simple question: If in the late Thirties and early Forties we had developed the lobbying effectiveness and the coalitional supports that we have today—the ability to muster 70 or 80 Senators, 300 or 400 Congressmen, sometimes in a single day or week, to express their collective anguish and their collective demands when Israel is threatened or when Soviet Jewry needs special support—if we had had that kind of community capability, for example, to press Roosevelt and his White House associates to spare a single plane to bomb the railroad tracks to Auschwitz—or to open our doors to more refugees—yes, it is painful to ask, how many of those six million might have been spared?

That number—six million—keeps repeating itself in my mind over and over again. Not only because among those six million were the 80 of my own blood relatives in Poland—but because that also is the combined number today of Israeli Jews and Soviet Jews who demand our vigilant attention every day of our lives—And six million is also the number of Jews in our own beloved America—six million fortunate enough to live in this free land, but also fortunate to be in a position to take action on behalf of the other six million.

So I feel good about being a part of the Jewish effort to make our people secure in a world still so hostile to us. But I feel fortunate also about being able to do it here in the nation's capital I came to this "shtetl" for one year—and am now in my 37th! What years these have been! Not that every memory of these years is a happy one. Surely not the day of the Kennedy funeral. Nor the day that terrorists invaded the B'nai B'rith headquarters.

But today I choose to remember some glorious days in Washington and to express profound thanks for having responsibilities that made it possible to witness and even to be a part of some of them. How can I ever forget the good fortune I had to obtain a precious pass to the Senate gallery that night in 1954 when Joe McCarthy was finally repudiated and censured by the Senate? Or that afternoon in 1963, stretched out tired on the grass at the Lincoln Memorial, and jumping to my feet when it was clear that Martin Luther King had started what was bound to be a historic speech about a dream, in his words, for "all of God's children."

Or that morning in 1971, when the Prime Minister of Israel, looking like everybody's grandmother right off the ship, stood next to the President of the United States on the South Lawn of the White House—surrounded by hundreds of American and Israel flags—and then, without warning or announcement, I heard the most magnificent rendition of Hatikvah being played, played by the U.S. Marine band. Yes, Marine band. There I was, a man in his Fifties, trying unsuccessfully to hold back tears.

And seven years later there was another White House meeting, this time on the North lawn. Again, an American President and an Israeli Prime Minister. But this time joined by an Egyptian President—signing the historic Camp David peace treaty.

And how can I not mention one more memorable White House gathering, this time in the East Room. At a Yom Hashoa ceremony, with the President and Cabinet members and Senators and Congressmen present—to hear a Cantor from Atlanta singing the Yiddish words of H. Leivik. Yiddish in the White House!

To remember such events is to feel reassured that there is no conflict between our great love for this blessed land of ours and our deep feelings for Israel and for our Jewishness—that not only are such feelings compatible, they are mutually reinforcing.

But, finally, there is one moment I consider perhaps the finest of all—and there is nothing explicitly Jewish about it. Nothing Jewish? In some ways, it's the most Jewish of all. It was way back in 1949, the year before I came to work and live here. I was an economist with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. We were supporting an increase in the federal minimum wage to 75 cents an hour. Yes, 75 cents. We decided that in addition to so-called expert witnesses, we should bring to the Senate hearing what is known as a "victim" witness, someone for whom the 75 cents would have direct meaning. We located a woman aged about 30, a shirtmaker from Tennessee. She was to sit next to me, say a few words, and answer questions about her standard of living at the 40 or 50 cents an hour she was then earning. She was nervous, wasn't sure what she'd be able to say. I tried to calm her, kidded her about holding her hand under the witness table. And then she did her job. I have goosepimples whenever I recall one particular piece of her testimony. I have gone to the transcript so I can read to you the exact words:

(Ora Green): "My youngest girl, she's 9 now, goes straight to the piano when we go to a house where they have one. She does want to learn to play the piano so bad. I've thought that maybe I could save 50 cents or a dollar a week to buy a second-hand piano for her, no matter how old or battered it was. But try as hard as I can, and save and squeeze, I haven't found a way to do it yet."

By this time, the Senators had stopped shuffling papers before them. They had leaned forward and were looking directly at this woman from Tennessee. She went on: "Maybe I've been foolish to talk to you people about music for one of my children when the main question is getting enough to eat and wear, or blankets to put on the bed, or even a chair to sit on. But down in Tennessee we love music, and factory workers don't live by bread alone any more than any one else does."

I cherish that memory because it tells us so much . . . It tells us that in every human being there is indeed a spark of the divine; that even hard-nosed cynical Senators can be affected by a cry of anguish; and that with all its limitations, our American democracy makes it possible for such precious moments to occur. And, of course, it tells us how important it is never to stop caring about shirt workers in Tennessee or grape pickers in California or the 40 percent of Black youngsters unable to find jobs.

This luncheon today is sponsored by a Jewish newspaper. My work as a Jewish advocate is being recognized. I speak to you today as a proud Jew. What makes me particularly proud is that over the years we have defined our Jewishness, our Judaism, as a commitment to justice for all people, to peace for all people, to freedom for all people. Such a commitment to universal justice, I will always believe, does not shortchange our Jewish interest; it is, in fact, the only way to protect such interests.

I started by quoting Hillel's famous admonition. Everybody quotes it these days. It's become almost a bumper-sticker or T-shirt logo. But is it really understood? I said it was the guideline for my life's work. Yet I know how much I have failed fully to live up to my own standard.

But if it should indeed be true that in my lifetime I have helped even one Jew—or one Haitian or one Pole—escape persecution; if indeed I have helped even one ghetto youngster escape from poverty; if indeed I have helped one daughter of a Tennessee shirtmaker get to play on her own piano—if these things are true, then all that is left for me to say is that I thank God that I was given the opportunities to make some personal contribution, small as it might be, to making life a little bit easier, a little bit sweeter, a little bit more secure, for some fellow human beings.

And I thank each of you for coming here today to share with me that sense of appreciation.

KEN READ—YACHTSMAN OF THE YEAR

HON. JOHN H. CHAFEE

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I rise today to honor a young man, who is one of the world's premier sailors. Ken Read of Newport, RI, was recently honored by Rolex Watch and the New York Yacht Club as the "Yachtsman of the Year." It should be noted that previous winners of this award included Ted Turner, Dennis Conner, and the skipper of America II, John Kolius.

Ken received this honor in part for winning the 1985 J/24 World Championship in Japan and the J/24 North American Championship for the second year in a row, and also because he has won dozens of regional and national events over the past few years. The J/24 is the most competitive class of sailing and at age 24, Ken is the best.

Ken has been sailing on Narragansett Bay since the age of six, and while in high school at Providence Country Day, he was a leading junior sailor. Ater being one of the most highly recruited high school sailors, he chose Boston University, where he was named All-American three times.

I join with all Rhode Islanders in congratulating Ken for this exciting honor and extending best wishes for success in his future endeavors.●

LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, very shortly I will be introducing a measure to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 to extend the existing jurisdiction of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Packers and Stockyards Administration over the poultry and egg industries. The measure will be nearly identical to H.R. 2970, introduced by me earlier, except for some technical changes and the inclusion of egg producers under the provisions of the P&SA Act.

The following discussion provides background on the issue and my proposal.

Mergers, acquisitions and bankruptcies in the poultry—broiler—industry have created a decline in the number of firms that now produce more products with a higher per capita consumption than pork. Currently, the industry consists of approximately 200 slaughtering firms that operate 345 federally inspected plants. In addition, there are an estimated 50 nonslaughtering dealer operations that buy and sell live poultry and/or have contract growout operations. In the last 3 years, there have been 6 operations that have gone bankrupt, owing 1,983 growers approximately $14.3 million.

Currently, poultry growers are not afforded payment and trust protection that is comparable to that provided to livestock producers under the Packers and Stockyards Act [PSA] and fruit and vegetable growers under the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act [PACA]. Poultry growers want and need the same protections that are afforded to producers in other agricultural markets. Concern has been expressed over the extent to which poultry integrators dictate payment terms, and the extent to which they are able to force growers to carry them financially by failing to pay in a timely manner. The current status of poultry growers in the event of a failure of the integrator is the same as that of unsecured creditors. My proposal will provide for the same prompt payment and trust protection to poultry growers and sellers that has been provided to livestock producers since 1976.

Under the present law, the Packers and Stockyards Administration lacks the authority to correct the serious problems in the poultry industry to the detriment of the poultry growers. PSA's jurisdiction under the act over poultry integrators as "live poultry dealers or handlers" is continuously being challenged in both government and private actions to the point where enforcement of the existing provisions has become frustration, expensive, and virtually ineffective. My bill would clarify the jurisdictional question by redefining the poultry industry as it is presently structured.

In the area of poultry, unlike red meat, administrative procedures are denied to PSA under the act. Enforcement actions against poultry firms must be sought through the Department of Justice and the U.S. courts, a very time consuming and costly venture for both parties. Moreover, in the area of unfair business practices, the regulatory nature of the actions that are sought could better be served through administrative channels than through the already overloaded U.S. district courts. The proposed legislation would provide administrative remedies over poultry firms, thus ensuring the same treatment for both red meat and poultry firms.

The poultry industry consistently questions the jurisdiction and investigative activities of the Packers and Stockyards Administration in poultry product marketing. The proposed legislation would resolve the issue of jurisdiction over the marketing of dressed poultry products and would ensure the same treatment for both red meat and poultry with regard to product marketing.

Statistics show a continuing trend toward the merging of the red meat and poultry industries. A large number of poultry firms and livestock slaughter-processors handle and/or market both products. Of the 50 largest slaughter-processors of red meat, 44 also hold grants of poultry inspection. Of the 50 largest poultry firms, 30 also process or distribute red meat. Exempting from regulation poultry transactions of combination poultry and red meat firms with respect to any function—slaughtering, processing, brokering, or wholesale distribution—would create an unfair and impractical enforcement situation for both the industry and the Packers and Stockyards Administration.

In recent years, poultry has become a growth leader in the meat industry in terms of per capita consumption. Per capita consumption of poultry, which already surpasses pork, is forecast to surpass beef in the late 1980's. In view of the fact the red meat and poultry firms continue to actively compete for a share of the consumer purchases, it is also impractical and inequitable that competing firms be subject to different regulatory rules.

The case against Marshall Durbin & Co., Inc., is illustrative of some of the problems that are experienced in seeking enforcement through the U.S. district courts. A complaint was filed through the Department of Justice in July 1984, alleging that the defendants' weighing procedures for live poultry constituted an unfair, unjustly discriminatory, and deceptive practice under the Packers and Stockyards Act. The case was not tried until May 1985. A final judgment was issued on October 1985; subsequently, the Government filed a motion seeking more specific relief against the defendants. An amended judgment was issued in January 1986. This judgment did not, however, provide the relief that was sought but rather ordered a 6-month period of operation under the October 1985, judgment, during which the Government can further evaluate the firms' weighing practices with regard to the allegation of discrimination. After a period of 20 months since the filing of the complaint, no final resolution has been reached in this matter in the U.S. district courts.

As stated, the bill that I will be introducing after gathering original cosponsors will amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 to provide the producers of broilers and table eggs with the same financial protection under the Packers & Stockyards Act as is provided the red meat industry. In addition to providing prompt payment and statutory—packer—trust for the poultry producer, the bill will also amend the act by extending the bonding, custodial account, solvency, temporary restraining order, and preparations and private action provisions to the poultry industry.

The enactment of this legislation should not increase the cost of poultry products to the consumer nor result in any increases in budget outlays for the Packers and Stockyards Administration. In fact, providing the PSA with administrative procedure authority in the poultry industry could save hundreds of thousands of dollars because they would not have to bring enforcement actions against poultry firms through the Department of Justice and the U.S. courts.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring my proposal. The text of the proposal follows.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2(a) of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 182), is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5), by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (11), and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraphs:

"(6) the term 'poultry' means chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese, and other domestic fowl;

"(7) the term 'poultry product' means any product or by-product of the business of slaughtering poultry and processing poultry after slaughter;

"(8) the term 'poultry grower' means any person engaged in the business of raising and caring for live poultry for slaughter by another, whether the poultry is owned by such person or by another, but not an employee of the owner of such poultry;

"(9) the term 'poultry growing arrangement' means any growout contract, buy and sell agreement, marketing agreement, or other arrangement under which a poultry grower raises and cares for live poultry for delivery, in accord with another's instructions, for slaughter;

"(10) the term 'live poultry dealer' means any person, other than a packer or a poultry grower, engaged in the business of obtaining live poultry by purchase or poultry growing arrangement and selling it for slaughter by another, if poultry is obtained by such person in commerce, or if poultry obtained by such person is sold or shipped in commerce, or if poultry products from poultry obtained by such person are sold or shipped in commerce; and".

SEC. 2. Section 201 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 191), is amended—

(1) by inserting in subsection (a) "or obtaining, by purchase or poultry growing arrangement, live poultry for slaughter, if poultry is obtained by such person in commerce, or poultry products from poultry obtained by such person are sold or shipped in commerce," after "slaughter,";

(2) by inserting in subsection (b) "or poultry products" after "meat food products"; and

(3) by inserting in subsection (c) ", or poultry products," after "unmanufactured form".

SEC. 3. Section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 192), is amended in subsection (c) thereof by striking out "any such packers" and inserting in lieu thereof "any such persons".

SEC. 4. Sections 202, 203, 204, 205, 401, and 403 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended (7 U.S.C. 192, 193, 194, 195, 221, and 223), are amended by inserting "or live poultry dealer" after "packer" wherever it appears therein.

SEC. 5. The Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, is amended by inserting after section 206 the following new section:

"SEC. 207. (a) It is hereby found that a burden on and obstruction to commerce in poultry is caused by financing arrangements under which packers, live poultry dealers, or both, encumber, give lenders security interest in, or place liens on, poultry obtained by such persons by purchase in cash sales or by poultry growing arrangements, or on inventories of or receivables or proceeds from such poultry or poultry products therefrom, when payment is not made for the poultry and that such arrangements are contrary to the public interest. This section is intended to remedy such burden on and obstruction to commerce in poultry and protect the public interest.

"(b) All poultry obtained by a live poultry dealer or packer, by purchase in cash sales or by poultry growing arrangement, and all inventories of, or receivables or proceeds from such poultry or poultry products derived therefrom, shall be held by such live poultry dealer or packer in trust for the benefit of all unpaid cash sellers or poultry growers of such poultry, until full payment has been received by such unpaid sellers or growers, unless such live poultry dealer does not have average annual sales of live poultry, or such packer does not have average annual value of live poultry obtained by purchase or by poultry growing arrangement, in excess of $100,000.

"(c) Payment shall not be considered to have been made if the seller or poultry grower receives a payment instrument which is dishonored.

"(d) The unpaid seller or poultry grower shall lose the benefit of such trust if, in the event that a payment instrument has not been received, within thirty days of the final date for making a payment under section 410, or within fifteen business days after the seller or poultry grower has received notice that the payment instrument promptly presented for payment has been dishonored, the seller or poultry grower has not preserved his trust under this section. The trust shall be preserved by giving written notice to the packer or live poultry dealer and by filing such notice with the Secretary.

"(e) For the purpose of this section, a cash sale means a sale in which the seller does not expressly extend credit to the buyer.".

SEC. 6. Section 308 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 209), is amended by inserting "or poultry, or in connection with any poultry growing arrangement," after "livestock".

SEC. 7. Section 408 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 228a), is amended by inserting "or poultry or poultry products, or has failed to pay any poultry grower what is due on account of poultry obtained under a poultry growing arrangement," after "unmanufactured form,".

SEC. 8. The Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, is amended by redesignating sections 410 and 411 as sections 411 and 412, respectively, and by inserting after section 409 the following new section:

"SEC. 410. (a) Each live poultry dealer or packer obtaining live poultry by purchase in a cash sale shall, before the close of the next business day following the purchase of poultry, and each live poultry dealer or packer obtaining live poultry by poultry growing arrangement shall, before the close of the seventh business day following the week in which the poultry is slaughtered, deliver, to the cash seller or poultry grower from whom such live poultry dealer or packer obtains the poultry, the full amount due to such cash seller or poultry grower on account of such poultry.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, the parties to the purchase and sale of poultry other than under a poultry growing arrangement may expressly agree in writing, before such purchase or sale, to effect payment in a manner other than that required in subsection (a). Any such agreement shall be disclosed in the records of, and on the accounts or other documents issued by, any live poultry dealer or packer which is a party to any such transaction, relating to the transaction.

"(c) Any delay or attempt to delay, by a live poultry dealer or packer which is a party to any such transaction, the collection of funds as herein provided, or otherwise for the purpose of or resulting in extending the normal period of payment for poultry obtained by poultry growing arrangement or purchased, shall be considered an 'unfair practice' in violation of this Act. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit the meaning of the term 'unfair practice' as used in this Act.".

SEC. 9. The last sentence of the paragraph beginning "Packers and Stockyards Act:" under the centerheading entitled "Marketing Service" within the first section of the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1944 (7 U.S.C. 204), is amended—

(1) by inserting ", poultry, or eggs" after "livestock" both places it appears therein; and

(2) by inserting "or egg purchaser" after "packer" both places it appears therein.

SEC. 10. Title V of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 218, 218a, 218b, 218c, and 218d), is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE V—EGGS

"SEC. 501. When used in this Act—

"(1) The term 'eggs' means eggs produced by poultry, whether for human consumption or other purposes;

"(2) The term 'egg producer or supplier' means any person engaged in the business of caring for live poultry (whether or not owned by such person) for production of eggs for delivery to another by sale or egg production arrangement, or engaged in the business of non-retail sale of eggs, but not an employee;

"(3) The term 'egg production arrangement' means any arrangement, whether or not reflected in a written memorandum of agreement, in which an egg producer or supplier cares for live poultry for production of eggs for delivery to another otherwise than by sale; and

"(4) The term 'egg purchaser' means any person engaged in the business of obtaining eggs, from any others not employees of such person regardless of who owns the poultry producing such eggs, by purchase or egg production arrangement, for sale of eggs or products derived from eggs, for manufacture of products derived from eggs, or for hatching, if eggs are obtained by such person in commerce, or if eggs obtained by such person or products derived from such eggs are sold or shipped in commerce.

"SEC. 502. Sections 202, 203, 204, 205, 401, and 403 of this Act (7 U.S.C. 192, 193, 194, 195, 221, and 223) shall be applicable, with respect to eggs and products derived from eggs, to egg purchasers, officers, directors, employees and agents thereof, and transactions of, between, or among, such persons.

"SEC. 503. (a) It is hereby found that a burden on and obstruction to commerce in eggs is caused by financing arrangements under which egg purchasers encumber, give lenders security interest in, or place liens on, eggs obtained by such persons by purchase in cash sales or by egg production arrangement, or on inventories of or receivables or proceeds from such eggs or products therefrom, when payment is not made for the eggs and that such arrangements are contrary to the public interest. This section is intended to remedy such burden on and obstruction to commerce in eggs and protect the public interest.

"(b) All eggs obtained by an egg purchaser, by purchase in a cash sale or by egg production arrangement, and all inventories of, or receivables or proceeds from such eggs or products derived therefrom, shall be held by such egg purchaser in trust for the benefit of all unpaid egg producers or suppliers of such eggs until full payment has been received by such unpaid producers or suppliers, unless such egg purchaser does not have average annual value of eggs obtained in excess of $100,000.

"(c) Payment shall not be considered to have been made if the egg producer or supplier receives a payment instrument which is dishonored.

"(d) The unpaid egg producer or supplier shall lose the benefit of such trust if, in the event that a payment instrument has not been received, within thirty days of the final date for making a payment under section 507, or within fifteen business days after the producer or supplier has received notice that the payment instrument promptly presented for payment has been dishonored, the producer or supplier has not preserved his trust under this section. The trust shall be preserved by giving written notice to the egg purchaser and by filing such notice with the Secretary.

"(e) For the purpose of this section, a cash sale means a sale in which the seller does not expressly extend credit to the buyer.

"SEC. 504. Section 308 of this Act (7 U.S.C. 209) shall be applicable to egg purchasers with respect to transactions in eggs with egg producers or suppliers.

"SEC. 505. Section 406 of this Act (7 U.S.C. 227) shall be applicable with respect to eggs.

"SEC. 506. Section 308 of this Act (7 U.S.C. 228a) shall be applicable to egg purchasers and any transaction in which any egg producer or supplier.

"SEC. 507. (a) Each egg purchaser obtaining eggs from any egg producer or supplier shall, before the close of the seventh business day following transfer of possession of the eggs, deliver, to the egg producer or supplier from whom such egg purchaser obtains the eggs, the full amount due to such egg producer or supplier on account of such eggs.

"(b) Nothwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, the parties to a purchase and sale of eggs other than under an egg production arrangement may expressly agree in writing, before such purchase or sale, to effect payment in a manner other than that required in subsection (a). Any such agreement shall be disclosed in the records of, and on the accounts or other documents issued, by, any egg purchaser which is a party to any such transaction, relating to the transaction.

"(c) Any delay or attempt to delay, by an egg purchaser which is a party to any such transaction, the collection of funds as herein provided, or otherwise for the purpose of or resulting in extending the normal period of payment for eggs obtained by purchase or egg production arrangement, shall be considered an 'unfair practice' in violation of this Act. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit the meaning of the term 'unfair practice' as used in this Act.".

THE SESQUICENTENNIAL OF VERMONTVILLE, MI

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I want to pay special tribute today to the village of Vermontville, MI, on the occasion of its sesquicentennial celebration. It is a special town—its people are warm, good-natured, industrious people, and Vermontville itself has a charm all its own. I've had the privilege of representing Vermontville in Congress for several years now. I have many friends there, and it's always a pleasure going back.

Indeed, a visit to Vermontville is a sweet experience in more ways than one. This is because Vermontville is known widely for its maple syrup. The first settlers in the town learned about maple syrup production from the Pottawatomie Indians. Fortunately for the rest of us, Vermontville residents have been making maple syrup since. Anyone who has tasted pancakes with Vermontville syrup knows one of the exalted experiences in life that defy description. The citizens of Vermontville celebrate their town's best-known product every April, and rightly so. I would advise all the gourmets among my colleagues to settle for nothing less than Vermontville syrup on their waffles. No imitation can compare.

Vermontville has an interesting and, in an important respect, a distinctive history. The town got its name because its original residents were a band of sturdy settlers from Vermont. On March 27, 1836, while still in New England, they adopted a constitution of the Union Colony and immigrated to Michigan later that year. This constitution was unique: No other town or territory in our history has ever been organized in quite the same way.

The move West was not an easy project. It began in 1835, when a congregational minister from east Poltney, VT, named Sylvester Cochrane traveled to Michigan looking for a site for a permanent community. In April 1836, a month after the constitution was adopted, Waite J. Squier, S.S. Church, and William G. Henry left Vermont with the Union Colony's funds to purchase land for the settlement. Their compatriots followed. Soon after the settlers' arrival, the Congregational Church was organized with Cochrane as pastor.

These early settlers attached great importance to the education of their children, which has become a traditional value of Vermontville. The town's first school, in a modest log schoolhouse, opened its doors in 1838. Another landmark of Vermontville's early days, nearly as significant, was the establishment of the first post office, with Dewey H. Robinson as postmaster.

Vermontville has been going strong for 150 years. There is much in the town's history to be proud of. But this is also a time to celebrate its present and future—the residents who work hard, raise their families, help their neighbors, and contribute to their community. I wish the townspeople, and their children and grandchildren, another 150 years of happiness and prosperity.

THE USTTA REMAINS A VITAL FORCE AGAINST TERRORISM

HON. WILLIAM HILL BONER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Congressional Travel and Tourism Caucus, I have consistently urged that the United States Travel and Tourism Administration [USTTA] be adequately funded as our Nation's official tourism office overseas. USTTA promotes our country as a tourist destination to international visitors through exciting and innovative programs and by maintaining nine regional offices abroad.

Recently in response to terrorist attacks against Americans overseas, USTTA has taken on a new and added responsibility. The Under Secretary of Commerce for Travel and Tourism, Donna Tuttle, and her staff have quickly responded to an urgent need for the public to be informed about measures instituted by our Government to improve traveler security. USTTA received numerous requests for information about safety conditions abroad from the general public, travel agents and others in the travel industry.

Under Secretary Tuttle called for the establishment of an information clearinghouse to consolidate the various statistics and other material available from the Government, the press and the private sector. This information in turn could be used in discussions between the United States and foreign governments, and as a guide to reacting to further terrorist incidents.

Eric Friedheim, editor and publisher of the Travel Agent magazine, recently wrote an editorial which clearly spells out the crucial role USTTA may play as a liaison between the Government and the American traveler who is trying to determine the risks involved in foreign travel. I believe Mr. Friedheim's article is very timely considering that the administration has recommended eliminating USTTA at a time when it is being called on to perform yet another valuable function.

THE USTTA REMAINS A VITAL FORCE AGAINST TERROR

The latest terrorist incident proves once again why the survival of the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration is so vital. With the travel industry predictably in shock over the tragedy high above Greece, a responsible and authoritative government voice is sorely needed. Only USTTA is in a position to respond realistically and intelligently to the concerns of the media, the industry and the international traveler.

Tourism Undersecretary Donna Tuttle and her staff have created an effective liaison between the public and private sectors. In fact, it is the only place individuals and organizations can turn to for reliable answers about the terrorism situation and other critical issues.

LOTS OF WATCHDOGS

A number of government bureaus deal with domestic and foreign travel; the Transportation Dept. oversees airlines; two maritime units monitor passenger shipping; passports are issued by the State Dept., and its missions abroad offer assistance to American tourists; Interior controls the national parks; Treasury and Immigration are deeply involved in tourism, keeping an eye on the millions who enter and leave this country each year.

Yet in times of crisis, such as this week's TWA bombing, only the State Dept. can issue travel advisories and offer reasonably valid appraisals and comments. Unfortunately these often are based on policy. The department's officials, while generally knowledgeable about a particular occurrence, often are too remote from the industry and news reporters. Even the White House too often is not the best place to seek information.

On the other hand, USTTA—while not always privy to intelligence available at higher policy levels—has dependable ways to find out what the industry and tourists need to know about a situation critical to tourism.

Nevertheless, the Reagan Administration is out to abolish the nation's official travel bureau and wants Congress to spend $4 million to dismantle it.

If USTTA goes, the industry will be hardpressed to get its story across to a sympathetic ear in the nation's capital.

LOOK AT THE RECORD

On terrorism, for example, Tuttle has done much to establish the Travelers' Security Policy Council, an information clearinghouse.

In addition, foreign governments continually seek USTTA advice on how to improve and develop their tourism industries. Tuttle's policy has been to provide as much assistance as possible since the American travel business has substantial investments abroad and tourism is a two-way street.

On terrorism, she recently told the House Commerce subcommittee:

"I believe that foreign leaders must stand with the United States in its decision to impose economic sanctions against countries which harbor and abet terrorists.

"At the very least, they must reexamine their visa policies and tighten up on entry procedures . . .

"Another step governments should take is to ensure that their agencies charged with traveler safety make available information on travel conditions and security measures being taken.

"Consumers who are uninformed about conditions cannot be expected to make rational decisions about their travel plans. It is not the known that frightens people. It is the unknown."

Meanwhile, USTTA is further demonstrating the benefits of making tourism flow in both directions. The agency is becoming involved in the Caribbean to encourage local governments in building up their tourist trade. Ironically, this program is part of the president's own Caribbean Basin Initiative.

IN THE CARIBBEAN

Though the primary mission of USTTA is to develop inbound tourism. Tuttle notes that if the Caribbean countries improve their financial condition by exporting tourism to U.S. citizens, the American economy will accrue substantial benefits, boosted particularly in Florida and other Gulf states.

It is conceivable Congress will again realize the necessity of USTTA and refuse the president's plea to kill it. But the industry should take no chances. It is a matter of urgency that it resist this shortsighted proposal and mobilize quickly to save an agency so vital to its economic well being.

CALIFORNIA STATE UNIVERSITY AT DOMINGUEZ HILLS: TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE TO CALIFORNIA

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, the foundation stones of any great institution are leadership, stability, and vision. California State University at Dominguez Hills has been built on just such foundation stones. Today, in its 25th year of existence, it is among the sturdiest and most productive institutions in the California State College and University System. During the whole of this year the university and its many, many supporters are celebrating those first 25 years and looking forward with relish to the challenges of the next 25.

The astounding growth of the university owes in large part to the three exceptional presidents who have led the university through its first quarter century. Leo Cain, Donald Gerth, and Richard Butwell have each made solid and lasting contributions to the university's development.

Perhaps the most uncertain years for the university were its first ones. Gov. Pat Brown signed the legislation authorizing the new campus in 1960. Money was appropriated to purchase the site in 1962. And in 1962 Dr. Cain was appointed president of the college. With great skill, Leo Cain maneuvered the university through the politically treacherous process of site selection, oversaw the actual building of the university, and helped to pack up the university and move it from temporary site to temporary site until it found its permanent home on 346 acres of the Dominguez and Carson Estate. That day in June 1967 when William Hart, Pamela Striplin, Othilie Moritz, and Sharon Chambers made up the whole of the first graduating class was a proud day for Leo. His labors had borne their first fruit. Now, more than 18,000 productive citizens of California and the Nation owe their higher education to California State University at Dominguez Hills. Leo Cain's 13 years in the presidency at Dominguez Hills gave the institution the steady, reliable, and wise leadership that was essential to its healthy initial development. Dr. Cain's own professional training was in the field of school psychology. Dominguez Hills' Educational Resources Center is named the Leo F. Cain Educational Resources Center. It is a fitting tribute because Leo's University has become an important educational resource for the State and the Nation.

The steady progress of Dominguez Hills is evidenced by the fact that in 1977, just 2 years after Dr. Donald Gerth assumed the presidency, Dominguez Hills was awarded "State University" status. In California higher education circles, Donald Gerth is regarded as an educational genius. His vision, his sense of what the educational needs of the future will be, and, more importantly, his ability to implement precisely the changes that will meet the needs of the future, have earned him the highest respect among his colleagues. One indication of that vision is the effort Donald made to establish a working relationship between industry and the university. The partnerships he helped establish have benefited Dominguez Hills in readily visible ways. Dominguez Hills, for example, was the recipient of a $3,000,000 gift from the Southland Corp. to build the 7-Eleven Olympic Velodrome on the campus for the 1984 Olympics. The Velodrome was the first of the new facilities built in preparation for the Olympics. A Federal grant won during the same period built the university's swimming pool. A special sensitivity Dr. Gerth brought to the university was a deep understanding of cultural and sociological factors affecting the education of Americans of Asian descent. He is both formally trained in Asian studies and has lived and worked extensively in Southeast Asia. Southern California is a primary settlement area for immigrants of Asian descent, and thanks to Dr. Gerth, Dominguez Hills has been especially well suited to the educational needs of students from the spectrum of Asian backgrounds.

It is fortunate for these students that Dr. Gerth's departure in 1984, after 9 years of exceptional service, to assume the presidency of California State University at Sacramento did not diminish the commitment of Dominguez Hills to its culturally diverse student body. Dr. Richard Butwell, who assumed the presidency in August 1984, is, like Dr. Gerth, a political scientist with special expertise in Asian and Pacific affairs. Given that future trade growth for the United States will concentrate on Pacific rim nations, and given that California is in the best of positions geographically to benefit from such trade, Dominguez Hills' choice of presidents is propitious. I wish Dr. Butwell a long and fruitful tenure as president of Dominguez Hills. His assumption of the presidency coincides with the appointment of W. Ann Reynolds to the chancellorship of the State College and University System. The dynamism these two leaders bring to the university and to the entire system is infectious and bodes well for all higher education in California. The past quarter century has seen California State University at Dominguez Hills grow from idea to healthy reality. Dr. Butwell will lead the university confidently toward the half century milestone. The university has had a glowing history of progress. But to paraphrase our former Governor, President Reagan, If you think the last 25 years were something, well then, stand back because you ain't seen nothin' yet!

NINTH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION ON NARCOTIC DRUGS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Ninth Special Session of the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs [CND] was held in Vienna, Austria, February 10–14, 1986. Prior commitments prevented me from attending this important session, but a copy of my remarks was distributed to those participating. The U.S. delegation was led by Jon R. Thomas, Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics Matters [INM], who has recently resigned his post after a year and half of outstanding service in the global fight against drug trafficking and drug abuse.

The other members of the U.S. delegation were: Jerold Mark Dion, Deputy Assistant Secretary of INM; Carlton E. Turner, Special Assistant to the President for Drug Abuse Policy; Advisors Bruce K. Chapman, U.S. Representative to International Organizations, Vienna; James R. Cooper, M.D. Associate Director, National Institute of Drug Abuse; James Ferrer, Deputy U.S. Representative to the U.N. Economic and Social Council; Dianne Graham, INM; Gene R. Haislip, Deputy Assistant Administrator Drug Enforcement Administrative; F. Gray Handley, Jr., Office of Health and Transportation Programs, Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State; Louis Kahn, U.S. Mission to International Organizations, Vienna; Stuart L. Nightingale, M.D. Associate Commissioner for Health Affairs, Food and Drug Administration; Charles Saphos, Criminal Division, Department of Justice; James Shaver, Assistant Commissioner, U.S. Customs Service; and Ray A. Meyer, Office of the Legal Adviser, Department of State.

This year the special session took on added significance. At the request of the U.N. General Assembly in 1985, the special session was charged with the task of acting as the first preparatory conference for the world conference on drug abuse and drug trafficking to be held in Vienna in 1987. This preparatory activity took place during the week of February 17–21.

Two major issues were discussed by the 40-member Commission during the first week: a new convention on drug trafficking and the scheduling of 17 substances into the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances. In regard to the new drug trafficking convention, the Commission adopted a resolution requesting the U.N. Secretary-General to prepare a preliminary draft of such a convention which would include such key elements as the seizure and forfeiture of assets, strengthening national laws and penalties for drug trafficking offenses, and controls on the delivery of precursor chemicals used in the manufacture of controlled substances. The draft proposal will be presented to the CNB at its 32d regular session next year. The resolution specifically requests member country comments on the contents of the preliminary draft by August 15, 1986. The draft will be circulated by October 30, 1986. It is important to note that the U.S. delegation took a key leadership role in organizing a working group to negotiate a final text for presentation to the full CND and seeing to it that all essential elements, even those not supported by all nations, were included in the draft.

The scheduling of 17 substances into the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances followed closely the recommendations made by the World Health Organization [WHO]. The U.S. delegation came prepared to support 10 of the 17 substances recommended by WHO, and to support alternative scheduling controls for the seven remaining substances. While none of the seven U.S. supported alternatives were adopted, it is important to note that CND recommendations in this area have little or no effect on current domestic scheduling requirements.

As previously noted the second week of the CND was devoted to a preparatory conference for the 1987 World Conference on Drug Abuse and Drug Trafficking. Draft rules of procedure were adopted, and following emphasis by the United States, the scope of the agenda will provide for a balanced discussion of all issues including both supply and demand reduction, drug trafficking, treatment, and rehabilitation. It was also agreed that all issues would be addressed from a technical point of view, with no room for politicization or the discussion of extraneous political issues.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks, which were distributed at the Ninth Special Session of the CND, follow:

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN, MEMBER OF THE U.S. CONGRESS, AT THE NINTH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION ON NARCOTIC DRUGS, VIENNA, AUSTRIA, FEBRUARY 10-14, 1986

Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to once again have the opportunity to present my views to the distinguished representatives of the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs and to share the views of those attending on the critical issues of drug production, trafficking, and abuse throughout the world today. As you know, I participated in the Commission's 31st Session last year, accompanied by the distinguished Chairman of our Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, Charles B. Rangel. As Ranking Minority Member of the Select Committee I look forward to these meetings, because they afford us the opportunity to assist in the formulation, development and implementation of strategies for the international control of illicit narcotic drugs.

No nation has managed to avoid the negative consequences of drug trafficking and drug dependency, which is jeopardizing the health of our citizens, and undermining our political, economic and social institutions. In the United States alone drug trafficking has grown to a $110 billion per year business activity, and the worldwide figure is incalculable. The criminal organizations which fuel these operations use their vast profits to produce and supply more and more drugs to unsuspecting and willing victims alike, and further, they use their profits to promote subversion, terrorism, and other criminal activities around the world.

The abuse of cannabis, cocaine, opiates, and other dependence-producing drugs continues at epidemic levels. This abuse has resulted in alarming reports of drug deaths and drug dependencies throughout the world. The number of heroin addicts in Western Europe has been conservatively estimated in the 350,000 range, and in the United States it exceeds 500,000. Opium production in Southeast and Southwest Asia continues at high levels and coca production in South America this year will result in an abudance of cocaine in the United States and Western Europe at greater potency and at reduced prices.

In addition, the ever-growing ruthlessness of the drug traffickers continues to intensify. In February of 1985, a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) agent was kidnapped and brutally murdered along with his Mexican pilot. In Bolivia, narcotics police have been tortured and killed and a recent siege of the Palace of Justice in Bogota, Colombia, by a terrorist organization seeking to destroy papers relating to extradition requests for known drug traffickers resulted in the deaths of over 100 people, including many Colombian Judges. In Peru, 19 eradication workers were murdered.

Despite all the news, there are increasing signs of hope, and I firmly believe that we meet at a time of great opportunity in the war against narcotics trafficking and abuse. Political stability, as well as any form of economic social order cannot co-exist with narcotics trafficking and rampant drug abuse. There is increasing evidence that traditional producer and trafficking nations are beginning to realize that their activities are coming back to haunt them. Under the leadership of a new and dynamic President, Peru has undertaken strong enforcement and eradication efforts. They have joined with neighboring governments and destroyed numerous cocaine production laboratories and airstrips. Colombia continues the strong enforcement efforts it initiated after the tragic 1984 murder of their Minister of Justice. Pakistan is currently working closely with a number of governments to reduce opium cultivation and herion processing, and the Government of Burma has outlined a comprehensive policy of opium eradication, the development of income alternatives for farmers, and provision for prevention and treatment programs for abusers.

These are but few of the positive signs I can point to. What is clear, however, is that if these actions are to be sustained, the close cooperation and financial support of the world community is essential. Since 1971, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) has sought to work closely with producing nations, to develop and finance eradication, and crop substitution programs through the contributions of U.N. participating nations. While they have done outstanding work with available funds, it is clear that financial support will have to be expanded and intensified. In spite of the vital role played by UNFDAC, only $70 million was contributed to the Fund from its inception in 1971 to the end of 1983. In 1984, only 39 of the 159 member nations of the United Nations contributed less than $12 million to the Fund. As of August 31, 1985, (the latest available figures for that year) only 41 nations or 25 percent of the United Nations membership contributed $15.6 million to the U.N. Fund. Given the billions of dollars reaped by the drug traffickers annually for their illicit activities, it is no wonder that our task has been viewed by some as nothing less than insurmountable. I call on all of the delegates to increase their commitment to UNFDAC, and to join in this urgent fight. The recent Interim Report of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control warns, in clear and forceful terms, that:

"An important moment of decision has been reached: if the international community does not persist in sustaining the present trend of increasing its financial and political support to UNFDAC, the unfulfilled expectations will become painful frustrations and perhaps even despair and resignation. The battle may be irrevocably lost. In contrast to this, with that strengthening of its financial resources to enable the launching of new projects at the points of most urgent need, UNFDAC could complement the work already in progress and reinforce the efforts of the developing countries, thus allowing them to join fully in the common front in the struggle against drug abuse, and drug traffic."

I urge of us to heed these words and to accept the challenge presented to us.

Finally, I would be remiss if I failed to mention the two recently adopted United Nations General Assembly Resolutions dealing with illicit narcotics. The first calls for the convening of a World Conference on Drug Trafficking in 1987. The Conference will be a key catalyst in raising international awareness and sensitivity regarding the problems of illicit drug trafficking and abuse, and I applaud the Secretary General for initiating this action. We wish the Commission every success as the preparatory body for the Conference. Second, the Commisison has been charged with deciding on the elements that will be included in the proposed draft convention against narcotics drugs and psychotropic substances recently passed by the General Assembly. Many nations have sustituted their views to the Secretary General on what they believe should be included, and I look forward to your recommendations in this most important process.

It is clear that these actions serve the critical purpose of raising the priority of narcotics control in our foreign policy initiatives, as well as increasing the awareness of the narcotics problem throughout the international community. No one nation acting alone can solve the problems that we face. Coordination and cooperation are the essential ingredients in the war against narcotics trafficking and abuse. There can be no weak links in this chain. The failure of any one nation to cooperate can mean failure for all of us. I urge you to join in this effort not only for the future of our laws and institutions, but for the future of our youth and the very fabric of all societies.

A BOOST OF THE MINIMUM WAGE IS OVERDUE

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, 9 years have elapsed since the Congress considered legislation to adjust the Federal minimum wage rate, and it has been 5 years since an estimated 6 million minimum wage workers received a wage increase. In addition to having borne the brunt of the big budget cuts of 1981 and the ravages of the ensuing recession, the working poor have been deprived by inflation of the full purchasing power of their meager wages. Since 1981, the last year of the minimum wage rate adjustments, there has been a 25-percent inflationary erosion of the real value of the minimum wage. It is time to address the economic plight of minimum wage workers in a meaningful manner. It is time to raise the minimum wage. With these concerns for the working poor in mind, I recommend to my colleagues the following policy statement of the National Council on Employment Policy. The council is a private, nonprofit organization of academicians, administrators, and policymakers with special interest and expertise in the area of employment and training.

The policy statement follows:

A BOOST OF THE MINIMUM WAGE IS OVERDUE

Since 1938, the federal government has maintained a floor under wages in order to guarantee a minimal socially acceptable standard of living for all protected workers. This floor has helped the working poor and has provided additional income to others with little bargaining power in the labor market. Despite these accomplishments, the need for an effective minimum has been ignored since 1981. The federal minimum has remained at $3.35 an hour; after adjusting for inflation, the value of the minimum hourly wage rate has declined by 26 percent since January 1981 and is now at its lowest real level since 1955. We believe the minimum wage should be restored to its traditional position and, in order to prevent future erosion, the minimum wage should be indexed to changes in the average private hourly wage rate.

BACKGROUND

Wages have been regulated throughout history either by custom or law. The need for strong governmental wage and hour regulation in the United States became clear at the turn of the 20th century as workers streamed from rural to urban areas to work in the expanding manufacturing sector, while immigrants flocked in from other lands in search of a better life. Men, women, and children often worked long hours for little pay.

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) set a national wage standard for the first time in American history; it established a minimum hourly wage rate of 25 cents to be raised in steps to 40 cents seven years later. Since then, Congress has increased the minimum wage level on six occasions sometimes providing for a series of increases. The latest round of minimum wage amendments occurred in 1977, raising the hourly rate by steps to $3.35 in 1981.

The 1938 act covered only one in every four workers. Ensuing amendments to the FLSA have expanded coverage and over 90 percent of private nonsupervisory employees are now subject to minimum wage laws. Over 10 million workers are excluded from the protection of the federal minimum wage law, excluding six million employees in service and retail; 1.2 million in finance, insurance and real estate; 938,000 in agriculture, and 525,000 in private households.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated that in 1984 the earnings of roughly 8 million salaried and hourly workers were at or below the minimum wage level. Six million more received wages just above this level.

Using 1978 Current Population Survey data, the Minimum Wage Study Commission found that 42.5 percent of workers from impoverished families were employed at or below the minimum wage. However, roughly three-quarters of all minimum wage workers live in families with income well above the poverty line.

TABLE 1

Family income	Percent of employed workers at or below minimum	As percent of all minimum wage workers
Total	13.2	100.0
Below poverty	42.5	10.9
100 to 124 percent of poverty line	32.9	6.9
125 to 149 percent of poverty line	29.3	7.4
150 percent plus of poverty line	11.0	75.3

Half of the minimum wage workers are 25 years or older. However, the young are disproportionately represented among minimum wage workers. Over three-fifths of minimum wage workers are women.

	Percent of minimum wage workers	Percent of all workers
Teenagers	30.2	6.8
20 to 24 years old	22.5	14.8
25 years and older	47.3	78.4
Women	62.6	45.7

Almost three-quarters of minimum wage workers are concentrated in the service and retail trade industries. Three of every four private household workers earn the minimum or less and one of every three service workers (other than private household) is employed at or below the minimum, as are nearly half of all farm laborers and one in five of all sales workers.

EROSION

By any measure, the minimum wage now provides less protection than it has in many years. The statutory hourly wage rate rose in real terms until 1968, then stabilized in the 1970s and has fallen sharply since 1979. The real wage is now 20 percent less than it averaged in the 1970's and is a third less than it was at its peak in 1968.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Congress set the minimum at roughly 50 percent of the average wage in private industry, while in the 1970s the targeted level dropped somewhat. Due to the failure to raise the minimum wage since 1981, its level has slipped below 40 percent of the average hourly wage in private, nonagricultural employment for the first time since 1949. A minimum wage of $4.37 per hour would be needed to restore it to 50 percent of the average private wage.

The current minimum wage of $3.35 per hour provides a full-time full-year worker with an annual income of $6,964. A worker with no dependents working at the minimum wage would earn more than the poverty threshold, while a worker with two dependents earning the minimum wage would remain substantially below the poverty line. The current poverty threshold for a family of three is $8,900, requiring full-time/full-year work at a wage of $4.28 per hour.

The minimum wage has not always been so low relative to the wages necessary to bring a family out of poverty. Throughout most of the 1960s and the 1970s, the minimum wage was sufficient to bring a family of three out of poverty. Today, contrary to popular perception, many work full-time but because of low wages, fail to escape poverty. Of the 22.2 million people over age 15 counted among the poor in 1984, 9.1 million worked. Almost 2.1 million worked full-time/full-year and were still unable to escape poverty, including 1.2 million who were heads of households. Millions more live in these impoverished households. Raising the minimum wage would be a direct way to help the working poor without raising the federal deficit.

EFFECTS

The minimum wage law is a statement by society that certain work conditions are unacceptable. Most Americans work in labor markets that offer protection against undesirable work conditions, but millions work in secondary labor markets characterized by unstable, low-wage employment. These workers have little clout in the marketplace and need the protection of government to bring their work conditions up to socially acceptable minimal standards.

Over the years the main objection to the minimum wage has been that it reduces employment opportunities. Arguing that almost any job is better than none, opponents tend to ignore the salutary impacts of the federal government setting of a floor on wages, specifically, its beneficial income effects.

The minimum wage, not surprisingly, has its largest employment effect on industries with a high proportion of low wage workers. It also has a large influence on the employment of youth. The 1980 Minimum Wage Study Commission estimated that a 10 percent increase in the minimum wage decreases teenage employment by about 1 percent. The effect of a minimum wage increase on teenage employment would vary, of course, with economic conditions and demographic trends.

There is little consensus on the effects of the minimum wage on overall adult employment, although it is clear that the adult labor market is not as sensitive to minimum wage changes as is the youth labor market. This is true both because youth workers are likely to be laid off before adult workers and because a smaller proportion of adults work at the minimum.

The income effects of the minimum wage are as important to consider as the employment effects, yet much less analysis of the former has been undertaken. Existing evidence, however, does indicate that the minimum wage has boosted the income of millions of low wage workers, and the net effect is especially positive for adult females.

In 1981, when the hourly minimum wage was raised from $3.10 to $3.35, the Department of Labor estimated that the aggregate increase potentially amounted to $2.2 billion annually, and that 5.5 million workers were eligible to receive raises. Effects in other years were also sizable. The 1978 wage increase potentially benefited 4.6 million workers, with a jump in total wages of $2 billion; in 1974, 4.2 million workers potentially received an additional $1.9 billion.

For many individuals and families, the higher wages that result from the mandated minimum are of undeniable benefit. The wage floor has helped some escape poverty and has lessened its severity for others. For those minimum wage earners above the poverty line, the extra income also can be essential. A teenager trying to earn money for school can benefit greatly, as can a multi-earner family that may be trying to scrape together enough money to purchase more than the bare necessities.

As the minimum wage is raised, the employment loss increases, as does the income gain of those who keep their jobs. The task for Congress is to strike the right balance between providing a reasonable wage floor and minimizing loss of jobs. Currently the minimum is too low to optimize its income effect.

In addition to providing a floor on wages for secondary labor market workers, minimum wages may help employers. The higher costs may induce them to provide training to employees in an attempt to boost productivity, or they may organize the production process more efficiently.

The minimum wage also reinforces the work ethic by providing an incentive for people to work rather than depend on welfare. Few would disagree that work should pay more than welfare. When individuals earn some income instead of relying entirely on government support, they benefit from the satisfaction of helping themselves, and their possibilities for future advancement are enhanced. Society benefits both from the increase in output and the reduction in welfare cost.

The minimum wage has little impact on overall economic conditions. The economy has prospered since minimum wage laws were enacted and there has been little noticeable effect on unemployment after each boost in the hourly rate. In the 1950s and 1960s, when the minimum wage rose in both real and relative terms, the unemployment rate remained low. In the 1970s and early 1980s, the wage floor eroded but this has not prevented rising unemployment. Unemployment rate trends reflect factors other than the minimum wage.

Finally, opponents argue that the minimum wage boosts inflation. Since however, the vast majority of workers earn considerably more than the minimum, the proposed changes would have a small, if any, effect on the inflation rate. Moreover, it is unfair to ask workers who earn the minimum wage to shoulder a disproportionate financial burden in the fight against inflation.

A DUAL MINIMUM WAGE

In recent years the youth unemployment rate has exceeded the overall unemployment rate by a factor of two and one-half. In 1985, for example, the teenage unemployment rate averaged 18.6 percent while the overall unemployment rate averaged 7.2 percent. Unemployment among black teenagers is an even more severe problem, averaging 40.2 percent in 1985.

A lower or subminimum wage has been proposed to increase youth employment. In fact, since 1961, employers have been able to secure Department of Labor certification to hire full-time students at 85 percent of the minimum wage as long as the students work less than 20 hours a week while attending school and if they are enrolled in a cooperative education program in fiscal 1985, an estimated 195,800 students were hired under this program.

The Reagan administration has proposed a further "youth opportunity wage" equal to 75 percent of the minimum wage that would apply during summer months. The proposal has drawn support not only from business but also from some minority groups and big city majors. The argument advanced in support of the lower minimum is that it would induce employers to hire more teenagers, thus providing them with the chance to break into the labor market. The Department of Labor has claimed that the proposal would create 400,000 jobs.

There are a number of potential problems with a dual minimum wage. The most serious would be the potential substitution of teenagers for adult workers. The Minimum Wage Study Commission, which opposed a youth subminimum wage, estimated that a 75 percent minimum would create 400,000 to 450,000 jobs for youth but would displace 50,000 to 150,000 adult workers. The commission noted that its displacement estimate is low because its analysis implicitly examined the possibility of youth replacing average adult workers instead of examining the more likely effect that adult workers earning the minimum wage or slightly higher would be displaced.

Second, the estimates for job increases are based on questionable assumptions about labor market operations. The results of wage subsidy programs such as the Targeted Job Tax Credit—which provided a 50 percent tax credit on the first $6,000 annual wages paid to disadvantaged youth and other targeted populations—have not been encouraging. In particular, the subminimum wage may not generate many new jobs if the labor market remains slack. Labor demand is not very responsive to a change in wages under such conditions.

Third, youths who need the jobs the most—those who have had trouble breaking into the labor market—are least likely to benefit from a lower minimum wage. They lack basic job skills and tend to live in areas with severe job deficits where business expansion is unlikely. They need to master the 3 R's and require specialized programs, such as the Job Corps, to prepare them for the job market. Finally, many teenagers who might have been hired at the established minimum wage would lose income if hired at a reduced minimum wage.

In short, a dual minimum wage may increase employment for teenagers as a group, but would raise serious equity concerns by doing so at the expense of increased adult unemployment and by not addressing the needs of poor youth. The focus on the merit of a subminimum wage has also preempted discussion of the sharp fall in the minimum wage since 1981.

Given the adamant administration opposition to boosting the minimum wage and its persistent advocacy of a dual wage, there is room for a trade off to break the current impasse between proponents of a higher minimum wage and the administration position. One approach would be to raise the minimum wage for adults but to exempt teenagers from the required raise.

TO REGAIN AN EFFECTIVE MINIMUM WAGE

In the absence of any action, the current federal minimum wage is becoming increasingly obsolete. Three states and the District of Columbia now have hourly minimum wage rates in excess of $3.35. If Congress does not act during the balance of the Reagan administration, the real value of the minimum wage is likely to decline by another 12 percent, assuming an annual inflation rate of 4 percent. Under these conditions it will become more difficult to restore an effective minimum wage to protect low wage earners.

In order to restore the minimum wage to a reasonable level, we propose that the minimum wage be raised annually by 5 percent in addition to increases in cost of living. These boosts should continue until the statutory minimum hourly rate equals half the average rate of nonsupervisory workers in private industry.

No matter how it is raised initially, the minimum wage should be indexed to changes in the average private hourly wage. This would prevent the erosion of the wage floor that has occurred during the last five years and which also occurred at other junctures in the past few decades. Indexing would make it easier for business to adjust to regular small increases in the minimum wage. It would also be easier for the working poor to cope with the rising cost of living.

Steps should also be taken to review current exemptions from the minimum hourly rate to ensure that the law protects more employees.

Last, Congress should also review current enforcement procedures to ensure that the law is properly enforced. Weak enforcement has been a continuing problem, and has been exacerbated by personnel cutbacks of 15 percent and a less sympathetic administration.

Together, the above changes would return the minimum wage to a reasonable level. Indexing would insure that it stays at such a level and gaps in coverage would be filled. Some fifty years after the passage of the first federal minimum wage law, these changes would help guarantee a wage that will encourage and make it possible for the poor to work their way out of poverty and, in the process, reduce their dependence on welfare. It would also raise the income of millions of other Americans and would reaffirm our society's commitment to the value of work.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON COMPETITIVENESS

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, this past weekend, with 11 of my congressional colleagues, I participated in a National Conference on Competitiveness cosponsored by the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, the Business-Higher Education Forum, and the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future. This conference demonstrated clearly the level of concern the leaders of our business and higher education sectors have about declining U.S. economic competitiveness, and their determination to work with Members of Congress to do something about it.

As cochair of the coalition with my esteemed colleague from New York, Mr. HORTON, I want to stress the importance of the process that was followed leading up to this conference—a process that bridged the political and ideological differences that otherwise might separate the participants. The conference focused on those measures on which consensus could be reached—measures that would enhance our competitive posture in concrete, effective ways. FRANK HORTON and I believe it is vital that we pursue the agenda established at the conference, and that the coalition should continue in the leadership role it already has established on this issue.

I would like to introduce into the RECORD the comments FRANK HORTON and I offered to open the conference. These comments better explain the background of the process and identify the congressional participants. Representative HORTON's comments also establish a clear context for the importance of a cooperative effort to attack our competitiveness problem.

OPENING COMMENTS OF REPRESENTATIVE HOWARD WOLPE, NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON COMPETITIVENESS, APRIL 18, 1986

I want to welcome all of you to this National Conference on Competitiveness. First let me thank the members of the joint steering committee who have guided this process for the past year and a half. Ruben Mettler of TRW and Bob Edgar of Pennsylvania has co-chaired the effort to bring the groups together to work on common concerns. Participants from the Forum included Doug Danforth of Westinghouse, Bob Rosenzweig of the American Association of Universities, Frank Rhodes of Cornell, and David Saxon of MIT; members of Congress who participated including Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island, who is a member of the executive committee of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition and Buddy MacKay of Florida, a leader of the Sunbelt Council and the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future. Their combined vision and practicality produced this extraordinary collaborative process.

Of course, we owe a lot to Father Ted Hesburgh of Notre Dame, who chaired the Forum during the first year of this effort and gave it a strong push; and to Ed Donley of Air Products and Chemicals, the current chair, who has participated extensively.

This really is a special occasion. We have with us this weekend leaders of most of the national organizations involved in the effort to enhance our nation's competitiveness: the foremost higher education associations—the American Council on Education and the American Association of Universities—and the top business groups—the Business Roundtable, the Chamber of Commerce, and the National Association of Manufacturers. In fact, Ed Donley this year is president of the U.S. Chamber as well as chair of the Forum, which gives him another pulpit from which to preach the competitiveness gospel.

And from the Congress, in addition to Claudine Schneider and Buddy MacKay, we have Representative Horton, a 23-year veteran of the House, my co-chair of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, and the senior Republican on the House Government Operations Committee;

Senator Jeff Bingaman, who chairs the Senate Democratic Working Group on Economic Competitiveness;

Representative Don Baker, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, of the House Export Task Force, and of the House Democratic Trade Task Force;

Representative Don Ritter, co-chair of the Republican Task Force on High Technology Initiatives;

Representative Stan Lundine, who chairs the House Task Force on Industrial Innovation and Productivity and the Banking Subcommittee on International Development Institutions and Finance;

Representative Sandy Levin, who chairs the Democratic Task Force on Employment and Training;

And Representative Nancy Johnson, Ron Packard, and Pat Schroeder, who have been pursuing these same concerns through major committees like Public Works, Science and Technology, and Armed Services.

To make sure that those members of Congress who have participated in the process leading up to this conference but could not be here this weekend are kept in the loop, I would like to invite the leaders of the higher education and business organizations to a breakfast the Coalition will host when the report from this conference is published. That should be an excellent opportunity to give our effort an added push.

At this point let me thank the staffs of the Business-Higher Education Forum, the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, and the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future for the hard work they have put in organizing this event for us.

All three of these organizations are unique in their own way. But even more unique is the notion that chief executives of our leading corporations, heads of colleges and universities, and members of Congress from both parties could recognize their common interest in the nation's competitive posture and organize a process, not simply to generate another report, but to devise an action agenda to which they would commit themselves. I doubt that there is a peacetime precedent for such an effort.

Those of us in the Congress who have been active in the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition know how important a cooperative approach is in addressing difficult economic problems. For the past ten years our region—which includes all the older Northern industrial states—has been going through a dramatic economic shift. Increasingly, members of the Coalition have realized that we must respond to the global forces that are causing economic distress and dislocation—but we must do so in very specific terms. This requires flexible federal policies that are targeted to those places and people who need the most help adjusting to economic change. By following this guideline, the Coalition has carved out an important role on issues like economic development, energy, tax and budget policy, and employment and training.

This is one reason collaboration between members of Congress and leaders of corporations and academic institutions on the issue of competitiveness is so valuable: Your insights and priorities can help us make better policy. At the same time, of course, we can help the private and education sectors identify those actions they can and should take on their own.

A year ago January, almost 30 members of Congress—from all regions and both parties—attended the initial joint meeting with the Forum in Scottsdale, Arizona. There we held an initial set of discussions to identify those areas related to U.S. economic competitiveness where our interests joined. The subsequent meetings we held in Cambridge, Pittsburgh, and Palo Alto helped further narrow the focus of our concerns. Each of these drew excellent representation from the business and higher education communities and from members of Congress.

Even before formal adoption of any of the recommendations developed at the regional meetings, this relationship has paid off in a number of ways. Since our meeting in Scottsdale, two delegations of Coalition members have visited Japan for discussions on trade and other issues related to competitiveness. On one of those trips they were joined by Frank Rhodes and David Saxon. Both delegations received a great deal of planning and logistical support from TRW's offices in Washington and Tokyo.

Besides the knowledge they gained, members identified specific areas on which to work. For example, Sandy Levin and Marcy Kaptur have led a drive to open the Japanese market to American auto parts. In fact, Marcy became famous in Japan as the woman who carried a sparkplug—an American-made sparkplug—with her wherever she went.

As a result of their efforts, Japanese companies decided to participate in an auto fair held in Chicago shortly after their trip. Sandy and Marcy also hosted a conference on trading with Japan for automotive product manufacturers that was attended by executives from almost 100 American companies. Every major Japanese auto firm sent representatives to the conference, which was sponsored by the Coalition and carried out with financial support and a great deal of staff assistance from TRW.

On top of all that, we learned last week that—at least partly at the Coalition's urging—auto parts almost certainly will be included in the next round of MOSS talks between the U.S. and Japan.

Let me close by saying that with this record of action and success, we come to this conference in a very optimistic frame of mind. We believe the recommendations we make here will be enacted—that they will increase the competitiveness of American industry and enhance the contribution of our college and universities.

Of course, that will require continued effort from all of us. But the excellent work we've done over the past year and a half has laid the necessary foundation. Now we just need to build on it.

OPENING REMARKS OF REPRESENTATIVE FRANK HORTON, NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON COMPETITIVENESS, APRIL 18, 1986

I want to thank the members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, the Business-Higher Education Forum, and the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future for convening this National Conference on Competitiveness.

Since 1962, when I was first elected to Congress, we have seen dramatic changes in the American economy—changes that have posed enormous challenges for our political system. Government policies in relation to those changes have not kept pace. Neither Congress nor the executive branch has dealt well with the "internationalization" of the economy, or its harmful effects on various regions of the country. Only recently did we realize that much of American industry had ceased to be competitive; that the jobs and markets we had lost might never be regained; and that the future would bring much of the same.

Our domestic economy increasingly is being influenced by decisions made elsewhere around the world. Beginning with the 1973 OPEC oil embargo, we learned the hard way just how closely our domestic economy and foreign policy were intertwined. Now, we are much more aware that what we usually think of as domestic economic decisions—on interest rates, taxes, and the deficit—reverberate around the globe. They shape the economies of other nations as well as our ability to achieve international objectives.

We in Congress are engaged in much debate over issues relating to those points at which the domestic and international economies intersect. The price of oil, the value of the dollar, trade policy, the health of the banking system, the farm crisis—these are issues that go beyond our borders.

Those debates have been characterized by deep ideological and political differences. That is why our efforts here this weekend are so important. This joint project has involved Republicans and Democrats, moderates, liberals, and conservatives. We are joined in a consensus-building process with leaders of major corporations and academic institutions. By focusing on those areas where we can reach agreement and take action, we will be bridging gaps that have separated us. And we will be doing it in the national interest.

If this process works—and the Coalition is committed to making it work—it will be a significant step toward a better integration of our domestic and foreign economies.

DOLLARS FROM HEAVEN

HON. BILL NELSON

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Paul Harvey recently prepared a news article titled "Dollars From Heaven." This article highlights some of the many, many technological advances and achievements which the citizens of the United States enjoy today as a result of the past quarter of a century of investment in space. As we contemplate the future direction of our investment in space, and measure our commitment to the future in terms of fiscal year 1987 budget dollars, I strongly urge all of my colleagues to read Mr. Harvey's article, and to remember the message which it offers.

DOLLARS FROM HEAVEN

While future space probes are on hold . . .

While Americans are contemplating the risks involved . . .

Seems a good time to audit some of the stardust we've harvested.

The Statue of Liberty began crumbling during its first hundred years because the steel skeleton was rusting away.

The rehabilitated Statue of Liberty will be protected against such degradation by a protective coating known as IC 531—a spinoff product from aerospace research.

And it is available already for you and me to use to rustproof whatever.

Your bowling ball will be more precisely top-weighted because of an Exactratron process developed for interplanetary spacecraft.

For farmers—using oil or gas to blow-dry crops is costly and tedious.

Space research has taught us a drying process, akin to microwave, applicable for drying agricultural products including wheat and corn but also prunes and raisins—cleanly, quickly and at less cost.

Most lightplane accidents result from a "stall." That will be a lesser hazard from now on because of a "glove" mounted on the outer portion of the leading edge of each lightplane wing.

NASA research taught us that. And a lot of lightplanes which would have crashed—won't.

Industry strips wire less tediously, using a laser to melt away insulation. You get the benefit; NASA deserves the credit.

Teflon is something that happened on our way to the Moon—and ceramics, tough enough for a stove top.

Most modern better-than-ever cameras and flashlights were developed for spacecraft.

NASA taught us to machine monel, so your kitchen faucet will be better and cost less.

While much of the technical fallout is too complicated to describe in lay language, there is enough of it to ascertain that every dollar we have spent on space research has profited us seven.

Plus medical benefits beyond price: Nuclear magnetic resonance for scanning the inner workings of your body without opening you up.

A new portable heart monitor, improved eye examination techniques, microbe detectors, bone analyzers. In a zero gravity environment we learned cheaper methods of treating burns, blood clots and diabetes.

The western world was first explored by conquistadores seeking "gold"; they found little.

In our quarter-century of exploring beyond the beyond we have harvested riches beyond their wildest imagining.

A TRIBUTE TO LT. COL. EUGENE C. CHANDLER

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, it comes as a great honor for me to pay tribute to a gentleman whose courage, charisma, and compassion has won him the love and respect of both the military and civilian communities. I speak of Lt. Col. Eugene C. Chandler, who will be honored in Maryland's First Congressional District this Sunday, April 27, 1986, by the Union Methodist Church at the Aberdeen Proving Gounds.

When I look at Colonel Chandler's extraordinary portfolio of accomplishments, I see a man who transcends the common bounds of patriotism and brotherhood. At every step, Colonel Chandler has remained steadfastly committed to upholding and promoting the American rights of freedom and equality; whether it be defending our flag in far-off lands or defending racial equality right here in the United States.

Colonel Chandler's storied military career spanned more than two decades. Upon graduation from college in 1951, Eugene Chandler received and completed the basic infantry officers course at Fort Benning, GA. Subsequently, he completed the artillery battery officers course at Fort Sill, OK; the airborne and ranger courses at Fort Campbell, KY; and graduated from the Command and General Staff College in 1965.

During his period of active duty, Colonel Chandler served heroically as platoon and company commander in Japan and Korea in 1953–54; adjutant of the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, KY; the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii; the Military Assistance Command as advisor to the Republic of Vietnam; chief of personnel and services of the Field Artillery Board at Fort Sill, OK; and equal employment manager of the U.S. Army Test and Evaluation Command at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds.

Among the many decorations accorded Colonel Chandler during his brilliant military career are the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the Air Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Combat Infantryman's Badge, the Parachutist Badge, and the Vietnamese Honor Medal First Class.

If Colonel Chandler's military accomplishments are impressive, his civilian achievements have been extraordinary. Since his retirement from the military in 1971, the colonel has been the recipient of a staggering array of awards for his work in the community: Department of the Army Certificate of Achievement, 1974; listed as 1 of 20 outstanding graduates by the Agricultural and Technical State University of North Carolina, 1976; Community Service Award from the Harford County Branch of the NAACP, 1977; Department of the Army Certificate of Achievement, 1979–84; letters of commendation from the Boy Scouts of America, 1984; letter of commendation from the United Negro College Fund, 1984; Southern Poverty Law Center Certificate, 1984; Department of the Army Commander's Award for Civilian Service, 1984; 1985 Career Service Award from the Baltimore Federal Executive Board; NAACP President's Award, 1985; and the Army Material Command Action Award, 1985.

Colonel Chandler is truly a man of remarkable achievements. His tireless and, indeed, endless efforts to improve the lot of those around him serves as a tremendous inspiration to all that know him. It can well be said that it is people such as Eugene Chandler who represent the essential fiber that binds this great Nation together in a time of world unrest.

So, Mr. Speaker, I proudly salute Col. Eugene Chandler, who stands as source of great pride to his family, community and Maryland's First Congressional District.

A TRIBUTE TO MERRITT W. SPRAGUE, MANAGER OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION

HON. COOPER EVANS

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. EVANS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, Merritt W. Sprague of Illinois, will depart in a few days from his post as Manager of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to return to his Pike County, IL, farming operation. As he completes his tenure as Manager of a most difficult program, it is appropriate that we look at accomplishments during his tenure as Manager.

Based on premium volume between 1948 and 1984, my home State of Iowa has been the second largest user of this form of insurance. I know many farmers who are still in business today because they had the good sense to buy crop insurance.

Mr. Sprague came to Washington, DC, from Illinois where he grew corn, wheat, and soybeans on 2,000 acres and annually marketed 5,000 hogs. He also served as the Illinois State Chairman of Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service from 1973 to 1977.

In Washington, Mr. Sprague served as Deputy Administrator for Commodity Operations at Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service beginning in March of 1981. While there he was responsible for the administration of the Milk Price Support Program, management and storage of all Commodity Credit Corporation owned inventories—dairy products, food and feed grains, and sweeteners—and procurement and transportation for Public Law 480, title II programs.

Passage of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation Act of 1980 as a replacement for our annual disaster programs overnight obligated the Corporation to move from being a limited pilot insurance program to becoming the primary form of Federal disaster protection for farmers. Between 1980 and 1982 when Mr. Sprague assumed the leadership of the Corporation, five different persons served as Crop Insurance Corporation Manager.

The results Mr. Sprague and the FCIC achieved in a short period of time are significant. Under his leadership, FCIC developed and fully implemented a production-based guarantee program, which makes crop insurance attractive for our Nation's most productive farmers. County programs increased almost 300 percent, from 4,629 in 1980 to 18,892 in 1985. Acres insured, insurance in force, and premium income also increased dramatically. In 1980, there were 26.6 million acres insured compared with 48 million for the 1985 crop year. Insurance in force increased for the same period from $3 billion in 1980 to over $7 million in 1985. Premium incomes increased from $158 million in 1980 to over $440 million in 1985.

Clearly there continue to be major problems facing our Federal Crop Insurance Program, but to achieve these kinds of results while American agriculture is going through some wrenching adjustments requires solid leadership. We all owe Mr. Sprague a debt of gratitude for his dedication and commitment to American agriculture and the crop insurance program and to wish him well as he leaves Government service to return to his farm.

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO REPEAL NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON OCEANS AND ATMOSPHERE

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to repeal Public Law 95–63, the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA] Act of 1977.

This bill deauthorizes NACOA, terminating it on October 1, 1986. This action is both necessary and timely given the administration's continual failure to recommend support for NACOA and the growing dissatisfaction of Members of Congress with the committee.

The original concept of an advisory committee on oceans and atmosphere was developed in 1969 by the highly respected Commission on Marine Science, Engineering and Resources—Stratton Commission. The Commission recommended that a committee be formed by Congress "to examine marine science affairs and to develop a national strategy for a well integrated, centrally coordinated program." Later, the NACOA Act of 1977 more specifically mandated that the committee review national coastal and ocean policy and programs, and advise the Secretary of Commerce on the programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA].

At present, NACOA's attempts to carry out these functions have been severely hampered by both internal and external factors. Internally, expertise in disciplines of marine and atmospheric science is severely under-represented by NACOA's membership. Furthermore, the relationship of NACOA to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as defined by NACOA's charter leaves doubt as to whether it can function as a truly independent entity. These deficiencies have incurred public criticism and have raised serious doubts about the credibility of this advisory body.

Externally, NACOA has not had the support of the administration. For the last 4 years, the President's budget has proposed to terminate NACOA. Meanwhile, congressional support has been diminishing with ever increasing budgetary pressures and a continuing concern was aroused further with the President's unsuccessful attempt to nominate Anne Burford to be chairperson of NACOA in 1984.

In my view, the major deficiencies of the committee are largely due to the unsatisfactory process for appointment of members, its apparent lack of structural and budgetary independence, and inadequate financial support for its mission. Although NACOA is a Presidential and congressional advisory committee, all 18 members are appointed by the President with no congressional input. In the 98th Congress, the House twice attempted to rectify this situation through passage of legislation to create a National Ocean Policy Commission. More recently, informational discussions have been held on a reconstituted NACOA.

In introducing this legislation, I want to make clear to my colleagues that my dissatisfaction is with the current structure of NACOA. It is not intended to reflect negatively on any current or past members of NACOA or on the hard work and good intentions of its staff. In past years, NACOA earned the respect and confidence of the Congress, the administration, and the scientific community under the leadership of John Knauss, dean of the Graduate School of Oceanography at the University of Rhode Island. In the last 2 years, John Flipse, associate dean at Texas A&M University, has done a commendable job of directing the committee despite the difficult obstacles presented by current administration policies. Nevertheless, the time has come to repeal Public Law 95–63 because of the inadequate process by which members are appointed, the lack of true structural independence, and the absence of compelling support for NACOA's work.

The current budget realities compounded with growing U.S. reponsibilities in the exclusive economic zone and the lack of a comprehensive national ocean policy emphasize the compelling need for an independent advisory body. NACOA's existing structure does not adequately address this need. However, I believe that an effective advisory body can be established, and I will continue my efforts to develop legislation to create an independent, viable oceanic and atmospheric advisory body.

Mr. Speaker, we have tried to address the weaknesses of NACOA through legislation, but these efforts have been unsuccessful. Although I do not relish this task, it is time to take final action to terminate this advisory body. NACOA's existence can no longer be justified in its present form.

ANNETTE LIANN WATERS TO RECEIVE SCHOLARSHIP FROM THE VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES AND ITS LADIES AUXILIARY

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to a speech written by one of my constituents, Annette Liann Waters. Miss Waters is the winning candidate in the Voice of Democracy scholarship program from the State of Michigan. The Voice of Democracy Scholarship Program is conducted every year by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and its Ladies Auxiliary and scholarships are awarded to the winning contestants from each State based on their submitted essays.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, one of the Nation's oldest veterans service organizations, has sponsored the scholarship program for the last 24 years. During this time over 5 million students have participated and awards totaling more than $3 million have been given to winners at all levels in scholarships and savings bonds. First place winners from each State receive a $14,000 scholarship to the school of their choice.

Miss Waters, a senior at Cass Technical High School in Detroit, has powerfully and eloquently addressed the contest theme for this year, "New Horizons For America's Youth" in her winning essay. She is an honor student and a volunteer for the Detroit Recreational Department. She plans to attend the University of Michigan in the fall and she would like to pursue a career in law. Annette's essay is an inspiration to us all. Surely "great horizions" await us with Young people like Annette Liann Waters.

The essay follows:

NEW HORIZONS FOR AMERICA'S YOUTH

(By Annette Waters)

I'm standing on the shore of destiny in America, waiting for the sun to rise. A new and brighter day is slowly awakening. As far as the eye can see to the right and left is water. Here I stand under God's firmament looking down at the reflection of my hands in the clear water. These hands are relatively new on this earth and have strong workable muscles controlled by a worlds changing instrument, my mind. These hands could offer the foundation for someone's education. They could reach out to the child who feels caught in a chain of hopelessness and inspire him to develop a positive outlook on life. If encouraged and guided, young minds know no bounds and won't produce words such as "can't" and "not able to". My generation must reach children. We must let them know that there is hope for the future and that they can play an important role in that future.

Through the knowledge and skills acquired from education, America's youth can one day help to wipe out existing poverty, hunger, immorality, and despair in our country. Thus all may share in the radiant new horizon which inspired young American minds help to create. The determined hands of today's youth can also reach out tomorrow to those who have fallen prey to devasting illnesses. We, through the skillful use of our educational opportunities, can one day say, "we've found it. We now possess a vaccine for cancer. Diabetes, heart disease, and arthritis no longer devastate the lives of their victims because we can now cure them and we can even control the deadly disease, AIDS". These hands could soon reach out to little children and say, "I've found the cure to your muscle disorder. Help is here. Take my hand in yours. A healthier future is in this grasp; it's in this Union".

Hands are meant to discover, to create, to assist and to build. Hands are not meant to be the instruments of violence, but rather of peace . . . the peace and understanding that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and other American patriots lived and died for.

As I gaze at the reflection of my hands in the water, the stillness is suddenly broken. Waves of the sea rise up and clash against the rocks, causing me to think of young minds that rise up against society in crime, destruction, and violence. The clashes of the sea sound like gun shots . . . shots that are the result of misguided hands that pull triggers. Guns have to be directed away from America's youth, but this will only happen when we help them to establish positive values, to adopt a sense of selfworth and belonging, and to gain compassion for their fellow man. They must be uplifted and taught to realize the most precious gift of all, the sacredness of life.

Americans are blessed with opportunity and the power to affect life through knowledge, imagination, integrity and the ability and willingness to achieve. These are the ingredients that ultimately build and pave the way for our children and their children after them, so that they may lead a more secure and fulfilling life. Today's youth can reach out and grasp this precious power. We must mold it with special care in order to improve the quality of life in our nation and from there to help our neighbors in distant lands.

As I look to the horizon, I see a new born figure standing in the midst of the water. The sun starts to rise; the fog melts away and through the dedication of man and the skill of technology, blindness no longer plagues the human eye. The sun begins to blaze, melting the frost, and homeless people find jobs and shelter. The sun starts beating and warming my soul with the promise of a new and better future for the drug abuser, indeed for all mankind. This is a result of the figure standing in the midst of the water, supported by the faith and devotion of man. That figure is everyone. It doesn't matter what creed, color, handicap, or gender. What matters is that together young Americans believe in and work for a healthier, more humane and stable society. Help is here. Take my hand in yours. Our bountiful future, a better day, is in this grasp. It's in this union.

DEMOCRACY ON THE MOVE

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, although the 1980's continue to be a time of turbulence and misunderstanding throughout the international community, it has also presented this Nation with a foreign policy challenge that will continue to offer hope and opportunity to all our friends who espouse the principles of democracy.

Recent trends in global affairs have made it necessary for our Nation to adopt a bold and imaginative foreign policy which will help shape events in accordance with our vision for a safer and more peaceful world community.

Across this globe we have begun to see a democratic renaissance, one where the basic principles of liberty are taking hold in country after country, demonstrating a desire and appeal to the framework of our ideals.

Although our system of democracy offers a powerful appeal to developing nations, we are still hard pressed to face the challenges of communism and terrorism which plague this planet at epidemic levels.

In meeting these challenges, one fact remains undeniable—the yearning for political freedom continues to be the most desirable goal for most members of the international forum. As the strongest democracy on Earth, we play an integral role in the support of people who aspire to the basic constitutional freedoms that we, as U.S. citizens, enjoy today.

The clearest example of this whirlwind of democracy is in the Latin American region, where Guatemala has been the latest to join the ranks of countries who have opted for civilian governments in lieu of the oppressive military regimes of the past. As Secretary of State, George Shultz, recently stated: "In the last 6 years, elected civilian governments have replaced authoritarian regimes in Argentina, Guatemala, Honduras, Peru and Uruguay. Over 90 percent of all people in Latin America and the Caribbean now enjoy a democratic form of government as opposed to less than one-third in the early 1980's." It is clear that the people of these countries have realized that the basic freedoms offered by democracy such as the right to vote, to worship, and to speak openly offer a wider range of opportunities for themselves and their children than the false promises offered by the past regimes.

Undoubtedly, our moral, economic and security assistance can make the difference between the success and failure of those recently conceived democracies. Our commitment to human rights, social and economic progress place us in a leadership role that must continue to be a source of inspiration to all young democratic nations.

The Soviet Union continues to pose a serious challenge not only to this Nation but also to the interests of the free world. Although, our countries represent philosophies that are at opposite ends of the spectrum, the continued buildup of our respective nuclear arsenals encourages us to pursue a constructive dialogue with the Soviet Union whenever we can without abandoning our basic principles.

Successful negotiations in the future with the Soviets will remain contingent upon American strength. In dealing with the Soviet Union, diplomacy and American strength are synonymous. Our defense preparedness along with a continued commitment to the strategic defense initiative remain crucial bargaining chips. Our defensive posture in nuclear weaponry makes our negotiating position much more viable in realizing the universal goal of a safer world.

One of the most important challenges facing our Nation continues to be international terrorism. Recent attacks in the West Berlin discotheque and the Rome Airport which were supported by the Libyan Government, solidifies our resolve to track down and punish the perpetrators and sponsors of these unconscionable acts.

Terrorism is simple international warfare conducted and aided by a handful of radical governments which follow an archaic philosophy destined to undermine democracies throughout the world. The growing sentiment permeating from the international community is that apathy and appeasement offer no solution to the terrorist movement. We must continue to improve our intelligence efforts and develop a closer cooperation and coordination with other governments to combat this problem.

One point that must be made clear is that the U.S. Government will act swiftly and effectively against terrorist activities, and those governments who aid these international criminals will be held accountable in the harshest terms where the lives of Americans are threatened abroad.

As we move forward to meet the challenges of the future we, as a nation, must continue to advocate the support of the ideals and principles of democracy for young developing nations to emulate.

America must remain a beacon of hope and model of democracy if we are to preserve and advance the ideals of peace, freedom, and security in the world community.

THE CASE AGAINT TAX AMNESTY

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, last month I warned my colleagues not to leap on the tax amnesty bandwagon without a careful review of the issues involved. In that regard, I hope my colleagues will take a moment to read the following commentary which appeared in the April 6 edition of the Washington Post. This article was written by our colleague, BYRON DORGAN, a member of the Ways and Means Committee and a former State tax commissioner. The gentleman from North Dakota is well qualified to speak on the tax amnesty issue and I believe the Congress will find this article informative and convincing.

The article follows:

TAX AMNESTY IS FOOL'S GOLD

(By Byron L. Dorgan)

In a town increasingly seduced by the quick fix or the simple answer, tax amnesty is made to order. It's quick to implement, easy to understand—and wrong.

No one I know is discussing tax amnesty as a move toward tax equity or good tax policy. It is being discussed now because some see it as an easy way to achieve additional revenue without calling it a tax increase. They think they can avoid a fight with the president over the definition of a tax increase.

As a former state tax administrator, I see two things fundamentally wrong with the proposal for a federal tax amnesty program. First, it would weaken confidence in our tax system for the overwhelming majority of Americans who honestly and conscientiously report and pay their income taxes each and every year. Second, I don't believe it would result in any significant new revenue for the federal government.

The state tax amnesty programs were launched from a platform of weak enforcement, a promise of amnesty and a threat of beefed-up enforcement in the future. This carrot-and-stick approach did, in some instances, provide an incentive for tax evaders to come forward to pay up. But it is important to point out that state income taxes are only a fraction of the federal income tax burden and, therefore, much more easily repaid during an amnesty period. For these reasons, I don't think the state experience is a model with which to predict a successful federal program. I don't believe a federal tax amnesty program would result in any significant new revenue to the federal government.

Those who want to make certain that our income tax system yields revenues that this country needs and expects ought to join some of us in Congress who have been pleading for restoration of enforcement funds for the Internal Revenue Service, so it can properly enforce our tax laws. In recent years, under President Reagan's lead, there has been a serious decrease in funding for tax law enforcement at the Internal Revenue Service. The number of tax returns audited by the IRS has suffered an alarming decrease. The number of IRS agents working on accounts receivable and compliance has decreased. This simply doesn't make sense. It is even more illogical to follow a decrease in tax law enforcement with the offer of tax amnesty.

Until recent years, our tax system had been the marvel of the world. It relied on the voluntary cooperation of the millions of Americans who on April 15 were willing to meet their responsibilities as citizens. In recent years, the president and Congress have nearly ruined the tax system by using it as a cash register for social and economic engineering: an incentive here, a loophole there. The fairness of the system has been eroding at the very same time that enforcement funds have been cut.

Now as we wrestle with tax reform to make the system more fair, some in Congress propose that those citizens who have fulfilled their tax obligations should understand and accept a program that rewards those citizens who didn't. That's quick and certain way to further erode the taxpayers' confidence in a system that is already in trouble with the folks back home.

But in these days of quick answers and gain with no pain, tax amnesty is made to order for the administration and this Congress. It overpromises in the short run and ignores the damage it would do in the long run.

It's time for all of us to do the right thing the right way. We need to make our tax system more fair, beef up enforcement and raise sufficient revenues to pay for that which government spends. I know it doesn't have as much sex appeal or pizzaz as some marginal progress—such as tax amnesty—that some claim would manufacture money, but this approach would really work. It could be the first step toward a habit of doing the right thing.

ENVIRONMENTAL AND NATURAL RESOURCE EXPLOITATION AS AN UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICE

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to remedy the unfair trade advantage derived by some countries from the reckless exploitation of their environment, or from the unsound development of their natural resources.

The United States has a long-established system of controls for protecting our environment, our precious natural resources, our native flora and fauna, and our historical and cultural heritage. We recognize that it is in our own best interest to preserve and protect our environment. We also recognize that environmental and natural resource degradation is a global problem. Acid rain, for example, respect no national borders.

Our domestic environmental and natural resource protection efforts add to the cost of American goods and commodities seeking markets in the international trade arena. But it is a price we are prepared to pay as a matter of national policy, because we recognize clearly how precious these resources are.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for all nations of the world. In fact, some countries recklessly and deliberately exploit their environment and natural resources in their efforts to gain a short term trade advantage.

Tropical rainforests, for example, are crucial to the global environment, particularly to the world's supply of oxygen. They are also vital to the preservation of our biological and horticultural diversity. Our rainforests provide us with plants from which we may develop new medicines. Their vegetation yields new plant strains resistant to insects and disease. Even the fruit bats which live in the rainforests are crucial to the pollination of fruit and timber, and hence play a key role in the preservation of important timber and plant and food resources.

Yet some countries, are permitting and even actively promoting the rapid destruction of this vital resource. Mostly this is done with the old slash and burn technique, where huge areas of the rainforest are bulldozed and burned to expose the topsoil. That is then used, in turn, for planting grass for grazing livestock, which is fattened quickly, slaughtered, and exported. Unfortunately, the cleared land remains useful for only a few years. The topsoil simply washes away, rendering the land useless and barren. We have only to look at the horrible starvation in Africa, and the rapid desertification of much of that continent, to recognize how dangerous these practices can be. Of course, unsound developmental and environmental practices are not limited to the destruction of tropical rainforests.

In effect, these techniques are being used to gain an unfair trade advantage over more responsible countries. Although the rapid degradation of the environment is a matter of concern to all nations, the international trade system does not require the bad actors to pay the full and true costs of their unsound practices. In fact, it requires them to pay no cost at all. The result is an unfair trade advantage which costs American workers their jobs, as businesses shut down factories in the United States and open them overseas to take advantage of cheap labor, cheap exploited resources, and lax health and safety and environmental standards. But the problem is not simply limited to unfair trade. These practices also threaten the devastation of the global environment.

These practices must be stopped. Certainly, the United States should—and does—educate less responsible countries to their own environmental interests. If need be, we should provide technical assistance or low-interest loans to enable developing countries to improve their infrastructure in ways which do not conflict with sound environmental or natural resource conservation practices.

But we should also be prepared to press for a system of international trade agreements which do not reward those countries which recklessly destroy their environments for the sake of trade. One way of meeting this aspect of unfair competition would be to press for changes in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] which will enable responsible countries to offset the unfair trade advantage derived by our less responsible neighbors.

The legislation I am introducing today would direct the President, at the upcoming GATT round, to seek the adoption of international trade standards tied to basic standards for preventing air and water pollution, soil erosion, hazardous waste contamination, extinction or endangerment of species, and other natural resource degradation. The bill would also direct the President to seek the adoption of such incentives and disincentives as may be necessary to implement such trade standards. In order to provide the technical expertise necessary for the development and promotion of these environmental trade standards, the bill would authorize the creation of the Interagency Advisory Committee on International Environmental Protection. The committee would be created through currently available resources.

In the event that we are unable to persuade our trading partners to work toward the adoption of international environmental trade standards, the President is directed to report to the Congress on what action may be taken, and is recommended, to eliminate current trade preferences given to countries whose trade practices involve unsound environmental and natural resource practices. It is bad enough that some countries derive an unfair trade advantage from polluting their environment. There is absolutely no reason why the United States should compound that advantage by giving them trade preferences as well.

Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that enactment of my bill would automatically eliminate pollution, or immediately improve the relative trade position of the United States. But it is time that we induced our trading partners to acknowledge what we have lo LOSS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, on April 10, 1986, the citizens of Idaho suffered a tragic loss when Pete Busch, a candidate for a seat in the U.S. House of Representatives; his wife, Charlene; and former State Senator Terry Reilly, who was a candidate for Lieutenant Governor in Idaho, lost their lives in an airplane crash.

Pete and Charlene Busch were the personification of the grassroots public servants for which Idaho is known. They took their message to the people, campaigned hard, asked to serve, and truly wanted to represent the people of Idaho. It is tragic that they perished in this attempt.

Terry Reilly was one of our rising Democratic stars who will be missed. Terry came on the political scene as an exceptionally bright and effective State senator. It is not only a loss for his family and the Democratic Party, but for the people of Idaho who had much to gain from his public service.

I would like to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial from the Idaho Statesman of April 12, 1986. This editorial pays tribute to these outstanding individuals.

One was a plain-spoken, hard-thinking man who'd served his country in combat and knew too well the horrors of war.

Another was a witty, determined man who had served his state and his community to help those in need.

Thursday night, they died in the crash of a small plane in eastern Idaho.

Neither Pete Busch nor Terry Reilly could have been described as mainstream Idaho. They were liberal Democrats swimming against Idaho's conservative tide. But they were men of conscience, conviction and purpose. They will be missed.

Mr. Busch, 51, a realtor, was a former Marine fighter pilot who had flown 400 combat missions in Vietnam. His experiences there turned him into a fervent opponent of the nuclear arms race and of military aid to Central America.

In 1984, Mr. Busch lost in his effort to unseat Sen. Jim McClure, but came back this year to run against First District Congressman Larry Craig.

Mr. Busch married in late 1984. His wife, Charlene, died with him in the plane crash.

Terry Reilly, 39, was a big, strapping Irishman from Nampa.

From 1982 to 1984 he served in the Idaho Senate, but lost his bid for a second term. This year, he sought the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor. At the time of his death, he was campaigning on behalf of a state lottery initiative.

During his Senate years, Mr. Reilly brought a breath of fresh air to that stodgy chamber. He got a lot of laughs, for instance, with his annual "Wilted Shamrock Award" for waste in state government. But he had a serious side.

Mr. Reilly was administrator of Community Health Clinics Inc., a project he started in the '70s to provide health care to Hispanics. Community Health now operates in five cities and also provides the SANE (Sexual Abuse Now Ended) program.

Mr. Reilly was a family man, too. There are certain images that linger of his Senate years: his two young sons, watching their dad from the Senate gallery; his wife, Rosie, filling in for him during an absence; his father looking on during Senate debate.

Thursday night, in a remote part of eastern Idaho, the plane carrying Pete Busch, Charlene Busch and Terry Reilly went down. A lot of dreams went down with them. It's a sad day for all of us.

SUPPORT OF THE PROCESSED PRODUCTS INSPECTION IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1986

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek support for legislation I am introducing today, the Processed Products Inspection Improvement Act of 1986. I am confident that favorable congressional action on this bill will provide substantial benefits to the consuming and taxpaying public by making the Federal meat inspection program more effective, efficient and better equipped to protect the public health.

The legislation is simple and straightforward. It would allow the Secretary of Agriculture greater flexibility in allocating inspection resources to meat processing—as opposed to slaughter—establishments. In determining the appropriate level of inspection, the Secretary would be directed to consider factors including first, the nature and frequency of the processing operations in question; second, the adequacy and reliability of an establishment's processing control and sanitary procedures; and third, the operator's history of compliance with the law.

The Secretary enjoys no such latitude under current law. To the contrary, he must provide what is known as continuous inspection at all Federal establishments. As a result, the daily physical presence of a USDA inspector is maintained regardless of the size, sophistication or reliability of a given facility.

Such a system probably made sense when Congress passed the original meat inspection laws in 1906. Meat processing of that era was relatively simple and generally integrated within a slaughtering operation. The five senses of the Federal inspector were the best available tools for use in an effort to assure product safety and consistency.

Our predecessors in this body obviously could not, however, have envisioned the present day American food processing network. Meat and meat products already inspected at the time of slaughter, and frequently at other processing points as well, are used as components of thousands of different products from hot dogs to frozen entrees to meat-topped pizzas. More and more companies are adopting sophisticated quality control systems, which include frequent product sampling, designed to assure continuing compliance with both regulatory requirements and company specifications.

In other segments of food processing, the Food and Drug Administration successfully maintains a system of random, periodic inspections. This leaves us with radically different inspection systems for vegetable soup versus vegetable beef soup; for pepperoni pizza versus mushroom pizza. Even in the area of poultry product processing, a parallel program maintained by USDA, the Secretary enjoys substantially more discretion in reaching his determinations about the allocation of inspection resources.

For several years a variety of experts, both inside and outside of the Government, have recognized the maintenance of this traditional inspection system in today's environment is outmoded, inefficient, and unnecessarily expensive. In 1977 the consulting firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton conducted a review of the program for the Department and recommended passage of this type of legislation. Similar sentiments were expressed in a 1977 report issued by the General Accounting Office, and reiterated in 1981.

USDA began seeking this authority in 1982, advising the Congress at that time the passage of such legislation would enable the Department to deal more efficiently and effectively with the many different kinds of inspection situations it faced. In 1983 the Grace Commission came to a similar conclusion, recommending that the Secretary be given authority to provide more flexible inspection consistent with the legislative criteria specified in today's bill.

Finally, the National Academy of Sciences, as part of its comprehensive review of the Meat and Poultry Inspection Program published in 1985, recognized that processing plants with the capability or proven practice of instituting their own effective quality control programs reasonably might not require the ongoing physical presence of an inspector. Today's legislation is also supported by the American Meat Institute and other industry groups. In short, the jury is in on this issue, and there is clear consensus for change.

It is important to point out what this legislation will not do. It will not effect slaughtering operations, where the continuing presence of a Federal inspector will be maintained. It will not mandate adoption of any particular type of quality control system as a prerequisite to inspection. Establishments will remain free to employ whatever systems fit their own needs, so long as regulatory compliance is maintained. The bill will also not automatically reduce the amount of time spent by an inspector at each and every establishment. Should the Secretary determine that it is necessary, the number of inspectors in some establishments could actually be increased. One of the key benefits of the bill will, in fact, be the way in which it will serve to increase the public health protection by enabling the Secretary to utilize his resources where they will do the most good.

Another major factor which recommends the bill is the fact that it will save money. USDA has estimated that passage of this legislation will generate some $68 million in savings during its 5-year phase in period. The Department then anticipates yearly savings of approximately $27 million.

Obviously, passage of this legislation would therefore be extremely well timed. In the current budget environment, Congress can ill afford the luxury of failing to act in an area where there is clear consensus for change, where we have the opportunity to modernize an important public health program, and where we can realize such substantial savings. The current dilemma faced by the inspection program also dictates that we take action. As we have seen in recent weeks, under current budgetary constraints, the Department has had difficulty accommodating new requests for inspection services. While we seem to have gotten past the most recent crisis, we need to act now to head off the future risk of jobs going unfilled and a significant segment of the food and argicultural sector being unduly constrained in its daily operation, to the overall detriment of producers, packers, and consumers alike. By endorsing the status quo, we merely perpetuate these problems. By passing this legislation we begin the process of allowing for more sensible administration of the inspection system, both by eliminating unnecessary expenditures and by freeing up resources for use where they are most needed.

I, therefore, am convinced that we face a rare opportunity through this legislation to both improve the protection of the consuming public and to reduce unnecessary expenditures on behalf of the taxpayer. I urge support of the Processed Products Inspection Improvement Act of 1986 as a means of accomplishing such worthy goals.

CANTERBURY ELEMENTARY SCHOOL WINS NATIONAL AWARD

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, although much has been said and written about the lack of intergenerational communication in our society, few will dispute the fact that a special relationship exists between children and the elderly.

The students and staff of Canterbury Elementary School of Cleveland Heights, OH, located in my district, have made a special effort to encourage and cultivate that relationship by annually sponsoring a Senior Citizens Day. In recognition of that program, the school was recently awarded a "Golden Achievement Award" by the National School Public Relations Association.

Mr. Speaker, Canterbury School is completing its first successful year as a magnet school with a special emphasis on communications skills. One of the goals of the school is to increase communications with the community, of which senior adults are a very special part. Because many seniors are retired and are longtime residents of the community, the Canterbury students believed that seniors would welcome contact with the school beyond their yearly visit to vote. They decided to invite not only the grandparents of Canterbury students to Senior Citizens Day, but extended the invitation to all senior adults of the school area.

Through extensive planning and the participation of students, teachers, parents, the community liaison coordinator and public relations director, the word was spread throughout the senior community through senior adult groups, local churches and temples and the distribution of posters and flyers. Soon, Senior Citizens Day had grown to Senior Citizens Month.

Mr. Speaker, it was a smashing success. Working under the theme "Communicating With the Young at Heart," the Canterbury family honored senior citizens during the entire month of November 1985. Some of the activities included:

A senior adult who was a former television show host gave a television production workshop with fifth grade students using the school's video equipment.

Several senior adults were invited to share the art of storytelling with many classes.

A grandfather showed fourth grade students the art of glass designs.

A senior adult who is a world traveler and museum docent shared pictures and adventures from his recent trip to Europe and Asia.

Kids on the Block, a touring puppet show, presented a show on aging which heightened student awareness of the capabilities and desires of some senior adults.

Senior adults were invited to join students and the Canterbury art teacher to work together on projects.

Municipal Judge Jean Murrill Capers spoke to an assembly of senior adults, students and parents.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of Senior Citizens Month, many senior adults have stayed on at Canterbury School as permanent volunteers, others have come in to conduct special projects and still others have donated books to the school library. The students have benefited also, by gaining a better understanding of the aging process, increasing their respect for senior adults, and increasing sensitivity toward our senior adult population.

On behalf of the residents of the 21st District of Ohio, I wish to congratulate Principal Katie Shorter, students, teachers, staff and parents of Canterbury Elementary School on receipt of the National School Public Relations Association 1986 Golden Achievement Award and on its successful efforts to communicate and interact with one of our community's most valuable resources—our senior adults.

TORT LAW CRISIS

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, continuing in my effort to bring pertinent information on the tort law crisis to the attention of my colleagues, I trust they will find this commentary from the December 1985 issue of Financier, written by Robert D. Kilpatrick, chairman of the CIGNA Corp., of interest.

SUPERFUND INSURANCE PROBLEMS SYMPTOM OF FLAWS IN TORT SYSTEM

(By Robert D. Kilpatrick)

Superfund legislation, because of its extraordinary extension of personal responsibility and retroactivity, is making even worse the problems the property-casualty insurance industry already faces, Mr. Kilpatrick contends in this article written for Financier, and is making insurance for environmental liability exceedingly difficult and costly to obtain. The Chairman of CIGNA puts the environmental difficulties in the larger context of the fundamental crisis in the US tort system, which must be dealt with as a matter of economic and financial urgency.

Last month, newspapers across the US reported that as many as 35 hazardous-waste facilities might be forced to close because they could not secure the liability insurance they needed to remain open.

To insurers and their customers, the story was not new, but a reiteration of many articles that have appeared over the past year describing the plight of such disparate groups as municipalities, doctors, truckers, day-care center managers, business involved in high-risk enterprises, even the members of corporate boards. Each one of these stories reported on the difficulties these groups faced in finding liability insurance and, once they did find it, the increased expense they incurred to obtain it. Many of the stories left the reader with an impression that the insurance industry was the principal villain.

That simply is not true. Certainly, we are responsible for making the decisions that a particular risk is no longer insurable, or that to take on the risk we must charge a great deal more than we did when the policy was originally written.

What is missing from the discussion is a description of the root cause of the problem.

It is not the major losses suffered by the property-casualty industry during the recent cyclical downturn—although they were the worst in history.

It is not a new underwriting philosophy that says we only accept business from certain kinds of clients.

SERIES OF DEBILITATING EVENTS

It is a recognition of a major and deeply concerning change in our legal system that has been developing over the past 20 to 30 years and now has triggered a series of debilitating events affecting many businesses and individuals.

Consider the following facts regarding only one class of insurance: Medical malpractice:

From 1974 through 1983, the average medical malpractice plantiff's award increased by more then 400%.

The number of medical malpractice awards higher than $1 million increased from four in 1974 to 70 in 1983.

During the '70s there were two to three medical malpractice suits filed for every 100 doctors; in 1983, there were 16 for every 100 doctors.

To help void malpractice suits, doctors now order more tests than in the past, at an additional cost estimated by the American Medical Association to be as high as $40 billion a year.

Even a lawsuit defended successfully by a doctor involves substantial cost to the doctor and his or her insurer.

One of the reasons for the continuing escalation in the number of court actions associated with liability and personal injury in this country is the contingent-fee system. This arrangement frequently allows a lawyer to reap a reward from bringing a lawsuit that is completely disproportionate to the reasonable value of his services.

Moreover, there is little disincentive to filing non-meritorious claims. Under the legal system used in most countries, the loser in a court battle has to pay all legal costs for both sides. In the US, each side is ordinarily required to pay its own legal costs, regardless of the outcome.

STRETCHING THE ANCIENT RULE

The situation in this country has been complicated by a series of court decisions that have interpreted insurance contracts far more broadly than the parties' original intent and expectation, thus creating insurance coverage where none had existed or was expected when premiums were collected. Further, in underlying tort litigation, courts have severely stretched the ancient common-law rule that faults must be present before liability is assigned, and that defendants should be liable only for damages that they actually caused.

Against this background, insurers increasingly find themselves caught in a juridical twilight zone—a gray area in which the laws of probability and the established contractural elements which make it possible to insure risk have lost their substance and meaning.

This unpredictability, coupled with the extraordinary financial awards being granted by courts and juries, has struck at the very heart of the insurers industry's existence: Its ability to estimate the probabilities and extent of loss, to spread the risk and to define with some precision the nature and type of risk against which the insurance contract is written.

These concerns—the lack of predictability, judicial expansion of insurance policies and highly inflated jury awards—are compelling reasons why the proper pricing of certain types of liability risks has become all but impossible. And even when it is possible, the premium that must be charged frequently makes the protection far more expensive.

Nowhere is the problem more evident or complicated than in the area of environmental pollution. Since the early '70's, pollution risks have been specifically excluded from general liability coverages except for what are described as 'sudden and accidental" discharges.

EXCLUSION HAS BEEN NULLIFIED

In some jurisdictions, this exclusion, though adopted in good faith by insured and insurer alike, frequently has been nullified. Certainly the insurance industry will play by the rules, and it will adapt to the rules as the dynamics of the business change. But no one can be expected to do business in an environment where very little stability or predictability exists.

As to the interpretation of policy provisions, there is relatively little uniformity from state to state or even court to court. And the growth in the magnitude of potential awards has been equally disturbing: In the past three years alone, pollution claims under comprehensive general liability coverages have increased 600%.

A classic example of the difficulties insurers face in assessing environmental-pollution risk arose several years ago in the New Jersey community of Jackson Township. A state appellate court approved a $5.6 million award to families whose wells were contaminated by gradual seepage from a town dump.

Insurers were ordered to reimburse the Township for that amount—despite the fact that there was an exclusion in all but one of the Township's policies that denied coverage unless the pollution was "sudden and accidental."

The court ruled that the gradual seepage came within the exception for "sudden and accidental" discharges because it took the phrase "sudden and accidental" to mean no more than "unexpected and unintended."

When such judgments are possible, when such long-established concepts have lost their meaning, clearly, the result is a dearth of coverage, even at higher premium rates.

Another important example is reflected in the ongoing debate over the Superfund legislation.

UNFORESEEN AND RETROACTIVE

As part of the 1980 enactment of Superfund to clean up the nation's most-hazardous-waste dump-sites, Congress established a $1.6-billion trust fund to expedite the effort over a five-year period. A key provision of the bill stated that waste generators and transporters as well as owners and operators of the sites would be liable for the clean-up costs. Simply, the bill created an unforeseen and retroactive liability.

Unfortunately, the problem that Superfund was intended to solve turned out to be far more massive than anticipated. The Insurance Information Institute now estimates that there are between 5,000 and 20,000 sites at which removal or remedial measures will be required. To get started expeditiously, the Environmental Protection Agency established a national priority list of the 400 worst toxic-waste dumps. Since then, however, EPA has reported that there are at least 2,200 sites which demand immediate attention.

Results thus far are certainly less than encouraging. Since passage of the act that established Superfund, only six sites have been cleaned up and capped. There are, however, more than 200 lawsuits pending.

Why? Because of the litigious nature of our society. The Federal Government sues the parties potentially responsible for the toxic waste; the potentially responsible parties defend against Government and sue each other to avoid or spread the cost; then defendants sue their insurance companies to recover both clean-up costs and the money spent on legal defenses.

LIABILITY WITHOUT FAULT

Despite its many flaws, the Superfund process might yet produce the results originally intended—if the traditional concepts of fault and limiting liability to damages actually caused were still applied. They are not, however, because the program is built on the concepts that liability does not require fault and that a party can be held responsible for damages it did not cause.

Thus, under the prevailing theory of "joint and several" liability in both Federal and some state clean-up cases, anyone who has been in any way connected with the offending site can be held liable for the full cost of clean-up, no matter how inconsequential the original involvement may have been.

This means that any generator, any transporter, any waste-site owner or operator can be held responsible for full costs even if what it did was totally without fault and had only the most trivial consequences.

It appears to me that the Superfund program, as implemented, is both unfair and inefficient. It saddles businesses with enormous retroactive liability without fault; a great danger exists that some courts will allow those businesses to pass that liability to their insurers—liability that was never anticipated or made the subject of insurance coverage.

Further, it squanders significant sums on litigation expenses that instead could be spent on waste clean-up. If costs continue at present levels, it is estimated that total litigation expenses could rise to more than $8 billion. If two-thirds to three-quarters of Superfund litigation costs could be eliminated, 400 to 450 additional sites could be cleaned up for these amounts.

REDUCE LITIGATION EXPENSE

But that demands a restraint that Congress has yet to impose on Superfund. Any reform movement—to be even moderately effective—must focus on the reduction of litigation expense as well as on bringing loss payments under control.

The magnitude of the total clean-up cost is still not clear, but estimates range from EPA's $20 billion to the Office of Technology Assessment's $100 billion. Some, however, put the cost nearer to $250 billion.

What is abundantly clear, however, is that hazardous-waste sites need to be attacked with picks and shovels, rather than with briefcases and depositions, or the cost of cleaning up the environment will be much greater than necessary.

Lloyd's of London, the source for much of the reinsurance that is used by the US property-casualty insurance industry to spread the major risks, has made it abundantly clear that it is not prepared to accept pollution-related risks in the US until some reforms have been achieved.

In a recent speech, the Chairman of Lloyd's, Peter Miller, called upon US regulators and legislators to exercise, "imaginative and bold leadership to enact reform of the laws governing torts—injuries or wrongs." He declared that the London group simply will not accept the prevailing uncertainties.

In addition to tort-law reform, what is desperately needed is a concerted effort at every level of society to question the benefits we obtain from the current tort system.

This is not meant to suggest that the right to a trail by jury and reasonable access to legal advice should be in any way diminished. To the contrary, by reexamining a number of the elements of the liability process as it now exists, we could improve the system and provide more opportunity for court review of items of significance.

There is a need to encourage the greater use of arbitration and mediation to help reduce court costs and shorten the time to reach a fair solution. The use of some form of alternate dispute-resolution techniques wouuld go a long way to improve the efficiency of the current system without putting at risk the rights guaranteed by our system of laws.

At the same time, the courts should discourage frivolous or nuisance suits. There is an increasing tendency for litigation to be initiated simply to provide a means of forcing payments to avoid the high cost of defending what is obviously a questionable claim.

STRUCTURE RELATED TO VALUE

Further, serious study should be given to the abuses associated with the contingency-fee concept. Everyone should have access to proper legal advice, but some form of graduated fee-structure should be developed that bears a direct relationship to the time, effort, skill and value to the client of the service rendered.

Recognizing the time it has taken for the current abuses to develop, it is clear that no easy or quick solution to the current problem regarding liability and injury issues will be established.

It is terribly important, however, that efforts to change the process be explored and implemented wherever possible. If that is not done, the current problems facing limited segments of society in not being able to obtain insurance against future claims will spread to all segments of business and personal interaction.

The effect will be that individuals and businesses will have no protection against the cost of defending themselves against totally unfounded and unwarranted legal actions that could take all of their funds to pay for legal defense fees—only to discover that, after the expenditures, the claim was without merit.

SYMPTOM OF A GREATER CRISIS

The current insurance availability issue—as important as it is to those involved—is only a symptom of a much more important crisis in our tort system that must be given immediate and serious consideration by all segments of our society.

If we do not take the steps necessary to correct the problem, we put at risk the financial and personal security of every business and citizen in this nation.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues on "Armenian Martyrs' Day" to pay tribute to the victims of the Armenian genocide of 1915–23.

Between 1915 and 1923 over 1 million Armenian people were arrested, sent into exile, and brutally murdered by the Ottoman empire. Under the Ottoman empire, the Armenians were viewed as a threat to the government because of their differing religious and cultural practices. During the 8-year period between 1915 and 1923 the Armenian people occupying present-day Turkey were systematically executed for no greater crime than that of their Armenian heritage. This is an atrocity which to this day does not receive enough of the critical attention it deserves.

We cannot allow this historical crime to fade in our memories. To do so would invite the recurrence of a similar violation of human rights. By recognizing April 24 as "Armenian Martyrs' Day," Congress is expressing its abhorrence to all genocide. Furthermore, in recognizing "Armenian Martyrs' Day" we are also honoring the lives of the Armenian victims.

Today we express our outrage concerning this inexcusable violation of human rights. In marking this day as the anniversary of the Armenian genocide, we hope to prevent similar acts in the future. We honor those who fell victim to the crimes of inhumanity, and hope that no other race of people nor individual be persecuted on the basis of their cultural heritage or religious preferences—which are fundamental human rights.

OPPOSING HONORARIUM RULES CHANGES

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, most people don't understand how parliamentary procedure is sometimes used to set policy. That's what happened yesterday when a provision to increase the amount of honoraria Members can receive was suddenly brought up for a vote, without any notice, and passed without any debate.

Apparenty, certain Members were trying to change the rules so they could make more money from speeches. I strongly oppose this measure, and the way it was handled.

This afternoon the House reversed yesterday's action and I voted with the majority.

I'm one Member of Congress who believes that when we want to give ourselves the opportunity to make more money from honoraria, we should bring it up for full discussion and debate. We should use the "front door" whenever we change our rules—we shouldn't try and slip changes quietly through the "back door."

SYLMAR HIGH SCHOOL

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Sylmar High School. September of this year will mark this outstanding school's 25th anniversary. I am proud to share some of Sylmar High School's accomplishments with my colleagues.

Sylmar opened its doors in September 1961. Current enrollment is 1,600 students. The student body is a culturally diverse one. Sylmar has students from over 20 different countries who speak nine languages.

Sylmar High School's more than 300 classes are designed to fill the educational needs of all. Courses in many different subjects are available from remedial to college level. The curriculum includes advanced courses for the college bound, English as as second language courses, vocational courses, computer courses, and courses for students with special needs. In addition to classes on the campus, courses may be arranged at the North Valley Occupational Center and some of the local colleges.

Many programs provide the students a great variety of experiences. Close-Up allows firsthand experience with the Federal Government, and the Rotary Youth Leadership Awards Conference enables selected students to develop their leadership skills. The Mathematics, Engineering and Science Association [MESA] provides encouragement and aid for minority students who are interested in these fields.

Many forms of recognition are given for student achievement. Two have recently been honored by the Los Angeles City Youth Commission as outstanding students. In addition, for the last 2 years, outstanding seniors have been awarded the Presidential Academic Fitness Award.

Much of Sylmar High School's success results from the efforts of a dedicated staff. A quarter of the staff has earned advanced degrees, including three doctorates. Most of the staff constantly improve their skills through workshops, in-service classes and National Science Foundation and National Endowment for the Humanities Programs. A dedication to learning is shown by the fact that many of the faculty belong to professional organizations. Not just passive members, but active leaders—several hold local, State and national office in these professional groups. The faculty does not limit itself to educational interest but also participates in community service, religious, and youth organizations.

Over the years, the staff has endeavored to provide the best educational experiences possible for students, and all are dedicated to continue these efforts in the future. It is my distinct pleasure to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Sylmar High School on the occasion of its 25th anniversary. It is an honor to have such a fine educational institution in the 26th District.

THE TALE OF TWO ALLIES

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reflect briefly on a tale of two allies, a true story played out during last week's raid against Libyan-sponsored terrorism.

I am reassured by one part of the story, the support given the United States by the British Government and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. By allowing F–111 fighter-bombers to take off from British airfields as part of the attack plan, Britain proved itself a faithful ally unintimidated by Col. Mu'ammar Qadhafi's ever-present threats. The United Kingdom recognized that the risks incurred by standing up to Qadhafi are far outweighed by the risks of appeasing him.

The disappointing part of the story is the hand-wringing reluctance practiced by France when asked to allow those same American warplanes to fly over its territory. Our so-called ally refused, thereby doubling the length of the mission and exposing airmen to the dangerous fatigue of a 7-hour flight to their targets.

I can express no gratefulness to the French. However, Qadhafi himself has taken the time to publicly thank them.

Both Britain and France know the treachery practiced by Libyan-backed terrorists. Yet, how could France find anything except a firm response to be best for the safety of citizens worldwide?

Considering the many attacks in Europe within recent years, our interest in providing a deterrent to terrorism surely must be France's interest also. Considering Libya's complex of terrorist training camps that teach people to attack Paris and London as well as Washington, America's resolve to put those dens out of action surely should be France's resolve. And considering terrorism looks at its world of victims with a cold eye that cares little about nationalities, perhaps France should stop trying to show an olive branch to a leader who is bent on violence and destruction.

The dictionary defines "alliance" as an association to further the common interests of the members. France defies the dictionary and jars our trust. Let us remember such unreliability when we contemplate supporting France. At the same time, let us gratefully remember Britain, a nation that backed us as we fought terrorism.

FUEL USE ACT REPEAL—THE TIME IS RIGHT

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, today, along with many of my colleagues from energy-producing States, some of whom serve with me on the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, I am introducing legislation to repeal the prohibition on the use of petroleum and natural gas as boiler fuels by utilities and large industrial users.

The Fuel Use Act of 1978, by imposing restrictions on the use of oil and natural gas to fuel industrial or utility boilers, reduced the demand for natural gas which was then a vastly underpriced commodity. Years of regulation had kept the price of natural gas low in relation to other fuels which artificially stimulated the demand for natural gas, especially among residential users. This situation did nothing, however, to encourage exploration, drilling, and production of natural gas.

As a result of the passage of the Fuel Use Act, large volume consumers of natural gas shifted to alternative energy sources such as coal. This action improved supplies of natural gas so much that in 1981 the provisions in the act prohibiting the use of natural gas in existing powerplants and utilities was repealed. New plants, however, are still prevented from using natural gas or oil.

Now, at a time of soaring surpluses of oil and gas—which historically, because of its competitive market price, has been the target of the Fuel Use Act—is the time to repeal the prohibitions on the use of both natural gas and oil. This restriction has inhibited market forces by dictating fuel choices for utilities and industrial users. We should now return the choice to marketplace forces.

I commend my colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee for their help in drafting this proposal and appreciate the interest both subcommittee Chairman SHARP and committee Chairman DINGELL have shown in this effort. There is a broad base of support for this legislation in the energy exploration and production industries, as well as among industrial and powerplant energy consumers. With this as a base, I am sure that we can report this bill favorably to the House in the near future.

This is a long-term effort that will help relieve the strain imposed on the energy-producing States by the current oil price decline and the resultant oversupply. There are other efforts underway to provide more direct and immediate relief to the energy industry and protection for our national security interests, but this is an important first step to ensure that our domestic producers stay in the business of finding and producing oil and natural as. I encourage my colleagues to review this measure, giving full consideration to the need to maintain our domestic production capability for reasons of both national and economic security.

BEALE AIR FORCE BASE AID FLOOD VICTIMS

HON. GENE CHAPPIE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. CHAPPIE. Mr. Speaker, when the Yuba River levee broke recently, sending a mountain of angry water to the communities of Linda and Olivehurst, CA, people didn't have much time to react. They grabbed their family members, got into their cars and started to drive. Many of those who had nowhere else to turn fled to Beale Air Force Base where they were greeted with open arms.

Because of their extraordinary efforts on behalf of the flood victims, the people at Beale Air Force Base deserve special recognition. In the midst of a crisis, their quick action and compassion for their neighbors made life much more bearable for those whose homes and personal property were destroyed. Their kindness to the flood victims is an inspiration to all of us.

Because of the round-the-clock efforts of the many volunteers at Beale, flood victims were given food, shelter, medical care, and comfort. Nine shelters were set up around the base to aid the nearly 6,000 victims who sought refuge there. Some 350 families on the base opened their homes to the flood victims for nearly a week.

Even after the waters receded and the flood victims went home, volunteers from Beale continued to lend a hand by delivering food, clothing, and other assistance to those who needed it in the flood affected counties.

I urge my colleagues to join me in commending those at Beale Air Force Base whose hard work and compassion were so instrumental in helping Californians cope with the recent flood disaster.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE A.W. LUGG & CO., KNOXVILLE, TIOGA COUNTY, PA

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have just recently learned that the A.W. Lugg & Co. of Knoxville, PA, will be celebrating its 100th anniversary during the month of May.

This is a remarkable accomplishment and I wanted to personally congratulate you along with all of the other citizens of Knoxville, PA, in this truly historic anniversary.

To have served all of the fine people of Knoxville for this significant period of time, in both an honest and fair manner, is a sterling tribute to the American free enterprise system. I can well imagine all of the hard work, long hours and perseverance the Lugg family has devoted to making a success out of the A.W. Lugg & Co. and I am sure that there has been a lot of satisfaction in the service that you have provided to the community.

My best wishes for many, many more successful years.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. JULIUS MASTRO

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, on May 4, 1986, friends, family, and coworkers will gather together with the Alumni Association of Drew University in Madison, NJ, to honor Dr. Julius Mastro on the occasion of his retirement. For over 25 years Dr. Mastro has served this fine institution in a manner consistent with the highest standards in his roles as professor and former political science chairperson.

Julius distinguished career at Drew began in 1960 with a position as a part-time instructor. After later becoming a full-time faculty member he served as chairman of the political science department from 1971–76.

Outside of his teaching experience Julius embodies the entrepreneurial spirit; he has owned a shoe store and presently owns a grain store. He is also widely known for his community, civic, and political involvement. He has selflessly given of his time to serve as a member of the board of education, the planning board, and the town council in his hometown of Bernardsville, NJ.

Julius has always had an interest in utilizing his academic training to impact upon the public policy process. Toward this end he has served as a political consultant to such organizations as the New Jersey League of Municipalities, and several Eagleton Institute programs including the newly elected officials organization. He has also served as a member of the Presidential Commission on Higher Education.

Recently, Dr. Mastro was named the initial recipient of the Drew Scholar/Teacher Award. This Presidential citation has been created to honor distinguished service to Drew University and I cannot think of a more deserving person to receive this inaugural honor.

The impact Julius Mastro has had on the thousands of young men and women he has taught at Drew and those of us who have come to know him as a friend are perhaps the greatest barometer of his success. I take great pleasure in joining with his friends and colleagues in saluting Dr. Julius Mastro for his contributions to the communities he has touched and in wishing him and his family the best for a very happy and healthy retirement.

SMALL BUSINESS ACT OF 1986

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, last week I was joined by 17 of my colleagues in introducing legislation to restructure the Small Business Administration. Our bill, the Small Business Act of 1986, would end SBA's wasteful and inefficient credit programs, and transfer the agency to the Department of Commerce where it will be given greater visibility in the Federal Government.

The most popular and effective programs would be retained. They include the Office of Advocacy, procurement assistance, minority set-asides, and the volunteer counseling programs. More important, the SBA would be given Cabinet level presence through the Secretary of Commerce, a position unmatched by the current Administrator.

The unique aspect of this legislation is that it will bring an end to the countless reports of abuse and mismanagement in the SBA. It will elevate small business concerns in the Federal Government. And it will do all this while saving the taxpayers $5 billion over the next 3 years.

Most qualified economists will tell you that including this proposal as part of an overall deficit reduction package will improve economic opportunities for small businesses. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the Small Business Act of 1986, and join those of us who want to provide the best economic climate for small businesses to compete.

ALABAMA SCHOOLS RECOGNIZED FOR EXCELLENCE

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, for the past 3 years, the U.S. Department of Education has conducted a Secondary School Recognition Program to focus national attention on schools that are doing an exceptional job of educating their students. This year marks the first time, however, that the Department has established a recognition program for elementary schools. Some 509 elementary schools from across the country were nominated by chief State school officers in 49 States, the District of Columbia, and the Department of Defense Overseas Dependents' Schools. With so many outstanding schools being considered for the overall educational program, you can understand if I take just a few moments to boast about the fact that not one, but three elementary schools from Alabama were selected for final consideration in the 1985–86 Elementary School Recognition Program—Valley Elementary School in Pelham, AL, Cahaba Heights Community School, and Vestavia Hills Elementary School-West, which both happen to be located in Jefferson County, AL, in my congressional district.

Both Cahaba Heights and Vestavia Hills have a number of special features which set them apart from many elementary schools and certainly more than qualify them to receive special recognition from the Department of Education. Cahaba Heights, for example, has strong participation by and interaction among its administrators, teachers, and parents. It has a strong and effective volunteer program, as well as a number of extracurricular activities for students, including its math teams, chess and computer clubs, Olympics of the Mind teams, school newspaper, "The Chatterbox," and its student-operated store.

The curriculum and staff at Vestavia Hills focuses its efforts on enhancing the self-concept and feelings of success of each child. In addition to its well-rounded staff and faculty, the school has teachers who are specially trained for various areas of exceptional children, including educably mentally retarded, multiple handicapped, speech therapy, and talented and gifted. It also has a dedicated parent-volunteer group, and ranked first in the State of Alabama in 1983 and second in 1984 and 1985 in overall performance in the Alabama State Testing Program.

I cannot stress enough the importance of providing our children, tomorrow's future leaders, with the educational skills they must possess if the United States is to retain its place among the world's technologically advanced nations. I commend Cahaba Heights Community School, Vestavia Hills Elementary School-West, and Valley Elementary School on being nationally recognized for their development of solid curriculums focusing on building basic skills, knowledge, character, values, and self-discipline for the students they serve. I wish them all the best as they now await final notification of those schools that will be invited to the Nation's Capital in the fall to participate in a national recognition ceremony and receive a specially designed flag symbolizing outstanding educational achievement.

LOIS M. TEER HONORED WITH NEW JERSEY PRIDE AWARD

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to the achievements of one of my constituents, Lois M. Teer of Camden, NJ, in the area of community development. As an active member of my district, Lois Teer has demonstrated dedication to her neighbors and to her community. This admirable quality has been translated in her worthwhile campaign to help redevelop the city of Camden and instill in residents a sense of pride in their community and in their State.

On May 1, 1986, Lois will be honored with a New Jersey Pride Award for her distinguished accomplishments in the area of Community Development. The New Jersey Pride Awards were initiated last year by the New Jersey Monthly in order to focus attention on the achievements of individuals who have made lasting contributions to the State of New Jersey. Seven other distinguished New Jerseyites will also be honored for their contributions in other areas. As a way of furthering the spirit of generosity and dedication that pervades these awards, organizers of the New Jersey Pride celebration will be hosting this event in order to benefit the New Jersey Special Olympics, a sports training and athletic competition program for mentally retarded children and adults. This worthwhile charity addresses the needs of 200,000 New Jerseyites or 3 percent of the State's population.

I am proud to represent Lois Teer and am impressed by the results of her efforts in the area of community development. In 1982, Lois designed and spearheaded a marketing campaign geared toward improving the image of the city of Camden. Having represented Camden in the Congress for over a decade, I am aware of the distressing economic and developmental problems this city faces. I am also aware of the dedication and perserverance of many residents such as Lois Teer who are working to attain a rejuvenation of this city.

Lois Teer's marketing campaign was focused on encouraging middle-income home buyers to come into the city and buy and renovate abandoned homes. This program involves two very key concepts in a city such as Camden: The need for historic preservation and the need to ensure that families will return and populate these abandoned homes.

In the beginning of this program, a trickle of "urban pioneers" participated. Because of Lois Teer's hard work and dedication, this trickle has grown into a respectable interest on the part of developers, investors, and families. We are already beginning to see the results of this effort. I wanted to urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating Lois Teer for her commendable achievements and in commending New Jersey Monthly for granting recognition to her efforts and for organizing this timely event. I would also like to extend to Lois M. Teer my best wishes for continued success in her endeavors.

HONORED FOR OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENTS

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. Congress the outstanding achievements of Mr. Frank Grady, who is being honored on May 1 at a retirement dinner for his contributions and faithful service to the Tri-County United Way of Harrisburg, PA.

Frank Grady's professional resume reflects a man who has devoted his entire life to improving the quality of life for others. Some of those who know Frank see his ability to lead and develop volunteer leadership as his greatest strengths. He has written and published several articles on such topics as voluntarism, campaigning, and budgeting; all of which are key elements of the successful United Way campaign.

Since 1972, Frank Grady has served as the executive vice president of the Tri-County United Way of Harrisburg primarily responsible for campaign direction and supervision of community planning, allocations, agency relations, communications, and labor relations programs. Under his leadership, 24 agencies have been added to the United Way; the Tri-County was one of the first in the Nation to adopt an open admissions policy; and became the first United Way in the State of Pennsylvania to conduct a cooperative campaign with the three health agencies.

Mr. Speaker, I have come no where near listing all of Frank Grady's activities and accomplishments with the United Way, but I must admit that those previously mentioned would seem to be enough to satisfy most of us in a lifetime. In addition to his work with United Way, he has served in various capacities with the Rotary Club of Harrisburg; the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce; Mayor's Advisory Committee, the Harrisburg Area Crime Clinic; Hampden Township Planning Commission and the list goes on and on and on.

Frank Grady is an outstanding example of dedication and excellence. He will undoubtedly leave a lasting imprint on the Tri-County United Way. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting this fine man. He has truly enriched the lives of all who have been privileged to know him and work with him.

AMY BULL CRIST CELEBRATES HER BIRTHDAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of our colleagues a celebration that will be held this weekend in Orange County, NY, marking the 80th birthday of Orange County's first lady, Amy Bull Crist.

It is hard to describe Amy to people who are not from our area, because she is such a living legend to us that mere words cannot convey the energy, the compassion, and the dedication of this dynamic lady to anyone who has never had the pleasure of meeting her.

Amy is a direct descendant of William Bull, one of the original settlers of Orange County, NY. With such a heritage, Amy always felt that her responsibility was service to others.

Starting her career as a teacher in a one-room schoolhouse, Amy taught the three R's generations of students which she always held to be the foundation of a fine education.

Years later, upon her retirement as district superintendent for the Orange-Ulster Board of Cooperative Educational Services, the regents of the University of New York cited her as a recipient of the James E. Allen, Jr., Memorial Award for distinguished service to education. In the 50 years between these events, Amy Bull Crist touched countless lives and made our region a better place in which to live.

To list all of Amy's accomplishments would take more time than is available. Let me just touch upon her help in founding the Orange County Community College, her founding of Occupations, Inc., as a not-for-profit, sheltered workshop for the handicapped, and her providing of medical services for students too needy to afford them as just a few examples of her goodness and her many accomplishments.

A large crowd will be gathering this weekend for Amy's birthday party. Greetings will be sent from her many friends and loved ones all over the Nation, including the President and Mrs. Reagan. The proceeds from the party will be donated to Amy's favorite charities.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join in wishing Amy Bull Crist a happy birthday, and thanking her for her years of giving for all of us.

THE BUDGET: NOT A HARD CHOICE

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call my colleagues' attention to the remarks yesterday by James C. Miller III, Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. Miller's comments once again cast doubt on whether the White House is at all sincere in wanting a Federal budget for fiscal year 1987.

Mr. Miller was asked whether he would prefer no budget to one that departs from President Reagan's priorities—priorities, I might add, which have been rejected in this Chamber and in the other body by the President's own party.

Mr. Miller told reporters, "That's a hard choice."

We should be clear, Mr. Speaker, that it's not a hard choice for many of us in this House.

We want a budget.

We are anxious to negotiate with the administration and our colleagues in the other body for a budget.

And we are not willing to turn over to some automatic pilot the decisions we were elected to make.

A GIFT OF BLOOD IS A GIFT OF LIFE

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. RAPLH M. HALL. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to draw attention to the wonderful record set by two blood donors in Tyler, TX, who have given a pint of blood over 100 times.

James F. Barnes, a teacher at Tyler Junior College, and Frank Sewell, vice president, InterFirst Bank in Tyler, have donated over 12½ gallons of blood at Stewart Blood Center, the regional blood bank furnishing blood and blood components to hospitals in 31 counties in east Texas.

As volunteer donors, both of these men recognize the need for blood to sustain life of patients who cannot live without transfusion of donor-given blood.

The marvelous record set by these two fine men serves as an example of true giving and an inspiration to other men and women in good health to take the time to share their life's blood with others.

This gesture is significant, for truly a gift of blood is a gift of life.

GRAMM-RUDMAN GOES TO COURT

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, earlier today the U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments about the constitutionality of deficit-reduction legislation known as Gramm-Rudman.

I don't know if Gramm-Rudman is constitutional, but I do know it's unfair and unwise. That's why I voted against it and that's why I'm still opposed to it.

The authors of the Gramm-Rudman legislation say it is merely a means by which the Federal Government will be forced to balance its checkbook by 1991. It mandates across-the-board cuts in almost every area of Government spending except Social Security.

My own view is that Gramm-Rudman is the wrong way to deal with the problem of the Federal deficit. Someone remarked once that it was a bad idea whose time had come. I don't think this country, or this Congress, has time to waste on bad ideas.

Gramm-Rudman is a harsh example of the contracting out of congressional responsibility. It takes the hard budget decisions that voters elected Members of Congress to make, and turns them over to Government computers. Well, computers don't have to answer to the voters at election time.

Mr. Speaker, balancing the Federal budget is one of my top priorities, but I want to do it line by line, item by item. I want to vote for budget cuts like we did last fall when we passed a budget reconciliation bill that cut $61 billion in Federal spending over 2 years.

That bill would have allowed us to reduce spending and reduce the deficit without hurting the programs America needs: Programs like Head Start, Meals On Wheels, Highway Construction, Veterans Health Care, Medicare, and Railroad Retirement.

In my own State of Maryland we've been especially hard-hit by Gramm-Rudman cuts. These cuts slash at programs and they hurt people. State budget experts expect a loss this year of Federal funds totaling about $16 million and a loss next year of more than $109 million.

Where will this loss be felt? In education for handicapped children, child nutrition programs, child support enforcement, revenue sharing and community development block grants.

In Maryland, Gramm-Rudman is also hurting thousands of dedicated Federal employees and retirees. It threatens pay raises for Federal workers and it eliminates COLA's for retirees. Both groups have already "given at the office" in terms of budget cutting and deficit reduction. Like our senior citizens, they shouldn't be expected to have to give again.

Gramm-Rudman had its day in court today. By July we'll know if it's a constitutional way to balance our budget. For many of us, however, the jury is already in on Gramm-Rudman. We find it guilty of being unfair, unjust, and unwarranted!

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, on April 24 in many communities in our great country Armenian Americans will take time to remember and reflect on the terrifying potential of man to act brutally toward others. April 24 marks a day of commemoration—a day commemorating the Armenian genocide. April 24 commemorates the systematic persecution and massacre of 1.5 million Armenians by the Ottoman Empire between 1915 and 1923.

There are many purposes in studying history. In the case of the Armenian genocide and the holocaust, we must ponder the barbaric acts man is capable of committing against man. We must keep this history before us and echo the outcries of Americans of that time against this tragedy. We must not let history be rewritten and the sentiments of past Presidents and Members of the Congress, who clearly established the truth of the reported massacres and other atrocities suffered by the Armenians at the hands of the Ottoman Empire, be twisted and silenced.

We cannot let our children or the people we represent forget that this destructive potential lives within the human spirit. This dark side of the human soul became a reality and resulted in what U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire Henry Morgenthau called in 1915 a "campaign of race extermination" of the Armenians by the Ottoman Turks.

April 24 is not a day just for Armenians to commemorate their losses and the atrocities committed against their families. People throughout the world should remember the victims of this brutal genocide. We must dwell on the dark side of humanity for in so doing I believe we can find the wisdom to overcome it.

On April 24 I will join many Armenian Americans who live in Connecticut in commemorating their tragic loss and the historic fact of the Armenian genocide. We will gather, as we do each year, to remember mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters who were lost and to renew our commitment to setting the history record straight in this year of 1987.

TRIBUTE TO PROFESSIONAL SECRETARIES

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join my colleagues today in recognizing the week of April 20–26, 1986, as "Professional Secretaries Week" and designating today, April 23, as "Secretaries Day." At this time, I'd like to take the opportunity to pay deserved tribute to the members of the secretarial profession and to recognize their invaluable contributions to business, government, and industry.

During my 26 years in government, I have come to appreciate and value highly the competent and efficient management skills of my secretarial staff. The backbone of the public and private sectors, government and industry, professional secretaries are the people behind the scenes upon whom we depend to get the job done and rely upon for the smooth daily operation of the workplace. Demonstrating excellence in many fields, secretaries have earned distinction of the highest order for commitment and dedication in their field.

In closing, I commend the members of the secretarial profession for their outstanding contributions and offer my deepest appreciation for their loyalty and professionalism in the performance of their duties. Thank you.

VICTIMS OF CRIME WEEK

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 297, and House Joint Resolution 570, designating this week as "Crime Victim's Week."

Crime has exacted a terrible toll on Americans at all levels of society. Crime victimizes those who have not been direct victims of violent crime, yet are afraid to leave their homes at night. Crime victimizes us when our children cannot go to school without being exposed to drug peddlers. Crime victimizes us when we must pay higher taxes and prices to cover the costs of crime. And most horrifyingly, crime victimizes those who are injured, robbed, or murdered in crimes of violence or incidents of terrorism. "Victims of Crime Week" touches all of us, just as crime has touched us all.

It is time to realize the terrible burden crime places on society, end the victimization we all endure.

This week is intended to acknowledge the victims of crime. And with it comes a commitment to reduce crime, for all of us.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation when it comes to the floor.

H.R. 4602

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, on April 21, 1986, the House passed a measure which I strongly support and is critical to the Nation's homebuyers. I refer, of course, to H.R. 4602, the FHA and GNMA Credit Commitment Assistance Act of 1986.

H.R. 4602 increases the limitation on the amount of Federal Housing Administration [FHA] commitments to insure loans from $57.4 to $95 billion and increases the limitation on the amount of Government National Mortgage Association [GNMA] commitments to guarantee mortgage backed securities from $65.3 to $100 billion. Currently, the FHA is authorized to provide mortgage insurance on up to $57.4 billion in mortgage loans in fiscal year 1986. Due to an unprecedented demand for FHA mortgage insurance, this limit will be reached well before the end of the fiscal year. GNMA reached its authorized limit of $65.3 billion in mortgage-backed securities on April 4 and stopped issuing additional mortgage-backed securities on that date.

In an effort to avoid similar last minute emergency measures in the future, this legislation also requires the Department of Housing and Urban Development to establish a tracking system and notify Congress when it appears that commitments for either program are being utilized at such a rate as to pose the possibility of running out of commitment authority before the end of the fiscal year.

This legislation is critical because low- and moderate-income families rely on FHA and VA home mortgage programs to assure their access to affordable housing and this situation is occuring at a time when other conditions are most favorable for homebuying and refinancing. I commend my colleagues for keeping faith with the commitment Congress has made to establish ceilings high enough to accommodate user demand for these programs.

REMEMBERING THE HOLOCAUST

HON. STAN LUNDINE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, during this Passover season, I would like to take a few moments to speak about a very worthwhile program that is being undertaken by several colleges throughout New York State.

As difficult as it is for people everywhere to contemplate the Holocaust, remembering the terrible events of that time is essential. Only through learning about the Holocaust can we and generations to follow prevent such tragedies from happening again. A program to educate young people about the Holocaust has been started in New York by Mr. Ernest Goldblum, an American whose parents perished in the Holocaust. The Mariem and Elias Goldblum Memorial Fund, started at the State University of New York College at Fredonia, encourages teaching programs and other activities through which people can learn about the Holocaust, its causes and effects. This immensely worthwhile program has expanded to several colleges in New York State and to universities in Vienna, Austria.

As the years go by and the number of witnesses and survivors of the Holocaust diminish, programs such as the one established by Mr. Goldblum in honor of his parents become increasingly important. The memory of the Holocaust and those who died during the "final solution" must not fade. I wish to commend and thank Mr. Goldblum for his efforts to educate and inform young people about the terrible consequences of ignorance and indifference.

THE 30TH DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA ARMENIANS SUPPORT COMMEMORATION OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, today thousands of Armenians are gathering together to remember one of the darkest moments in the history of man. In 1915, the Turkish Ottoman Empire launched a vicious campaign of genocide against the Armenian people. By 1923, 1.5 million Armenians had perished, and 500,000 more were exiled from their homeland. Then, the world was baffled by such a tremendous and hideous crime. Today, we have a word for what the Armenians suffered, and it is recognized as the greatest crime mankind has ever known: "genocide."

Few people on Earth know the sorrow and anguish that bears so heavily on Armenian history. But, as spokespersons of the victims of genocide have told us repeatedly, the act itself is only half the tragedy. Perhaps even more horrifying is the silence of the civilized world in the face of such horrible crimes. As Elie Wiesel, chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, said:

Before the planning of the final solution, Hitler asked, "Who remembers the Armenians?" He was right. No one remembered them, as no one remembered the Jews. Rejected by everyone, they felt expelled from history.

This rejection is not based on lack of evidence. The genocide of the Armenians has been confirmed by eyewitnesses Henry Morgenthau, U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, and Kemal Ataturk, founder of modern Turkey; by Raphael Lemkin, who coined the term "genocide" and almost singlehandedly incorporated it into international law; and by both President Carter and President Reagan. Rather, this denial comes from an unwillingness to face the evil of action in others, and the evil of nonaction in ourselves. For their cruelty, Armenians bear the scars; for our ignorance, humanity has suffered.

We Americans have a deep and enduring sense of justice. The morality of our people, though often obscured in the heat of political battle, can always be seen quiding the ship of American policy. This Nation cannot allow its alliance with Turkey to compromise its deeper sense of justice in the face of history. The Armenian genocide was one of the most devasting crimes against humanity the world has seen. By refusing to recognize it, the governments of both Turkey and the United States are perpetuating a dangerous and immoral lie, and are helping to keep open the possibility that somewhere, sometime, it may happen again.

In the name of the Armenians listed below who reside in the 30th District of California, I proclaim that we will never allow the genocide of the Armenian people to be forgotten. We will stand by the flame of truth and justice that has served as a beacon to both our nations, and to our common civilization.

Mr. Fred Vartanian, Ms. Beatrice Vartanian, Ms. Sandy Vartanian, the Bozanian Family, Dr. Aram Tolegian, Mr. John A. Stephanian, Mr. Suren Hagopian and Family, Mr. Leo Georgian, Mr. George Nersisian, Mrs. Aaronetta Ryan, Mr. Ed Hagopian.

SUCCESS TO THE FUND MILWAUKEE COALITION

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, as we begin work on a Federal budget for 1987, we need to lend an ear to local citizens who will be directly affected by our decisions. One local group that works to shape the Federal Government's spending priorities is the Fund Milwaukee Coalition. The coalition is an umbrella group representing 60 organizations that serve the hungry, homeless, and other needy citizens.

The Fund Milwaukee Coalition believes in the following principles: First, that it is critical to preserve funding for health care, jobs, education, and nutrition programs; second, that responsible cuts should be made in our military budget; third, that a planned, gradual reduction in the Federal deficit is necessary to ensure a healthy economy; fourth, a progressive, equitable tax structure is needed for both individuals and corporations.

The Fund Milwaukee Coalition has often discussed with me Federal budget priorities, especially the need for preserving the Community Development Block Grants Program. Recently, they presented me their Golden Ear award for listening and responding to their concerns. I am honored to receive this award, and I urge all Members of Congress to lend an ear to those constitutent groups who want to share their views on the Federal budget.

The Fund Milwaukee Coalition should be applauded for their commitment and vision in working to improve life for Milwaukee residents. I wish them success on their future efforts.

CUT THE RHETORIC ON THE CONTRAS—LET'S FIND A SOLUTION THAT WILL WORK

HON. STEPHEN L. NEAL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, in rereading some of the massive amount of material that has come across my desk concerning Contra funding, I came upon a superb article published in the Christian Science Monitor, in January of this year, and written by a distinguished scholar on Latin American affairs, Wayne S. Smith. The article neatly cuts through the rhetoric that has plagued debate on the House floor on this issue, clearly stating the problems we face in Nicaragua, the failings of the current policy, and suggesting a logical solution.

Mr. Smith finds little merit in the administration's current policy of applying pressure on the Nicaraguan Government through the Contras, which he says has only worsened the situation: Today, the Sandinistas are more dependent than ever on the Soviet Union and Cuba; their government is "less open to internal dialog;" and, the Nicaraguan Army is larger and more menacing to its neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, we have laid aside this issue for the time being, but I assume we will revisit Contra funding between now and the August recess. It would seem worthwhile for my colleagues to take this time to reflect again on the policy options available to us before we are in the thick of debate. Mr. Smith's article is a good starting point. I commend it to their attention:

The article follows:

WASHINGTON DISPUTE: HOW TO DEAL WITH NICARAGUA

(By Wayne S. Smith)

Is there really a new consensus in Washington with respect to Central America and what to do about it? Spokesmen for the Reagan administration insist that there is, and as proof point to what they see as growing agreement on Capitol Hill that the Sandinistas are taking Nicaragua toward Marxism-Leninism, that Nicaragua should not become a Soviet base, and that any assistance the Sandinistas may be giving to the Salvadorean guerrillas ought to be stopped. In fact, there is broad agreement on those points, but the agreement isn't new.

The debate has never been over whether or not the Sandinistas were Marxists or even if they were nice fellows or not. The overwhelming majority of those who strongly disagree with the administration's policy have all along recognized that Managua has a closer relationship with Moscow and Havana than the United States can be comfortable with, that the Sandinistas have been guilty of human rights violations, and that they are not democrats. In short, they represent a problem with which the U.S. must deal. Up to that point, there is broad agreement—and always has been. The disagreement comes over how best to deal with the problem.

The administration insists that we must keep the pressure on the Sandinistas by helping the "contras," but it cannot point to a single way in which helping them has improved the situation. It concedes that there are more Soviet and Cuban military personnel in Nicaragua now than before the contra operation began, and Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams has recently charged that those personnel are participating in combat. On that score the contra war has resulted in the opposite of what we would have wanted: in a greater Soviet-Cuban problem rather than in a reduced one. It has also resulted in a larger Nicaraguan Army, not a smaller one.

Given the paucity of evidence presented by the administration, it is difficult to judge independently whether the alleged arms flow from Nicaragua to El Salvador has increased, or even continues. The administration insists that it continues unabated. If so, clearly contra pressure has been ineffective on that score as well.

Certainly there has been no progress in terms of opening up the internal process, nor should we have expected any. A long-accepted rule of international politics is that you do not bring about internal liberalization by mounting an external military threat. The result is almost always the exact opposite, and so has it been in the Nicaraguan case. The Sandinistas are less open to internal dialogue now than a year ago, and much less open than two years ago. They have recently imposed a state of seige and cracked down more vigorously on opposition newspapers and radio stations, something the administration has, as it should have, roundly condemned. The implications are clear: In terms of pluralism and internal liberalization, contra pressures have helped not a whit. If anything, they have made things worse.

The administration's weakest argument for aiding the contras has to do with negotiations. If there are today shaper division on Capitol Hill over Central American policy, it is because many congressmen now realize the administration misled them. Not surprisingly, they bitterly resent it. Before the vote on contra aid last June, the administration struck a reasonable posture. In a letter to the Senate. President Reagan said he would resume bilateral talks with the Sandinistas. He followed with a letter to Rep. Dave McCurdy (D) of Oklahoma promising to pursue diplomatic rather than military solutions—if Congress would aid the contras. The reason for the aid, he insisted, was to keep the pressure on the Sandinistas to negotiate.

But once Congress had approved "nonlethal" aid to the contras, all these promises were ignored. Though the President had said in April that he would resume talks with the Sandinistas, in July when the foreign ministers of the Contadora countries called on us to do just that, the administration flatly and immediately refused (although the Sandinistas had already accepted). And in August, Mr. Abrams wrote finis to the possibility of diplomatic solutions by describing the very idea of a negotiated agreement with the Sandinistas as "preposterous."

We could achieve our objectives through diplomacy—all objectives, that is, save the ouster of the Sandinistas. But it is now clear that that is the only thing the administration would be willing to negotiate—i.e., the terms of the Sandinistas' capitulation. Capitulate they never will; hence, dipomatic solutions are at this point pretty well ruled out.

As funding the contras advances none of our other objectives, and as everyone acknowledges that the contras do not have the capability to defeat the Sandinistas, it is difficult to see just what we are accomplishing. Rather than offering some hope for a way out of the Central American imbroglio, supporting the contras simply carries us further into a blind alley leading to the involvement of U.S. troops. Congress authorized the nonlethal aid to the contras last summer, but it has accomplished nothing, so now the administration wants to give them outright military aid. When that also fails, it will ask for more, and more, until finally it is forced to admit that the contras by themselves cannot win for us, that if we want to oust the Sandinistas, we will have to use U.S. forces.

Our only hope of averting another Vietnam-like situation is that a majority of congressmen will refuse to authorize military aid for the contras and insist that the administration honor its earlier promises to the Congress to seek diplomatic rather than military solutions.

Supporters of the administration's Central American policy would have us believe that anyone who opposes that policy is now outside the mainstream. My own perception is that there are more people outside that "mainstream" than in it. But even if that were not the case, even if there were only a handful of critics left, I would prefer to be one of them. Those who asked aloud, just before the vote on the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, whether our destroyers had really been under attack were on that particular morning very much outside the mainstream. They also happened to be right.

WHERE IS H.R. 20?

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the recent Supreme Court decision that the Federal Reserve Board cannot regulate "nonbank banks" places the question of equitable Federal regulation of banking services unequivocally before the Congress.

Although the Banking Committee has reported one bill directly addressing the legality of "nonbank" banking, this legislation has not yet been given a rule by the Rules Committee.

I call upon the distinguished gentleman from Florida to allow us to consider H.R. 20 with an open rule so that we can debate these issues thoroughly.

It is grossly unfair to consumers and businesses, including both banks and nonbanks, to allow the present situation of regulatory limbo and double standards to persist. We in the Congress must squarely face our responsibility to decide this issue soon.

We need to establish a level playing field and a single set of rules responsive to the real needs of consumers. Then bankers can get on with the business of doing their business instead of waiting around while the umpires play games.

TRIBUTE TO REV. RUSSELL B. WHITE

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, on April 25 I will have the great pleasure of attending a dinner honoring Rev. Russell B. White, pastor of the Bethel Baptist Church in Orange, NJ. The dinner will pay tribute to Reverend White's 20 years of dedicated service to the members of his congregation, and I am honored to be included in this 20th anniversary celebration. Rev. James A. Scott, pastor of the Bethany Baptist Church in my home city of Newark, will be the guest speaker.

Reverend White is a rare person. The burden of ministering to a flourishing congregation would be a full-time task for most people, but in addition to his pastoral duties Reverend White also serves as commander of the Eagle Flight Aviation Post No. 290. For some 11 years he has been a leader and a source of inspiration for many young people in northern New Jersey, conducting an outstanding flight training school.

Reverend White is a member of the Tuskegee Airmen, a group of black fliers organized during World War II. Throughout the years following, they have taught and reinforced other blacks to reach for the new frontier of flight. While inspiring young people to learn to fly, Reverend White also teaches the importance of discipline and notes that flying provides the motivation for many students to improve reading and mathematics because they are required to attend ground school. His program has been an outstanding success. Most students who have gone through Reverend White's post have gone on to college or technical school. Some have gone on to military academies, and it was my privilege to nominate three of the school's graduates to the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs this year—James Anderson, Jr. of Newark; and Ms. June Bowles and Joseph C. Caffarelli, both of East Orange.

Our community has been blessed by the inspired and dedicated leadership of Rev. Russell White, and many young people have him to thank for guiding and training them for productive careers. I am proud to call him my friend and I look forward to many more years of distinguished service from this esteemed and respected man.

HON. ROBIN TALLON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4630, the Medicaid Infant Mortality Amendments of 1986. Infant mortality is a consuming, growing national problem that has too long awaited congressional attention. It imposes a drain on our financial and human resources that we can ill afford. H.R. 4630 is a timely and vital measure to assist in the alleviation of this tragic yet preventable problem.

Infant mortality is a frequently cited measure of the overall health of a State and Nation, reflecting issues of distribution and equity, as well as the adequacy of the health care system. It is a sad commentary on our Nation that infant deaths have risen for 2 consecutive years by about 9 percent. At this rate, we may soon lose our already unacceptable rank of 12th among developed nations in infant mortality.

For black children the infant mortality rate is twice as high as that of white children. All totaled, low birth weights account for two-thirds of all black infant deaths. These statistics on infant mortality pose a grave obstacle for a nation that prides itself on strong family values, economic growth, and fiscal stability.

It is usually the poorest States that have the highest infant mortality rates and yet these are the States least able to afford the high costs of unhealthy babies. In my own region, the South, in 1982, 7.6 percent of all births—107,418 babies—in the South were born too soon or too small.

Lack of prenatal care, frequently a result of poverty, is the greatest contributor to infant death. On an average, women aged 18 to 24 give birth to some 40 percent of all babies born in the United States. Yet in 1984, more than 25 percent of these women had no private health insurance or public health coverage. The cost for an uncomplicated pregnancy is at least $5,000. Yet Federal programs such as Medicaid cover only about 43 percent of women of reproductive age who earn less than $5,000 a year.

An additional problem is that Medicaid offers no coverage for post partum care of complications during pregnancy. Few States even cover diagnostic services and screening which is so necessary in cases of suspected high risk.

As well, there are many women who are not eligible for Medicaid yet are unable to afford to pay for prenatal care. In all States, Medicaid is tied closely to AFDC payment levels and most payment levels are set at less than 50 percent of the Federal poverty level. In my State of South Carolina this level is particularly low. The outcome is that those with the highest risk of having an unhealthy baby are the least likely to receive adequate prenatal care.

For those who do qualify for Medicaid, the assistance for prenatal care is minimal and the assistance available for post partum care is nonexistent.

The scope and potential damage of the problem of infant death are clear. Equally clear is the significance of the factors of financial resources, availability of health services, and lack of understanding of the importance of prenatal care in determining the health of pregnant women and newborn babies. We can and must address these issues. I believe that the most effective, efficient, and rapid way to improve access to prenatal and infant health care while saving State dollars is through full and creative use of existing programs such as Medicaid. The Infant Mortality Reduction Amendments of 1986 do just this.

This legislation will allow States to exercise an option to provide prenatal care, delivery, and post partum care to women who survive at or below the 100 percent of the Federal poverty level. The bill also provides well-child care for the infant involved up to 1 year of age, without regard to State income eligibility thresholds. This bill also allows States to target Medicaid dollars on care for high-risk pregnant women and infants without regard to family structure and without regard to cash assistance the family may already be receiving under the AFDC Program.

H.R. 4630 addresses the problem of infant mortality effectively and efficiently. By altering Medicaid eligibility policy, Federal funds are invested where they will save the most lives and the most money. By providing immediate assistance to high-risk pregnant women and infants, the measure prevents long-term financial and social costs. The human and financial costs of unhealthy births are high. Every day we spend millions of dollars to save babies born too early, too sick, or too small to have a fair opportunity for a healthy and productive life. And the need for costly care for an infant born at risk is likely to continue for the duration of that child's life. The costs of high technology neonatal intensive care far outweigh the costs of preventing the likelihood of a baby being born with a low birth weight.

Preventive prenatal and infant health care more than pays for itself. By reducing the incidence and severity of unhealthy babies, prenatal and infant care can save $2 to $10 for every preventive dollar invested—and considerably more if long term costs are included. It is a simple and unavoidable choice—we can pay less now or more later.

And these are just the initial, financial costs. The costs in terms of loss of human potential are even greater. Our economic and social capabilities are diminished with each neglected and unhealthy birth. Family well-being and productivity are diminished. Mothers of children with chronic health disorders, such as those relating to birth problems, are less likely to work, costing the United States an estimated $1 billion in lost maternal earnings. Many of these families must turn to public assistance for support. In addition to the impact on the mother's ability to work, a child with birth related handicaps is less likely to be able to be self-supporting in adulthood. The pattern of dependency on public support continues.

I urge my colleagues to support this vital measure as an investment in our children's health and an investment in our future. For, as Abraham Lincoln noted "A child is a person who is going to carry on what you have started * * * the fate of humanity is in his hands."

A SALUTE TO THE SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, one of the outstanding examples of investigative journalism in recent years is the series published last year by the San Jose Mercury News on the hidden wealth of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos and their associates. Few stories have achieved such a substantial and positive impact on public policy.

The Mercury News articles provided powerful evidence to support the charges of capital flight and corruption in the Philippines. The series sparked a resolution of impeachment against Ferdinand Marcos last summer and triggered an investigation by the House Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs into the concealed investments by Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos in the United States.

A year before Imelda Marcos, with her 3,000 pairs of shoes and countless other examples of unparalleled conspicuous consumption, came into our national consciousness, Pete Carey, Katherine Ellison, and Lewis M. Simons of the Mercury News were documenting the diversion of massive amounts of money from the people of the Philippines.

Last week, these three reporters and their newspaper received the coveted Pulitzer Prize Award from Columbia University in the category of international reporting. I cannot think of more deserving recipients of this high honor than these three intrepid and insightful reporters. I only regret that the Village Voice, which last October published a remarkable piece of research and reporting by Joe Conason and Bill Bastone, entitled "Marcos Takes Manhattan" did not receive a Pulitzer as well. The Voice story was critically important to our subcommittee in our successful efforts to show that Mr. and Mrs. Marcos control a real estate empire in the State of New York worth roughly $350 million.

Like the article in the Voice, the series in the Mercury News stands in the finest tradition of American journalism. It is indeed appropriate that an investigation carried out by the free press in our country helped to facilitate the restoration of freedom and democracy in another nation. Pete Carey, Katherine Ellison, and Lewis Simons have brought great credit to their newspaper, their profession, and their country by the marvelous work they have done.

AGAINST HONORARIUM INCREASE

HON. RICHARD STALLINGS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution which would repeal the underhanded and outrageous action taken yesterday, apparently with the consent of the House leadership—Republican and Democrat alike—to increase the limit on outside income for House Members from 30 to 40 percent of salary. This increase represents an annual raise of about $7,500, from $22,530 to $30,400, to those few Members, 72, in fact, who receive more than $20,000 in honoraria in 1984.

It is not necessary for me to repeat what so many of my colleagues have rightly condemned. It was a blatant and raw abuse of power that hardens the perception, however justified, that public officials are insensitive and black integrity. Like any incredible and indefensible act, the action itself speaks far louder than the words of indignation that I, or others, may heap upon it. It was wrong and that is all that needs to be said.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, the leadership action should be put into perspective. As my colleagues know, I represent a predominantly agricultural district in southeast Idaho. It is beautiful country and the people there are tough and independent. But they are in trouble now because of Federal Government policies that deliberately sacrificed their interests in correcting other, presumably more important, economic interests like high inflation and interest rates. These policies have led to depressed commodity prices, plummeting land values, and shrinking exports. Of course, in my district, when farmers are in trouble so are the businesses that service them and the communities in which they live. Let me make this clear: there is a depression in Idaho, as in other parts of the farm belt, and the future provides little hope or promise.

It is within this context that I vehemently oppose raising the outside income allowed to Members. I am sympathetic to my constituents who truly need relief from a crisis not of their making. I am not, and let me emphasize "not," sympathetic to those 72 Members of Congress asking for a $7,500 raise.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to strike yesterday's action so that we can send a signal to the American public that we know it is for them that we work and it is their interests that come first.

IN RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL SECRETARY'S WEEK

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the secretaries in my district who—along with the rest of the country—are celebrating National Secretary's Week.

This week, April 21–25, is dedicated to secretaries to give recognition to their contribution to the operations of businesses, government, organizations, and associations. Clearly, none of these entities could survive without the skills provided by highly professional and dedicated secretaries.

Mr. Speaker, one almost never hears of secretaries included in the praise accorded to a company or organization for its performance and prompt and agreeable service. Yet secretaries are, indeed, an integral part of that organization's structure which allows it to operate effectively and efficiently. It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that employers will not only take advantage of this opportunity to show in concert with the rest of the Nation their full appreciation of their secretaries' contribution to the organization, but also will continue to express this appreciation on a regular basis.

A SALUTE TO THE POMPEIAN PLAYERS WHO HAVE ENRICHED THE PEOPLE OF CENTRAL NEW YORK

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with singular pride that I commend the attention of our colleagues in the Congress to a dedicated and richly talented theater group that is about to bring down the curtain after six decades of extraordinary service to the people of central New York.

I am speaking of the Pompeian Players of Our Lady of Pompei Italian Church in Syracuse, NY.

Since their inception, the players have been under the direction of Catholic priests. The first director, beginning in 1927, was Father William Mahaney. Successive directors have been Father Gerard Horan, Father Mahaney who returned to direct shows from 1938 to 1942, Father Francis Furfaro, and Father Charles L. Borgognoni who began his tenure in 1950, and still, as director, recently announced that no theater productions are planned in 1987.

The idea of going into show business was conceived as a method of reducing the parish debt incurred by the construction of the church. The earliest performances took place on a small stage in the church basement which now serves as the cafeteria. As the fame and popularity of the theater company grew, performances were moved to larger facilities at the Franklin School, then to even bigger facilities at the spacious Grant Junior High School auditorium which offered 1,100 seats.

In 1956, the Pompeian Players went "big time" while presenting the musical comedy "Of Thee I Sing" in a series of performances at Grant Auditorium and the RKO Keith's Theater in downtown Syracuse.

Playing the big theater stages of the time became routine. Besides Keith's, the Pompeian Players performed at the Empire, Lowe's and Paramount theaters before, beginning in 1977, staging productions in the Onondage County Civic Center.

Performances throughout the years have included such shows as "South Pacific," "Guys and Dolls," "Oklahoma," "Hello Dolly," "Mame," and "My Fair Lady." Their closing production this season will be "Annie."

From the original concept of using show proceeds to pay off the church debt, the Pompeian Players expanded their goals and went on to make significant contributions to Our Lady of Pompei Parish by providing funds for land acquisition, additional buildings, facilities and equipment. Through benefit performances, the players have helped the Red Cross, the War Relief Fund, the Columbus Monument Fund and other worthy organizations, including those of other faiths. Show profits currently are shared between Our Lady of Pompei Church and the Catholic Center at Syracuse University.

On Saturday, the third of this coming month, the Pompeian Players will hold their first alumni party at the Onondaga County War Memorial. From among the several hundred of the more than 1,250 alumni from throughout America who plan to attend the reunion is the company's oldest, living original player, Mr. Vincenzo Salomons. He is 92.

What he and fellow members of this illustrious troup have contributed to the cultural, spiritual and physical enhancement of our Greater Syracuse community over the last 60 years will be remembered with gratitude.

As Shakespeare wrote, "The play's the thing."

Mr. Speaker, the Pompeian Players did their thing with a verve and dedication that will remain indelible.

NATIONAL EXTENSION HOMEMAKERS COUNCIL CELEBRATES 50 YEARS OF SERVICE TO OUR NATION

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 23, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the National Extension Homemakers Council celebrates its 50th anniversary of service to our Nation next month.

More than 600,000 volunteers in 44 States contribute in a wide variety of ways to improve the quality of life in our communities. through educational activities, local councils like that in Pinellas County, FL, which I represent, provide information and programs on citizenship, the arts, family life, health, housing, nutrition, and safety. The Pinellas County council has touched our lives in Florida in so many ways and will gather next week to honor the national program's 50th anniversary. This special program will pay tribute to the valuable contributions council members have made to their communities for half a century, and will honor those individuals who have been 50-year members.

Homemakers extension organizations have been active throughout our Nation for more than 65 years, but it was in 1936 that these individual groups formed one national organization. Since then, their list of achievements is impressive. The national council contributed to several important efforts to help our Nation during the difficult years of World War II. The council was also influential in starting food nutrition programs in our schools which has evolved into the national school lunch program. Council members today provide valuable guidance to 4-H clubs throughout our country, promote voter registration drives, and have increased public awareness about seat belt safety.

Mr. Speaker, the dedicated volunteers of the Pinellas County Extension Homemakers Council are representative of the important work council members do throughout our Nation to raise the standards of community life. I join with the members of the Pinellas County council in honoring the contributions thousands of council volunteers have made to our country during these past 50 years.

SAY IT ISN'T SO

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, there is a shocking story this morning on the front page of the Washington Times written by George Archibald, and I certainly hope it is incorrect. What this story says really smacks all ethics that we have in the face and also causes great concern for the security of the President of the United States. This story alleges that every day Michael K. Deaver is given the personal detailed schedule of the President of the United States by Frederick J. Ryan, that his driver goes over, it is handed to him, and then he knows every single detail that no one else knows. Obviously that allows him to sell all sorts of access that we have been reading about and I think is wrong. But it also, I think, jeopardizes the security of the President of the United States because anyone can intercept that driver, get that appointment book, and know exactly what to do and where. I certainly hope this is incorrect, and I certainly hope that the White House announces today what the truth is and let us hope that this story is not the truth.

TAKEOVER RAIDS AND DOMESTIC OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION

(Mr. BARTON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, our country finds itself facing an energy crisis that poses a threat to U.S. energy security. That crisis is the plunge in domestic oil and gas exploration and the resultant collapse in U.S. energy production.

The standard barometer of exploration activity in the United States is the rig count, the number of drilling rigs in operation. The higher the rig count, the higher the level of U.S. oil and gas exploration. Exploration is essential to U.S. energy security, since low levels of exploration activity will lead to lower domestic production and a return to dependence on OPEC.

I am sure that you will be disturbed to know that exploration activity in the United States has virtually halted as a result of a number of factors, in particular low world oil prices. Americans are not looking for oil and gas in the United States anymore, because they cannot break even when oil prices fluctuate in the $10 to $15 per-barrel range. The number of operational rigs has plunged from 1,900 in December 1985 to 917 last week. The rig count has fallen by 50 percent in 4 short months. The United States confronts a return to a period of energy dependence on OPEC.

A prominent Texas independent oilman and good friend of mine, Mr. Michel Halbouty, has long been concerned over the decline in domestic oil and gas exploration. The attached article from the Houston Chronicle written by Michel Halbouty is worth reading.

[From the Houston Chronicle, Mar. 30, 1986]

A FAR WORSE CRISIS

(By Michel T. Halbouty)

"In my opinion, this country is reaching toward a severe economic crisis, as well as an imposition on our national security by our not doing everything possible to increase our domestic (oil) production now. To continue along the downward exploratory curve which we are now experiencing will surely result in economic chaos. The impact of an energy shortage in this country would be absolutely disastrous.

"Unless there is an appreciable and sustained turnaround in our exploratory activities. I can safely predict that soon we will have an energy crisis in this country which will cause repercussions throughout the width and breadth of this great nation of ours like a devastating earthquake."

Those are the words I said on Nov. 30, 1960, as I concluded a speech in Los Angeles. Unfortunately, the prediction came true with the 1973–74 energy crisis.

What I said then applies today. The present volatile energy price and supply situation has many aspects of comparison with the energy dilemmas we faced in the 1960s and 1970s.

Domestic oil production is falling; drilling is down to a dramatic low equal only to that of the mid-1970s; our oil imports are gradually increasing; companies are going under; massive layoffs are regular occurrences; and budget cutbacks in exploration and production, as well as in research and development, are almost daily reported.

But what got us into this sorry state has been almost totally forgotten or ignored by the media. The hostile takeover-merger raids of the past few years have, singlehandedly, forced more changes on the petroleum industry than any amount of price cuts could have done. Today's dangerous retrenchment trend was precipitated by the hostile raids on the industry—raids which saddled companies with huge debts, triggering cutbacks and personnel layoffs. The recent oil price slide has only accentuated the problem and accelerated the attrition.

Personnel and exploration cutbacks are severe and it seems that more will occur. What disturbs me most is the complete disregard for the human element. It is a sad commentary on our morality in doing business that the welfare of those who sustain the growth of business is being neglected at best and ignored at worst. Mass layoffs of personnel for the sake of paying the highest dividend or sustaining the dividend, even though a reasonable profit can be made without cutbacks, are counterproductive.

Instead of letting thousands of employees go and drastically cutting back on exploration, companies could take a lower profit and still maintain the employees and sustain reasonable and effective exploration activities. In this way, they could build for the future. Such, unfortunately, is not the case and when the turnaround comes, those same companies will not have the benefit of dedicated, experienced professionals. Instead they will be forced to hire inexperienced and untrained personnel. Greater sums will be spent on trying to catch up than were saved by cutting back.

The impact of exploration cuts and employee layoffs is felt in all sectors of the petroleum industry. The multiplier effect of these cuts will soon be felt throughout the communities where those cuts were made, such as we are experiencing today in Houston. The job-loss toll has reached the hundreds of thousands since the raiders and their Wall Street cohorts started their assault on the petroleum industry. Eventually the nation as a whole will experience the effects of the devastation left in the wake of hostile raider demolition tactics and the added thrust of crude oil price declines.

As our domestic oil production dwindles and companies further reduce their exploration programs, our imports of crude oil and products from foreign nations will increase. In as little as 36–48 months we could become as much as 75 percent import-dependent.

How could this happen so fast? It's really very simple. With oil prices at uneconomic lows, many U.S. stripper wells will be abandoned—and once abandoned, they're gone forever as resources for the nation. Some 14 percent of our current production is from stripper wells. Deduct the millions of barrels of oil that could have been produced had we been exploring for new reserves, and another shortfall appears.

Today we import roughly 5 million barrels a day of crude oil; we produce around 8.9 million barrels a day and draw down approximately 2 million barrels per day from inventory. Our consumption is estimated at roughly 16 million barrels of oil each day; a 50 percent import dependence would be fast arriving. From that point it would only be a matter of time until imports set record highs, and America was once again at the mercy of foreign cartels.

Our domestic petroleum is the only available dependable supply. Other sources are subject to nationalization, expropriation, confiscation by exorbitant taxation, the caprice of foreign sovereigns, war and other emergency disconnections.

A shift in oil import dependence translates into danger for the country as a whole, and especially affects our national military security. Without secure petroleum supplies to fuel our military complex, we are at a disadvantage in the event of hostilities or outright war. If our domestic petroleum industry cannot provide these secure supplies, we would stand little chance of sustaining, much less winning, any confrontation.

The world still runs on oil energy, and it will for decades to come. As a result of lower oil prices, most of our alternate-energy research and development projects have been curtailed or canceled. Our nuclear power policy is ludicrous, prohibiting nuclear energy from taking its valuable place in our energy markets. Restrictive fuel-use regulations further hamper our development of increased energy security. And with the fall in oil prices, other energy resource prices also lose ground.

What we must not do at this time is underestimate the influence of foreign oil exporters. The American petroleum industry's retrenchment in the wake of raider threats and foreign producers' continuing to flood world oil markets to drive prices down add up to excessive U.S. oil-import dependence.

The oil industry, so vital to our national security, must be strengthened instead of weakened. To stave off the possibility of another oil crisis we must take immediate and responsible measures. Legislation which has been proposed in Congress to remove onerous, punitive and counterproductive regulations and laws of the past years must be supported, and those proposals which would harm the industry and the country in the long term must be opposed.

If we don't defuse the time bomb associated with the continuous drop in domestic oil exploration, we will be faced with another, far worse crisis of oil-price escalation and oil-import dependence the likes of which we have never seen.

ECONOMIC TERRORISM IN WEST VIRGINIA

(Mr. STAGGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, in the past few weeks it has become apparent that the Middle East doesn't have a monopoly on terrorism. My constituents in West Virginia have fallen victim to a surgical strike by the insurance industry, which amounts to economic terrorism in its finest form.

In its past session, the West Virginia Legislature passed an insurance accountability bill, which the insurance industry neither supported nor opposed. But the minute the bill became law, the five major providers of liability insurance in West Virginia announced that this was more than they could bear, and that they would sell their wares elsewhere effective May 31, unless something is done to protect their piece of the rock.

No deaths have resulted from this attack, yet, Mr. Speaker, but what happens on May 31 when doctors and hospitals start closing their doors? While we have rejected the idea of bombing the insurance industry, Congressman WISE and I have decided to seek recourse through the committee process. Congressman WISE will be working with Energy and Commerce, and I will pursue hearings in Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, this is a problem of great magnitude. With its intent now blurred, perhaps McCarran-Ferguson has outlived its usefulness.

REFUSAL TO GRANT PATENT ON ENERGY MACHINE SEEN AS AN INJUSTICE

(Mr. LIVINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, it took the Wright brothers over 3 years to obtain a patent for their flying machine, simply because the U.S. Patent Office insisted that such an invention was impossible. Today we are witnessing the same foolish behavior. For 7 years, the Patent Office has refused to grant Joseph Newman of Mississippi the legal right to his energy machine, an invention which could revolutionize the energy industry and vastly improve the quality of our lives.

Patent officials have denied Newman a patent on the grounds that his machine doesn't work. This, despite the fact that they have not run a single test of the device which substantiates their claims; despite the fact that over 30 respected scientists have sworn that the machine works; and despite the fact that a court-appointed special master has ruled in Newman's favor.

This case smells of injustice. In late February, a Federal judge impounded Newman's invention without a hearing and in apparent violation of a higher court order.

Article I, section 8 of the Constitution gives Congress the authority to grant patents to American citizens. It is time for this body to exercise that authority by granting a patent to Mr. Newman. We must act because the executive and judicial branches of our Government have denied this man his constitutional right to due process of law.

I urge my colleagues to investigate this matter, and I urge that hearings be held. If anyone has concrete evidence that Mr. Newman's device does not work, please come forward. Otherwise, it is time to stop wasting taxpayer money, grant this man a patent, and let the American marketplace decide the value of this invention.

GAO STUDY PROVES INADEQUACY OF WEATHER INFORMATION TO PILOTS

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, last summer, along with Congressmen GEORGE BROWN and TOM LEWIS, I requested that the GAO study the availability of hazardous weather information to air traffic controllers.

Mr. Speaker, the full report has just been released and the findings reaffirm the fact FAA airport radars are not capable of determining storm intensity and airports do not have direct access to adequate sources of hazardous weather information.

Further, the report concluded that air traffic controllers at the Nation's busiest airports sometimes do not have time to disseminate weather information to pilots and it is often not given as soon as possible because controllers are too busy performing their primary duty of separating aircraft. This lack of controller time for disseminating weather information can result in insufficient weather information being available to pilots during the critical takeoff and landing phases of flight.

Hazardous weather is a major factor in aviation accidents with over 50 percent of all air carrier accidents in some way attributable to weather conditions. One particular incident that comes to mind is the Delta crash in Dallas last summer in which hazardous weather conditions played a major role and indications were that the flight crew was not provided with the latest weather forecast.

One of the key solutions is the installation of the terminal Doppler radar systems. OMB has slashed the FAA's facilities and equipment budget despite the multibillion surplus in the aviation fund. This means that the installation of 15 terminal Nexrad systems will not be put into operation until 1990 and 1991. I have already sent letters to OMB Director James Miller and FAA Administrator Don Engen in this regard. It seems to me that OMB is ignoring the problems. It is important to note that the total cost of installating the system at the Nation's 100 busiest airports is just about the monetary loss from just one Dallas Delta-type crash. Beyond that, without structural and procedural changes in the system, airline passengers' lives will continue to be in some jeopardy.

MALPRACTICE INSURANCE COMPANIES ARE PRACTICING BLACKMAIL

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, I want to sound a national warning: during the past year every Member of this body has been besieged by cities, States, physicians, manufacturers, small businesses, all begging for insurance rate relief. Insurance premiums are skyrocketing. "Give us tort reform," respond the insurance companies.

During the past 2 years I have basically grown more sympathetic to the cause for tort reform. Indeed just 2 months ago the West Virginia Legislature took the first step in this direction by passing limits on recovery, certain limits on recovery. However, the legislation also added other language that would require insurance policies before they are being canceled, for the people to have the opportunity for a hearing and require companies to submit more detailed financial information to regulators. What was the insurance companies' reaction?

Four of the major malpractice insurance providers for West Virginia immediately announced they were canceling their policies. As of May 31, 1986, most of our State's 7,000 doctors, 58 hospitals and other health providers will find themselves without malpractice insurance.

Mr. Speaker, this is blackmail. The insurance company thinks that it can take a small State like West Virginia and intimidate it to change laws with which it does not agree.

Mr. Speaker, along with my fellow colleague from West Virginia, Representative HARLEY STAGGERS, I am asking the appropriate committees of Congress to investigate the industry's actions in West Virginia.

The industry's exemption from Federal antitrust legislation does not extend to coercion or blackmail. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the insurance companies have long fought to avoid Federal regulation. But the way it is treating my State—make no mistake about it next time it will be your State—shows that I intend to make this a national issue. We must drag these insurance companies, who think they can kick their small State around, kicking and screaming into the national arena for all to see what they truly mean when they ask for tort reform.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent Wednesday morning, April 23, 1986, for rollcall No. 93, the approval of the Journal. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

At the time of the vote, I was at the Supreme Court of the United States attending the oral argument on the suit that I joined challenging the constitutionality of the automatic deficit reduction process of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, Public Law No. 99-177, known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

THE ATTEMPT TO INCREASE HOUSE MEMBERS' OUTSIDE EARNINGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to state my position regarding the attempt made on the House floor on Tuesday to increase the limit on outside earned income for Members of the House of Representatives. Let me hasten to add that I am grateful that the House acted quickly in reversing this controversial decision.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly concerned about the way the resolution was brought to the floor on Tuesday without notice and with only a small handful of Members present—and then passed on a voice vote where Members could not record their positions on the measure.

This surprise maneuver by a few cast suspicion on the majority of Members of this House at a time when we ourselves are calling on people all over this country to tighten their belts and accept deep budget reductions in many worthwhile programs. This is just a very inappropriate time for this kind of resolution to be brought before this body.

It would have been reprehensible if we had let this measure slip by.

Thankfully, the House yesterday took the unusual action of vacating the proceedings by which the outside income increase was approved. I supported the move to knock out the previous action of the House, and I am glad we quickly overturned what would have been a regrettable decision.

Last evening I listened to the news reports of certain Members from both parties who criticized the intestinal fortitude of those other Members who opposed the resolution raising the outside income limit.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution was rammed through the legislative process immediately after the invocation by the Chaplain on Tuesday by voice vote.

This resolution would have allowed Members of the House to earn $7,510 more each year in honoraria, legal fees, and other outside earned income. Had it been allowed to be subjected to the normal floor debate—where the checks and balances usually work—there would have been no quarrel with it, although I feel sure it would have been soundly defeated. For myself, I would have opposed it under any circumstance.

Despite the bustling economic activity, the housing boom, decreasing interest rates, and reduced inflation—for which we are grateful—our country faces a serious underlying danger.

Because our country owes more than $2 trillion because we will have to borrow at least $140 billion in the next year, and because the current interest on our national debt totals $165 billion Americans have become alarmed. They have expressed that alarm and concern to the majority of Congress, and Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who have received the message that it is high time that this body took a good look at fiscal responsibility.

That responsibility comes in the form of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—whether we like it or not.

To meet the deficit targets under this new law, and to match the Government's spending with its income by 1991, it is necessary to cut deeply into health, education, agriculture, economic development, cost-of-living increases for Federal and military retirees, other domestic programs, and Defense.

So, at a time when we are urging our citizens to stand up for reduced Federal spending, to be patriotic, and to accept these sacrifices, we in the Congress—who are already suspect in the minds of many of our citizens—enacted a resolution which has the appearance of impropriety.

Mr. Speaker, some of the proponents who complained when we vacated the proceedings and rejected this resolution yesterday said the Members have no guts. One proponent said that when a pay raise comes on the horizon many Members run for the hills.

I just want to say that it took more than guts for those proponents to bring this ridiculous measure to the floor in the most untimely of all times.

It took gall and gumption, and the Members of the House were correct in overturning this action yesterday by an overwhelming vote of 333 to 68.

WHERE'S THE BUDGET?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is day nine that the Congress has been in violation of the April 15 statutory deadline for a final budget. Do you know where your budget resolution is?

Mr. Speaker, while we have not been able to track down even a trace of a House budget resolution, we have managed to locate the House Budget Committee chairman. He was shown on the network news clips this morning, standing on the Supreme Court steps yesterday, decrying the evils of the Gramm-Rudman Deficit Reduction Act. Here's what he had to say for the television cameras: "We can't put the Government on automatic pilot. We in Congress must run the Government ourselves."

Mr. Speaker, I would remind our budget chairman that the automatic pilot doesn't kick in unless we cop out and don't produce a budget that meets the Gramm-Rudman deficit targets. If the chairman continues to dally, he may have to admit like Pogo that, "We have met the automatic pilot and he is us."

(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the Second Roadless Area Review and Evaluation Program (RARE II); and

(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of national forest roadless areas in Nevada and the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress hereby determines and directs that—

(1) without passing on the question of the legal and factual sufficiency of the RARE II final environmental statement (dated January 1979) with respect to national forest lands in States other than Nevada, such statement shall not be subject to judicial review with respect to National Forest System lands in the State of Nevada;

GRAZING IN WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 401. (a) Within the wilderness areas designated by this Act, the grazing of livestock, where established prior to the date of enactment of this Act, shall be permitted to continue subject to such reasonable regulations, policies, and practices as the Secretary concerned deems necessary, as long as such regulations, policies, and practices fully conform with and implement the intent of Congress regarding grazing in such areas as such intent is expressed in section 4(d)(4) of the Wilderness Act and section 108 of Public Law 96-560.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to review all policies, practices, and regulations of the Department of Agriculture regarding livestock grazing in National Forest System wilderness areas in Nevada in order to insure that such policies, practices, and regulations fully conform with and implement the intent of Congress regarding grazing in such areas, as such intent is expressed in this Act.

(c) The use of motorized equipment for the maintenance and care of livestock and supporting facilities for historical purposes related to grazing activities is permissible in wilderness areas in the State of Nevada. Such use of motorized equipment shall be expressly authorized in individual grazing permits or allotment management plans for the area involved, or by agreement with the wilderness management agency.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit the exercise of valid water rights as provided under Nevada State law, nor shall it constitute an express or implied reservation of water rights in favor of the Federal Government.

STATE FISH AND WILDLIFE AUTHORITY

SEC. 403. As provided in section 4(d)(7) of the Wilderness Act, nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting the jurisdiction or responsibilities of the State of Nevada with respect to wildlife and fish in the national forests in Nevada.

PROHIBITION OF BUFFER ZONES

SEC. 404. (a) Congress does not intend that the designation of wilderness areas in the State of Nevada lead to the creation of protective perimeters or buffer zones around each wilderness area. The fact that nonwilderness activities or uses can be seen or heard from within any wilderness area shall not, of itself, preclude such activities or uses up to the boundary of the wilderness area.

(b) Any air quality redesignation shall remain the prerogative of the State as provided in section 164(a) of the Clean Air Act.

(c) It is the intent of Congress that wilderness designation shall not in itself provide for protection under the visibility provision or any other provision of the Clean Air Act beyond that provided for adjacent public lands managed for multiple use.

(a) In furtherance of section 4(d)(2) of the Wilderness Act and the policies of the National Materials and Minerals Policy, Research and Development Act (94 Stat. 2305), the Secretary of the Interior shall continue to make assessments of the mineral potential of national forest wilderness areas in the State of Nevada on a recurring basis, consistent with the concept of wilderness preservation, in order to expand the data base with respect to the mineral potential of such lands.

(b) The use of motorized equipment for transportation, construction, and earth moving purposes and the construction of facilities related to development and mining of valid mining claims located prior to enactment of this Act is permissible in wilderness areas in Nevada. Reasonable access by road may be permitted.

SEC. 406. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit motorized access and road maintenance by local municipalities for those minimum maintenance activities necessary to guarantee the continued viability of whatsoever watershed facilities currently exist or which may be necessary in the future to prevent the degradation of the water supply in such wilderness areas within the State of Nevada, subject to such reasonable regulations as are deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b) Within the wilderness areas designated by this Act, the provisions of the Wilderness Act shall not be construed to prevent the installation and maintenance of hydrologic, meteorologic, climatological, geologic, or telecommunications facilities, or any combination of the foregoing, or limited motorized access to such facilities when nonmotorized access means are not reasonably available or when time is of the essence, subject to such strict environmental safeguards as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior deem desirable, where such facilities or access are essential to flood warning, flood control, and water reservoir operation purposes, or for conducting essential surveys and tests.

(c) As provided in section 4(d)(1) of the Wilderness Act, such measures may be taken within wilderness areas designated by this Act as may be necessary in the control of fire, insects, and diseases, subject to applicable laws and such additional reasonable conditions as the Secretary deems desirable. This shall include the use of herbicides for plant and noxious weed control and the practice of reseeding a badly damaged area.

PREDATOR CONTROL AUTHORITY

SEC. 407. Nothing in this Act shall limit or affect the jurisdiction or responsibilities of the Federal Government, in cooperation with the State of Nevada, with respect to predator control activities in the national forests in Nevada.

SENATE—Thursday, April 24, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1986)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Our prayer this morning will be offered by the Reverend Dr. Mark Anschutz, rector of Christ Episcopal Church in Alexandria, VA. He is sponsored by Senator PAUL TRIBLE.

PRAYER

The Reverend Dr. Mark Anschutz, rector, Christ Episcopal Church, Alexandria, VA, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Almighty God, bless this bright land that Thou hast lifted between the seas: Her lonely wilds, her rich earth beneath our feet, her pulsing rivers, her splendid heights, the teeming cities and quiet villages of her landscape.

Bless, Lord God, this body of persons assembled. Give them minds and hearts this day and always which will allow them to wisely apply the fairness of the freedom we proclaim in this land. Let the laws they will create this day enshrine and reflect Your laws and be a mark of Your love on every citizen of this land. Inspire with vision every Member of this council, that in seeking Your truth they may be purified, this Republic may be strengthened and Thy glory done.

Inspire us with respect for the dignity of every citizen of this land and especially those who it would be easy to forget, the poor, the homeless and destitute, the old and the sick, and all who have none to care for them. Set us not on selfish paths, Lord God, but on Your high purposes, that we may heal all those who are broken in body or spirit and turn their sorrow into joy.

And, finally, Lord God, lest we forget, look down and visit the families of those elected to this body who give of themselves so generously in support of those who here serve—the spouses and children and grandchildren of this assemblage. Be Thou their guide and their strength this day and evermore, for it is into Thy care that we entrust them and we pray that Thy love would encompass them and guide them. All of this and so much more we say in the name of our God, the Creator. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

THE INSPIRATION OF REVEREND ANSCHUTZ

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, let me at the outset thank the Reverend Mark Anschutz for a beautiful prayer this morning. Reverend Anschutz is the rector of Christ Church in Alexandria, an ancient Episcopal church where George Washington and Robert E. Lee worshiped. Not only does Christ Church have a distinguished past but it is a vibrant church today of nearly 2,000 members. Christ Church is spiritually alive and growing and at work in this world trying to heal the brokenness that we see around us.

Mark Anschutz is a powerful preacher who inspires and challenges his congregation and who has the rare ability to take the teachings of the Lord and translate them to the life that each of us must lead—the joys, the frustrations, the problems that we all encounter. I thank him for being here this morning.

SCHEDULE

Mr. TRIBLE. The majority leader is absent because of a meeting at the White House and in his stead let me summarize the order of the day.

At the outset the two leaders are recognized under the standing order for 10 minutes each. Then there will be special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 5 minutes each: Senators HAWKINS, CRANSTON, PROXMIRE, and MOYNIHAN. Then the Senate will turn to routine morning business not to extend beyond 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each. At the conclusion of routine morning business, the Senate will then resume consideration of the budget resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 120. Pending is amendment No. 1800, the Moynihan amendment. Votes can be expected during the course of this day.

It will be the intention of the majority leader to ask that the Senate not be in session on Friday if an agreement can be reached to reduce the statutory time limitation allotted to the budget resolution by 10 hours.

RESERVATION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER'S TIME

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent to reserve the remainder of the majority leader's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRESSLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CELEBRATION OF PASSOVER

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last night at sundown, Jews the world over began the weeklong celebration of Passover.

This holiday, which commemorates the liberation of the Jews from bondage in Egypt, symbolically occurs in spring. It is a time for new beginnings and for reaffirmation of one's faith.

The story of the "Exodus" is retold each year during the first two nights of the holiday at Passover seders. Only unleavened bread, or matzoh, is eaten during the 7 days of Passover to remember the fact that the Jews, hastening from Egypt, had no time to leaven their bread. Other foods, which symbolize their bitter, difficult lives in Egypt, are part of the seder service.

Each evening, a cup of wine for the prophet Elijah is set on the table. For there is a legend that this prophet visits every Jewish home on seder night. Passover is the festival of freedom and Elijah is the one who will announce that happy time in the future when all men will be free and a new time of peace and happiness will come upon the Earth.

All men and women, Jews and non-Jews, understand the desire, the need for freedom that drove the Jews from Egypt thousands of years ago. And we also share the hope and the belief that the Elijah's message of peace soon will be delivered.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve my time for use later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATOR HAWKINS' SPECIAL ORDER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Florida is to be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I rise to offer a statement today by the Senator from Florida, the Honorable PAULA HAWKINS, with reference to drug testing.

DRUG TESTING

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, since the release of the report by the President's Commission on Organized Crime on Drug Abuse, Drug Trafficking and Organized Crime there has been a great deal said on the subject of drug testing. Unfortunately this has been another case where there has been more heat than light shed on this subject.

There can be little doubt that drug abuse and even drug use has serious consequences for our society, for our families, and even for ourselves as individuals. A survey by the American Management Association (AMA) and Arizona State University found that one in ten blue- and white-collar workers used illegal drugs in the workplace.

Contrary to what you might expect, this problem is not limited to bored assembly line workers or underachieving middle managers. Joseph A. Pursch, a medical director of Comprehensive Care Corporation, an alcohol and drug addiction treatment center in Newport Beach, California, has observed a 100 percent increase in the number of high-level executives coming in for treatment compared with only five years ago.

A 100 percent increase in high-level executives in need of treatment. These are the people who make the crucial business decisions that determine the fate of the entire company and its employees—to say nothing of profits. This should be enough to send shivers down the spine of employees and stockholders everywhere, and indicate the magnitude of the problem we are facing.

Some say that there is a distinction between the so-called recreational use of drugs and drug use in the workplace. But according to the Cocaine National Help Line this distinction is largely non-existent. In a study they conducted, 75 percent of the drug users tested admitted to using illegal drugs on the job; 64 percent said that drugs hindered their work performance; 44 percent said they sold drugs to fellow employees and 18 percent revealed having a drug-related accident or stealing from employers to support their habits.

There has also been an inclination to think that these so-called recreational uses of illegal drugs in off work hours does not have an effect on the job. Not so according to the November 1985 issue of the American Journal of Psychiatry. In an article entitled, "Carry-Over Effects of Marijuana Intoxication on Aircraft Pilot Performance: A Preliminary Report," authors Yesavage, Leirer, Denari and Hollister found that even 24 hours after smoking a single marijuana cigarette, pilots' skill can be impaired. The Psychiatrists asked 10 licensed private pilots to perform certain maneuvers in an aircraft simulation device. They then asked the pilots to smoke one average social "dose" of marijuana and then perform the same maneuvers immediately after smoking the joint, four hours later and then again 24 hours later.

When tested immediately after smoking the joint and four hours later the pilots were described as being barely in control of the plane. Even 24 hours later when the pilots were no longer feeling "high" the scientists noted increases in the number of hand movements needed to keep the plane stable, and found the pilots landing accuracy was still off by as much as one hundred percent with one of the pilots landing completely off the runway.

I don't know about you, but I would not want any of these people flying my airplanes; fixing the brakes on my car; operating a train or doing anything that affects my welfare or the welfare of my family or my country.

The toll taken by illegal drugs on our society is terribly high. We read increasingly of its effect on children and families. The effect on the workplace is just as bad. Drug use results in bad business decisions, diverted supervisory and managerial time, friction among workers, damage to company equipment and company public image, not to mention health care costs, absenteeism, sick leave, and the rising cost of health insurance and worker's compensation claims.

With so much at stake, it is no wonder that private companies are increasingly turning to drug testing as an effective means of addressing the problems posed by employee drug use. A survey of Fortune 500 companies has shown that 18 percent are using some form of drug testing, and that 20 percent are planning to implement a drug testing program within the next two years. This is up from only 5 percent testing in 1982. And it is not Mom and Pop companies that are doing the testing. IBM is now testing. So is Ford Motor Company, Alcoa, Boise-Cascade, American Airlines and even the New York Times.

Clearly the time has come for us to give this matter serious and careful consideration. I believe that drugs pose a serious threat to our country, and I believe that it will take a serious effort to get the problem under control. Drug testing can be an important part of this effort.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CRANSTON

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

AIR SAFETY

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, while the Senate is properly concerned about the budget—the issue before us today—millions of Americans are deeply concerned about air safety.

The two are linked.

Air passengers, understandably, are worried about the dangers of terrorism.

Airplanes appear to be a favorite target of terrorists.

And now more than ever is a time for utmost vigilance.

Yet, there is another threat to air travel that is more insidious and perhaps all the more dangerous because of that.

It is the danger of indiscriminate budget cutting by the Government and injudicious cost cutting by some of the airlines.

Mr. President, a mechanic for one of the airlines was in my office recently and he admitted that some time ago the following incident took place:

A warning light on one of his planes was not functioning properly. But the crew, wanting to avoid costly downtime, decided not to take the plane out of service for repairs. Instead, they taped down the switch to the "off" position, and for a week—until the next regularly scheduled maintenance check—the plane flew with a warning light that did not work.

Fortunately, this particular incident ended harmlessly. But it illustrates why air travelers have reason to be worried these days.

Airline deregulation has brought us lower fares. But it also has brought us more airlines, more aircraft flying more passengers, more competition, and more intense temptation to airline management and workers to cut corners so as to bring down operating costs.

Now, more than ever, we need more Government oversight to ensure air safety; more safety inspectors to make sure that airlines live up to the highest levels of flying safety; more—and more experienced—controllers to handle the huge volume of air traffic.

Instead, we are getting less.

Because of budget cuts, we have 33 percent fewer air safety inspectors today than we had 7 years ago, and 37 percent fewer full performance level air traffic controllers than we had 5 years ago—and things can get much worse.

The first Gramm-Rudman sequestration for the current fiscal year cut the Federal Aviation Administration budget by $115 million.

What will happen in fiscal 1987?

What will happen if the indiscriminate, across-the-board Gramm-Rudman formula is triggered and the FAA suffers another cut of 20 percent, or 25 percent, or more?

Mr. President, the current crisis in air safety points up the perils of mindless, priorities-be-damned budget cutting that is the essence of Gramm-Rudman.

It also points up the absolute need for Congress and the President to reach a budget agreement so as to avoid the Gramm-Rudman trigger.

Part of that agreement, in my judgment, should be increased funding for air-safety enforcement.

There was a sharp increase in air crashes and fatalities last year; 561 people died in U.S. airline accidents. We must avoid actions that would inevitably cause more death in the skies this year—and next.

Failure to do everything humanly possible to reduce the national calamity of air accidents would be a national disgrace.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

THE NUCLEAR TEST BAN IS VERIFIABLE SO LET'S NEGOTIATE IT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the administration has offered a whole string of alibis for their opposition to negotiating a nuclear test ban treaty with the Soviet Union. Only one of those objections has even a remote plausibility. That "remotely plausible" objection is that such an agreement would not be verifiable. Now an outstanding expert on verification has demolished that objection. Who is this expert? Why is he qualified to make such a judgment? The expert is Kosta Tsipis of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Tsipis is the director of the program in science and technology for international security at MIT. Is Director Tsipis an expert on verification of nuclear weapons tests? He is, indeed. He and two other top professionals in this field have just published a book entitled, "Arms Control Verification: The Technologies That Make It Possible." In this book, Tsipis and his colleagues analyze the technologies of verification. They do more. They consider the political agreements necessary to bring the effective verification technologies into play. For instance, Tsipis says that if test ban negotiators can agree on stationing unmanned instruments in monitoring stations near test sites, the instruments could surely recognize and identify nuclear weapons test explosions. Could the instruments distinguish between earthquakes and nuclear weapons tests? Yes. They could. How? Tsipis points out that earthquakes generally give off seismic signals with low frequencies. Nuclear explosions produce higher frequency signals. Have these monitoring stations actually been produced? Yes, indeed. In fact, seven of these stations have already been completed. They are being tested now by scientists. Could the Soviets tamper with these unmanned stations and conceal their test explosions? No way. Tsipis flatly asserts that the stations are tamper proof. But would the Soviets agree to the installation of a sufficient number of these stations in their territory to provide the kind of monitoring required? Yes. In fact the Soviet Union has already indicated their willingness to do so, according to Spurgeon Keeney of the Arms Control Association. And, of course, this country can and should make the stationing of these monitoring stations within the boundaries of both countries a necessary condition of agreeing to the comprehensive test ban.

Isn't it possible that weapons development might proceed so swiftly that the verification techniques will not be able to keep pace? Fortunately the contrary is true. In spite of the reduction in funds for advancing verification technologies, Director Tsipis says that overall, technologies which allow the United States to verify Soviet compliance with arms control agreement are actually advancing more swiftly than weapons developments. Where have these verification technologies made progress? In optics, electronics and computing. Director Tsipis is confident that there is no question the United States now has the ability to verify existing and proposed arms control accords adequately. It is true that the new weapons have been getting smaller. The explosions have lower megatonnage and therefore send off smaller signals. Doesn't this make verification more difficult? No. Why not? Tsipis says: "the verification technologies are advancing at a faster pace. We are becoming even better."

Mr. President, the Defense Department has anticipated that they will not be able to base their case against test ban negotiations on the verification issue. They have been changing their alibis faster than a striptease artist can change clothes. They have argued that they had to keep testing to assure the reliability of their nuclear stockpile. That alibi lasted about a week. It lasted just long enough so that a check of the number of nuclear tests to assure reliability over the years showed that less than 3 percent had been for reliability purposes. Furthermore to the extent that reliability is a legitimate testing purpose, negotiations could permit an exception strictly limited for necessary reliability testing under international observation.

The latest Defense Department gambit in this regard is a real honey. In a response to Congressman MARKEY who has been the leading congressional advocate of a nuclear test ban, the Defense Department contends that continued nuclear weapons testing is necessary to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Mr. President, it is hard to believe that the Defense Department could offer such a transparently erroneous justification for not negotiating an end to testing nuclear weapons. For many years every expert advocate of stopping nuclear proliferation has pleaded with the superpowers to stop nuclear testing because the newly developed technologies resulting from testing will bring the cost of nuclear weapons down and their devastating effect up. As the nuclear weapons become more devastating per pound and nuclear arsenals become cheaper, more and more small and relatively poor nations will be able to afford to acquire the nuclear "equalizer." But now the Defense Department argues that if we stop making our nuclear arsenal cheaper and ever more deadly, other nations will develop their own nuclear arsenals. Congressman MARKEY accurately tagged this latest alibi for continued testing when he said: "I have yet to see one shred of evidence that supports this patently ridiculous and Orwellian contention."

Mr. President, much of the material for this speech has come from an excellent article in Defense Week by David J. Lynch.

MYTH OF THE DAY: WHOLE HERD BUYOUT PROGRAM AND PRICE SUPPORT CUTS CAN SOLVE OUR LONG-TERM DAIRY SUPPLY PROBLEM

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is that the Whole Herd Buyout Program and price support cuts can solve our long-term dairy supply problem. An expected explosion of milk production by the year 2000 shows the compelling need to develop effective ways to control our supply now. Otherwise, dairy farmers will drown in the surplus.

The Office of Technology Assessment [OTA], an agency established to help the Congress anticipate and plan for the consequences of uses of technology, has recently released startling figures about the effects of technology on our Nation's dairy farms by the year 2000. What will this technology mean in terms of animal production efficiency? The OTA projections are truly astounding. For the year 1982, the annual milk production per cow, measured in thousands of pounds, was 12.30. The OTA study pegs this figure at 24.700 by the year 2000. This represents an incredible increase of over 100 percent in the period from the years 1982 to 2000.

These staggering projections send a message, loud and clear, to all those concerned about dairy programs and policies: Now is the time to devise and put into place a dairy supply management plan that works.

What about the Whole Herd Buyout Program that was authorized in the 1985 farm bill? It is untried and untested. I strongly favored, instead, another Milk Diversion Program along the lines of its successful predecessor.

The Milk Diversion Program that ended March 31, 1985, was designed to bring about reductions in three related areas: first, milk production; second, Commodity Credit Corporation purchases; and third, Federal Government costs. It was a total winner in meeting these objectives.

In facing the gigantic increases in annual milk production per cow forecast by the OTA study, one thing is crystal clear: we cannot effectively deal with the dairy supply problem through price support cuts. When dairy farmers are hit by a price support cut, they do what any rational person would do in similar circumstances—they fight to survive. How? By producing more milk.

But do consumers benefit from dairy price support cuts? No, they do not. At the same time that price supports for dairy farmers have been severely slashed in recent years, retail dairy prices for consumers have been increasing. Why? Because those in between dairy farmers and consumers—namely, the processors and retailers—are not in the habit of being that generous. They do not generally pass the savings along to consumers.

And does cutting the price support level for dairy farmers translate into savings for the taxpayers? No, it does not. It is the taxpayers who must pick up the tab for increasing Government purchases of dairy products brought about by the need for dairy farmers to produce more in order to survive.

A sound dairy supply management program is the only effective way to meet the challenge posed by the ocean of milk that will likely confront us by the year 2000. The Whole Herd Buyout Program may prove helpful in the short run, and it should be given a chance. But I firmly believe that a policy based on the Milk Diversion Program concept is what we need to deal successfully with our long-term dairy supply problem.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed beyond 10:30 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR THE SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I received from the chairman of the Mississippi Senate's Committee on Military Affairs a copy of a Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of Mississippi at the recently concluded session in Jackson, MS. The resolution expresses the support of the legislature for the Selective Service System and the registration, even during peacetime, of those who are eligible for military service.

Wayne Burkes, who is chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the State Senate, is a dear friend of mine, and he provides very important leadership in our State on matters which come under the jurisdiction of that committee.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his letter to me and a copy of the Senate concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MISSISSIPPI STATE SENATE,
Jackson, MS, April 16, 1986.

Hon. THAD COCHRAN,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COCHRAN: I have the honor and pleasure of transmitting to you Senate Concurrent Resolution 521 of the 1986 Mississippi Legislative Session expressing the support of the Mississippi Legislature and their constituents concerning the Selective Service System with continuous peacetime registration.

We Mississippians are traditionally patriotic and recognize our responsibilities and obligations to this nation which includes the privilege of serving in time of need.

May this resolution of support be of assistance in obtaining the strong defense posture this nation needs for continued world leadership.

I am and have been a strong supporter of the Reserve Components and the Selective Service System as they are an integral part of our national preparedness.

Sincerely,

WAYNE O. BURKES.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 521

Whereas, the President and the Congress of the United States support the continuation of the program for peacetime registration for the Selective Service System; and

Whereas, in approving funds for such registration, Congress has recognized that peacetime registration contributes to national readiness by reducing by up to two months the time required for a full defense mobilization; and

Whereas, the registration program is an important signal to our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies and to our potential adversaries of the seriousness of United States defense commitments at home and abroad; and

Whereas, over one million United States citizens have sacrificed their lives in military service to protect the rights and freedoms of all Americans; and

Whereas, the registration for Selective Service is an integral part of current preparedness to preserve these rights and freedoms in the future; and

Whereas, the Legislature of Mississippi notes with pride that over 175,000 Mississippians have registered with the Selective Service System since resumption of registration and by so registering are contibuting to the national defense prepardness of the United States:

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Mississippi, the House of Representatives concurring therein, That we do hereby reaffirm our support of the President and Congress for the provision of peacetime registration which has strengthened our national defense preparedness, signaling to our allies as well as our adversaries the seriousness of the United States defense commitments at home and abroad, and we commend the young men of this state and nation who have recognized their obligation to serve their country in time of need.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to the Mississippi Congressional Delegation, and that copies be made available to the press.

NORTH CAROLINA STUDENT LEGISLATURE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, there is a group of young people in North Carolina who have just observed their 50th birthday—and if that seems to be a contradiction, let me explain: I refer to the North Carolina Student Legislature which is the oldest such entity in the Nation.

I am very proud of the young people who today are participating in this very constructive and practical study of how the legislative branch of their State government functions. There are more than 250 of them involved this year. They come from more than 20 of North Carolina's colleges and universities.

Mr. President, I am told that more than 5,000 young people have participated in the activities of the North Carolina Student Legislature during the past half century. Some of them later became leaders of my State; all of them have gained a better understanding of how their State government works. They have learned parliamentary procedure. They have learned how the legislative process functions in a democratic society.

Small wonder that the Student Legislature is so highly regarded. Each year, the governor of this student group presents to the North Carolina General Assembly a compendium of legislation enacted by the Student Legislature. Copies of this document are delivered to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. Not surprisingly, members of the general assembly take careful note of the actions taken by the young people, because nearly half of the members of the general assembly were once members of the Student Legislature.

The Student Legislature has an impressive track record. Nearly 40 percent of the legislation enacted by the young people has found its way to enactment by the general assembly, thereby becoming laws of the State of North Carolina. In the process, many student legislators have been consulted by their elders. Many others have testified before committees of the general assembly.

Mr. President, it is interesting that numerous alumni of the Student Legislature have gone on to serve in the Federal and/or State governments. For example, U.S. Attorney Sam Currin served years ago in the Student Legislature. Two former mayors of Charlotte got their start in the Student Legislature—Ken Harris and Eddie Knox. Eddie Knox later served in the general assembly and as chairman of North Carolina's Advisory Budget Commission.

Others include the present Lieutenant Governor, Bob Jordan; the late U.S. Representative Allard Lowenstein; former U.S. Senator—now director of North Carolina's State Bureau of Investigation—Robert Morgan; and four former North Carolina Governors—Terry Sanford, Robert W. Scott, James E. Holshouser, and James B. Hunt.

There are others, I am sure, whose names do not come to mind. I offer the above list merely as examples—with the hope that any whom I have overlooked will forgive me.

The point, Mr. President, is that I am enormously proud of this extraordinary organization and all of the young people who, down through the years, have served and learned, and grown into responsible citizenship. So as the North Carolina Student Legislature moves into its 51st year, I extend my sincere congratulations and best wishes. It's an idea whose time had come on the first day it functioned—and it will be around for the next 50 years, and beyond, as a wholesome and constructive part of what we regard as the great State of North Carolina.

SENATOR GOLDWATER TO RECEIVE MEDAL OF FREEDOM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this afternoon the White House announced that on May 12 Senator BARRY GOLDWATER will join a distinguished group of Americans as a recipient of the Medal of Freedom.

There are few Americans who have compiled the history of patriotic commitment and dedication to the principles of freedom and democracy that Senator GOLDWATER has.

Starting his political career in 1949 as a member of the Phoenix City Council, BARRY has risen through the ranks of State and National politics, and in 1964 was the Presidential standard bearer for the Republican Party.

A hero to a generation of conservatives, Senator GOLDWATER continues today to speak out on issues that will play a critical role in this Nation's future. And none, more important than national security. In his capacity as chairman of the Intelligence Committee, and now as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, BARRY is an unflinching advocate of a strong and effective national defense and the continuation of America's role as the bulwark of freedom throughout the world.

Mr. President, when BARRY GOLDWATER retires at the end of this session of Congress, the Senate will lose one of its most distinguished voices, and one of its truest patriots. So, I am very pleased that this honor, the Medal of Freedom, will be presented to him when he was still a Member of this body. The Senate family can share in the pride of one its own, and as a colleague, extend BARRY our most heartfelt congratulations.

RESIGNATION OF DR. HARRY M. LIGHTSEY, JR., AS DEAN OF THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA LAW SCHOOL

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, last week I learned that Dr. Harry M. Lightsey, Jr., has resigned from his position as dean of the University of South Carolina School of Law in order to continue his service at the College of Charleston for an additional year as acting president.

While I sympathize with the students and faculty at the law school who will sorely miss his energetic leadership, I am delighted that the College of Charleston will continue to benefit from Dr. Lightsey's keen guidance.

A cum laude graduate of Clemson University, Dr. Lightsey received a dergree in veterinary medicine from the University of Georgia and practiced as a veterinarian from 1956 to 1958. He then decided to enroll at the University of South Carolina Law School where he graduated summa cum laude.

He has been an assistant attorney general for the State of South Carolina, general counsel to the South Carolina Public Service Commission, and legal advisor to the President of the South Carolina Senate. From 1963 to 1966 and from 1972 to 1976 he served as a professor at the University of South Carolina School of Law.

In 1980, Dr. Lightsey was named dean of the law school, a post from which he took a leave of absence in January of this year to assume the interim presidency of the College of Charleston. His tenure at the law school has been exceptional and I know the university law school will continue to benefit from his contributions for many years to come.

Dr. Lightsey's short term at the College of Charleston has been a great success. Charleston's Evening Post newspaper has applauded his able and decisive leadership, calling him "A Thinking Man." His outgoing personality and sincerity have already made him a popular man not only on campus, but in the Charleston community as well.

Established in 1770, the College of Charleston is the oldest institution of higher learning in South Carolina, the 13th oldest college in the United States and the oldest municipal college in the Nation. This historic school has earned international recognition as one of the finest liberal arts colleges in the South. More graduates of the college are admitted to medical school than from any other college in the State and its accounting majors maintaing the highest average scores on the CPA exam among South Carolina colleges and universities. It is only fitting that such a solid and experienced leader as Dr. Lightsey be at the helm of this great institution, and I am confident that he will continue to prove the effective leadership needed for the college to move forward with purpose.

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE BUSINESS ASSOCIATION

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, when an organization starts its 70th year of service to a major portion of the American population, I feel special recognition is in order. The National Cooperative Business Association [NCBA], founded in 1916 as the Cooperative League of the USA [CLUSA], has just entered into its 70th year serving more than 58 million Americans who are members of cooperatives. The noteworthy accomplishments and ongoing efforts of this fine organization are a credit to its board, staff, and membership.

The National Cooperative Business Association is a membership and trade association representing America's cooperative business community. The NCBA, of which Morgan Williams is president and chief executive officer, serves as a chamber of commerce for cooperative businesses representing the unique and mutual needs of the various industries which make up the grand spectrum of cooperatives.

Membership includes farm supply, agricultural marketing, insurance, banking, housing, health care, consumer goods and services, student, credit union, worker, fishery, rural electric, telephone, State association, and other types of cooperatives. In addition, the National Cooperative Business Association represents all American cooperatives as the U.S. representatives to the International Cooperative Alliance, a worldwide organization based in Geneva, Switzerland, which is a coalition of cooperatives in 72 countries, speaking for over 499 million people.

The program of the National Cooperative Business Association includes:

Supporting the development, expansion, and interconnection of cooperative businesses in the United States.

Representing the cooperative business community in Washington, DC, through legislative policy and regulatory advocacy before Congress and Federal agencies.

Developing, building, and providing technical assistance to cooperative businesses in the developing world.

Representing American cooperatives in the world's cooperative business community through membership and active participation in the International Cooperative Alliance [ICA], headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland.

Promoting and developing international commerce, banking, insurance, trade, joint ventures, and other business interconnections by and among the world's cooperatives.

There is much more, Mr. President. Over the years, the National Cooperative Business Association has developed a number of related entities that pursue specific missions in close coordination with the association. They include the National Cooperative Business Foundation, the National Cooperative Business Political Action Committee, the Cooperative Hall of Fame and Historical Society, the National Cooperative Business, Institute, and Cooperative Business International [CBI].

NCBA has played a prominent role in the founding of two well-known organizations in the cooperative business world, such as Cooperatives for American Relief Everywhere [CARE] and the National Cooperative Bank [NCB].

Currently, the NCBA International Division is implementing 11 long-term programs focusing on agribusiness development and cooperative education and training. Programs are underway in India, Indonesia, Equatorial Guinea, Niger, Rwanda, Haiti, Jamaica, Guatemala, and Peru.

Cooperative Business International [CBI], subsidiary of NCBA, is holding CO-EXPO in San Francisco, in July 1986. This will be the first trade show which will bring together cooperatives and other businesses from all over the world to learn about each other and explore opportunities for trading with each other.

The National Cooperative Business Association is holding its 1986 annual meeting here in Washington on April 28 through May 1.

I know my colleagues join me in congratulating the National Cooperative Business Association for 70 years of dedicated service to America's cooperative and wishing the NCBA well in its endeavors over the next 70 years.

AMERICAN RELATIONS WITH THE PEOPLE OF TAIWAN

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, in my capacity as ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Subcommittee on Asia and Pacific Affairs, I paid a brief visit during the Easter recess to Taiwan and the Philippines.

I will be discussing my hopes and concerns regarding United States-Manila relations in upcoming hearings of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. But I would like to take a few moments this morning to outline some of my findings regarding my visit to Taiwan.

THE SECURITY OF TAIWAN

It has been 7 years since the United States took the extraordinary step of withdrawing official recognition from Taiwan and opening full diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China. At that time, I joined with Senator KENNEDY and 31 of our Senate colleagues in pressing legislation to ensure continued close ties between the peoples of Taiwan and the United States—including continued sales of defensive arms necessary to maintain a credible deterrent force. I continue to believe very deeply that this is a commitment which the United States must honor, and is one which serves our national interests and those of our allies.

By and large, I am satisfied with the manner in which the Cranston-Kennedy provision and the overall Taiwan Relations Act has functioned. I believe that tensions across the Taiwan Straits are the lowest they have been at any time since 1949—even despite the continued refusal of some PRC officials to rule out the use of force as a means of reuniting the Chinese people. It is very unlikely that there will be a rise in tensions in the foreseeable future, as all eyes in the region focus on Hong Kong, and the scheduled transfer of sovereignty from Great Britain to the PRC in 1997. Meanwhile, the ties between the people of Taiwan and the United States remain deep, our mutual interests and our common endeavors very broad.

TRADE ISSUES DOMINATE OUR AGENDA

I believe it is a measure of the success of our evolving relationship with the people of Taiwan that issues related to trade and commerce now dominate our agenda.

Taiwan has seen extraordinary success in the past 35 years in the development of the resource-poor island. It has done this largely by relying on its best natural resource—its people—and by making an enduring commitment to education and to understanding the global economy and market opportunities. Prosperity in Taiwan is quite widespread relative to most Third World nations and there has been remarkable success in eradicating deep poverty and spreading economic benefits evenly across class barriers. The authorities on Taiwan can be justifiably proud of these extraordinary steps, which are the envy of developing nations of the free and Communist world alike.

I went to Taiwan as a supporter of expanded trade between our peoples and an opponent of protectionist legislation such as the proposed tariff on textiles and shoe imports. However, I tried to press very strongly on the Taiwan authorities the point that unless America's extraordinarily high trade deficit with them is reduced, such protectionist measures will likely be adopted by the U.S. Congress in the future.

I believe it is especially important for the authorities in Taiwan to take three steps. First, I believe it essential—to our mutual interests—that a greater effort be made to "buy American" when big ticket items like energy production facilities and rapid transit systems are purchased. Second, I believe it is important that some of the old monopolies in such fields as wine, tobacco, and movies be eliminated. Finally, more generally, I believe it is important for Taiwan to demonstrate sensitivity to American services industries seeking to compete in Taiwan's closed markets. Taiwan has moved through an industrialization phase at a remarkable pace and is rapidly becoming a post industrial economy where the majority of workers are employed in service industries. There is no excuse whatsoever for allowing its consumer goods industries to continue to hide behind a wall of protectionist tariffs and import quotas.

I am pleased that the authorities on Taiwan are showing some sensitivity to these concerns. For example, as a result of my recent visit and legislation I coauthored with Senator WILSON, the Wine Equity Act, the Taiwan authorities have announced two small steps of benefit particularly to California. First, they have pledged to slash tariffs on wine imports and to allow American wines full access to the Taiwan markets. Second, they have eliminated import tariffs and quotas on imports of foreign films.

But of course much more needs to be done. Americans are result-oriented. And no amount of concerned rhetoric will resolve these matters if the appalling numbers of the trade imbalance are not reduced expeditiously.

DEMOCRATIC DEVELOPMENT

With the extraordinary economic development on Taiwan has come the opportunity—and I believe the obligation—to make greater progress toward true democracy. When I was on Taiwan, I repeatedly pressed our friends to spur the process of opening up the one-party states' political process. I firmly believe that Taiwan will be a stronger and more secure country if Taipei will permit genuine opposition parties and greater freedom of expression.

In this one sense, the situation in Taipei bears some similarity to the situation in Manila, although otherwise there are many, many differences. As President Aquino told me earlier this month:

> Under Marcos, the Communist guerrillas had two talking points—the crumbling economy and the lack of political freedom. With "people power" and a return to democracy, we have eliminated one of these grievances. Now if we can right the Philippine economy, the communists will have absolutely nothing to offer the people.

The lesson for Taiwan is clear: If authorities would allow genuine democracy to take root, if they would allow opposition parties to organize and publish and campaign, they would make the people of Taiwan even stronger and more united—and therefore better able to resist any potential source of aggression or subversion.

I fully recognize the concerns Taiwan authorities have about the continuing military threat across the Taiwan Straits. But I continue to believe there is no legitimate justification whatsoever for continuing martial law on Taiwan. As a friend of Taiwan, I have repeatedly expressed this view, while urging publicly and privately that the Taiwan authorities release prisoners held for basically political reasons—such as those who remain imprisoned for the Kaoshiung incident. Such steps are crucial, particularly in light of heightened hopes and expectations for democracy in Asia in the wake of developments in Manila.

Mr. President, I am pleased by the continued growth of ties between the people of the United States and the people of Taiwan. I was especially gratified that during my visit on Taiwan that I was able to meet with some of the young scholars who represent Taiwan's future. As I discussed issues which will confront us all as we prepare for the 21st century on the Pacific Rim, my confidence in the future of democracy throughout the Pacific was reinforced.

SENATOR HATCH'S ESSAY ON OPPRESSION IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to my colleagues' attention a recent column by Senator HATCH on the continuing oppression of the Ethiopian people.

For much of last year, Americans sat in stunned silence as pictures of millions of starving Ethiopians reached the United States. We responded, as we have so many times, with overwhelming generosity, and immediately, massive shipments of food and other relief supplies were en route from the United States to Ethiopia.

But food assistance alone is not enough. We cannot be content with merely alleviating the hunger in Ethiopia. We must also move quickly to meet the Ethiopian people's thirst for freedom. Senator HATCH's most recent column on Ethiopia points out how we can begin to do so. I commend it to my colleagues, and I ask unanimous consent that a copy be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Apr. 20, 1986]

ETHIOPIA'S NEW TERROR IS MANMADE—WHAT WE DID AGAINST FAMINE CAN BE DONE FOR LIBERTY

(By Orrin G. Hatch)

Americans have been moved to great compassion and generosity by media reports from Ethiopia. But little reporting has been done on the root causes of the Ethiopians' suffering.

Devastating as the latest drought is, the country's people have survived droughts before by stockpiling food in advance. This drought has been made virtually unbearable because of the policies of a Soviet-style dictator, Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, and his military junta, the Dergue.

Ever since Mengistu seized power in 1977, he has conducted a Stalin-like reign of terror. His forced resettlement program, collectivization of agriculture and disregard for human rights have wreaked economic and social havoc throughout the country, imposing suffering on millions.

The sympathy of people who enjoy freedom should be stirred by these facts:

Mengistu has stated publicly that he intends to move 1.5 million Ethiopians from their traditional lands; 600,000 have been forcibly resettled in the last 18 months. According to the U.S. Food and Agricultural Organization, the regime uses food as "bait" to lure peasants out of the famine-stricken northern provinces where two Marxist resistance groups are based.

A French medical aid group, Medecins sans Frontiers, which was expelled from Ethiopia last December for criticizing the regime, reports that more people are dying now from the effects of the resettlement program than from famine. The doctors estimate that at least 100,000 deaths can be attributed to conditions during transport, where many refugees suffocate in unpressurized planes or are crushed or trampled to death, and in the resettlement areas, where disease and pestilence are rampant and where captured escapees are shot.

The State Department's 1985 Human Rights report describes the situation in Ethiopia as "deplorable," noting that the most alarming abuse last year was the resettlement program, "which was carried out involuntarily with considerable loss in human lives."

Although Mengistu recently announced a moratorium on forced resettlement, we should not expect this to last. Last May, when a sanctions bill was pending in Congress, the Ethiopian dictator temporarily halted the program, only to reinitiate it in September after the bill had been scuttled by the State Department.

Yonas Deressa, president of the Ethiopian Refugees Education and Relief Foundation, says that the Mengistu regime has "done absolutely nothing" to address the long-term effects of the drought in order to prevent its recurrence.

In fact, worse times may lie ahead, because Mengistu's policy of nationalizing all land holdings has greatly disrupted Ethiopia's agricultural production. A Congressional Research Service report notes that "since the revolution, the government has increasingly intervened in marketing and price setting of agricultural products."

After nearly 12 years of Mengistu's rule, the Ethiopian economy is a shambles. Unemployment in the cities is 50% and growing, according to Ethiopian sources.

Mengistu has never held a general election of any kind to legitimize himself or his Communist Workers' Party of Ethiopia. And Ethiopian citizens do not enjoy freedom of the press, freedom of religion, freedom of speech or independent labor unions.

In sum, the policies of Mengistu and his regime are overwhelmingly repressive and a colossal failure. What can the United States do to pressure the Ethiopian government into instituting reforms? Sanctions are one option.

After passing both the House and Senate last year, legislation calling on the President to impose a trade embargo on Ethiopia was blocked by the State Department. A bill currently before the House Foreign Affairs Committee would place Ethiopia on the State Department's list of communist countries, making it ineligible for loans from the Export-Import Bank. This measure, which has been put forward by Rep. Toby Roth (R-Wis.), deserves careful consideration.

At the same time, the United States should not overlook another way to pressure Mengistu. We should support a little-known democratic resistance group, the Ethiopian People's Democratic Alliance, now based in neighboring Sudan. Its leader, Dereje Deressa, claims that with political and financial support from the United States, the group could mobilize 50,000 men in a matter of months. Providing such support would be a positive step toward encouraging the development of a democratic Ethiopia wherein human rights will be respected. It is time we sent Mengistu a strong message that his reign of terror must end.

MAJ. TOM HARVEY, LEGISLATIVE FELLOW

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, since last November, I have been extremely fortunate to have had Maj. (P) Tom Harvey, a 1985 American Political Science Association fellow, working temporarily as a member of my personal staff. Major Harvey is such an intelligent and outstanding young officer, and I have been so impressed by the high quality of his performance, that I wanted to take a few moments to commend him and express my appreciation for his exceptional service and dedicated efforts.

Tom has been involved in a wide array of defense and foreign policy issues. His counsel on these matters was consistently based on solid research and sound, thoroughly considered judgments. When the commercial aircraft crashed in Gander, Newfoundland, killing all of our 101st Airborne Division soldiers aboard, Tom played a critical role in researching and drafting legislation to ease the situation and provide added assistance to families of the victims. His diligence and perservance in this legislative effort is a testament to his capabilities and the genuine concern he felt for the soldiers and their surviving families.

Tom also played a key role during consideration of the Defense reorganization bill by the Senate Armed Services Committee. His knowledge, experience, and ability to assist in the drafting of a number of key amendments enabled me to modify and make substantial improvements in the draft bill.

Keenly intelligent, highly dedicated, and with great personal initiative, Tom immediately became an invaluable addition to my staff. Possessing a high degree of intellectual maturity and consistently reliable judgment, his research and recommendations were always thorough and complete. His ability to express his advice and recommendations in a clear and concise manner orally or in writing was invaluable to me in the consideration of the many complex national security issues which demand my attention.

Tom was also a driving force behind legislation which I recently introduced regarding our national strategy. Recognizing the need for an overall national strategy from which our foreign policy and military strategy should be derived, Tom formulated key recommendations which formed the basis for this vitally important legislation. Throughout this effort he has displayed an exceptional knowledge of the essential elements of strategy and the operations of our national security apparatus.

Tom is extremely well-liked and highly respected by everyone in my office, and he will truly be missed here. His achievements are indicative of his outstanding abilities and his sincere devotion to our Nation. I am extremely appreciative of Tom's efforts and accomplishments while he served on my staff. I am especially grateful also to his wife and family for their understanding during this turbulent legislative cycle.

As Tom moves on to other duties, I would like to once again express my sincere appreciation to him for his outstanding service and wish him the very best in future endeavors.

NATIONAL HOME STUDY COUNCIL'S 60TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this week marks the celebration of the founding of the National Home Study Council—the accrediting council for educational programs conducted through home study. Members from across the United States are gathered this week in San Antonio, TX, to observe this occasion. I want to take this opportunity to express my congratulations to the organization and its members, together with my best wishes for continued success.

Home study—or correspondence—education has flourished for over a century in America. Since its beginning, well over 60 million men and women have studied by correspondence. Many home study courses provide complete vocational training. Others prepare individuals for upgrading in their current work, without losing experience or seniority. With home study, students do not have to give up jobs, leave home, or lose income. Individualized attention and self-paced instruction are offered.

Annually, the National Home Study Council conducts a "Home Study Graduate of the Year" program to recognize outstanding graduates of home study courses. This year, 46 exceptional 1984 home study graduates were judged on their academic records and the level and quality of their contributions in their chosen fields. The judges met in November 1985, and chose 13 finalists. Serving on the distinguished panel of judges was Ms. Janet Mahoney of Good Housekeeping magazine; Mr. G. Dewey Arnold, former regional managing partner of Price Waterhouse and a former NHSC accrediting commission member; and Dr. Richard Rowe, former executive director of the National Advisory Council on International Education, U.S. Department of Education.

Mr. President, on February 26, I was pleased to host a congressional reception to pay tribute to the 13 outstanding graduates. Later that evening, these remarkable students received their awards at a dinner held in their honor. Likewise, I am delighted to be the author of S. 1509, a measure that includes provisions, approved by the Senate last December as part of S. 1887, that would permit benefits earned under the so-called "new GI bill" to be used for home study programs of education.

At this time, Mr. President, I want to extend my heartiest congratulations to these "outstanding graduates." I particularly want to note the achievements of William H. Rochon from Hemet, CA, a graduate of the Columbia School of Broadcasting; Alberta Lee Klein, of La Mirada, CA, who completed courses in fashion merchandising offered by International Correspondence Schools; and S. Sgt. Andrew J. Svaby of Twenty Nine Palms, CA, who completed home study courses from the Marine Corps Institute. Other "Outstanding Graduates" were:

Kathleen Beers of Omaha, Nebraska, who completed a medical transcription course offered by the Hadley School for the Blind.

James R. Chapman of Fort Payne, Alabama, who was graduated from the Gemological Institute of America in Santa Monica, California.

Jo and Rich Doucet of Powhatan, Virginia, graduates of McGraw-Hill Continuing Education Center's National Radio Institute's courses.

James R. Foster of Frederick, Maryland, who completed the respiratory therapy course offered by the California College for Health Sciences.

Barbara S. Lefever of Dover, Pennsylvania, a graduate of the International Correspondence Schools' surveying and mapping course.

Pancrazio Nino Miseo of Owerri, Imo, Nigeria, who received a diploma in hotel administration from the Educational Institute of the American Hotel and Motel Association.

Tyina Stefan of Dodge City, Kansas, a graduate of the American Medical Record Association's independent study program in medical record technology.

Dr. Seth Sykes of Lincolnshire, England, who completed courses through the International Correspondence Institute.

Staff Sergeant Florence G. Williams of Scott AFB, Illinois, a graduate of the U.S. Air Force Extension Course Institute.

Mr. President, the outstanding achievements of these 13 unique men and women, representing more than 3 million correspondence students now studying with NHSC schools, best tell the story of home study. So that my colleagues can appreciate these achievements, I ask unanimous consent that there appear in the RECORD at this point, brief summaries of the stories of these "Home Study Graduates of the Year."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KATHLEEN BEERS

Ms. Kathleen Beers has been blind since birth from a condition known as RFL—blindness caused by excessive oxygen. Kathleen knows that a person can have several careers in a lifetime, so she decided to change hers by taking The Hadley School for the Blind's Medical Transcription course.

Kathleen is the only blind individual in Nebraska working for Northwestern Bell. She has tried to blaze trails for the hiring of other visually imparied persons by continually updating her education, serving as a public speaker to Toastmasters International, and working with her company to choose a career that other blind individuals can follow.

Kathleen has an Associate of Arts degree in Secretarial Science from the College of Saint Mary, where she is currently enrolled in a program to receive a Bachelors in Business Management with an Associate of Arts degree in Computers Information Management.

"Our company asks that we employees 'be the best we can be.' By taking Hadley courses, I have bettered myself to be the best I can be in my field, gained a wealth of knowledge, and I am trying to build a sound career and a future for myself and my family. Thanks to the Hadley School, I will have a much brighter future."

JAMES R. CHAPMAN

Mr. James R. Chapman, a former bomber pilot, survived World War II, only to be stricken with cancer in his mid 30's. He continued to work and enjoyed a successful career in the packaging industry until his medical problems, which ultimately resulted in the loss of his leg and right lung, forced his retirement in 1977. It was then that his interest in gems and jewelry began.

In 1981, Jim and his wife established a retail gem and jewelry business. To better prepare himself for this new career, Jim began taking home study courses from Gemological Institute of America. In 1982, he completed the Diamonds course; in 1983, the Colored Stones course; and in 1984, the Gem Identification course.

Convinced that educating the public is the key to increasing public interest in gems and fine jewelry, Jim founded the DeSoto Gem and Mineral Club (and served as its first president). He also lectures for various local clubs—the Women's Club of Valley's Head, Alabama; the Fort Payne Kiwanis; Lions; Rotary Clubs; Civrettes Club; and the Fort Payne Culture Club.

"Because of my physical problems, it would have been impossible for me to earn my diploma if I couldn't have studied at home. GIA's instructors were most helpful, responding quickly to my questions. They really helped me get through the course."

JO AND RICK DOUCET

Jo and Rick Doucet are both graduates of McGraw-Hill Continuing Education Center's National Radio Institute's courses. Rick completed the TV/Radio Servicing course in 1980 and the Industrial Electronics course in 1984. Also in 1984, Jo finished the Building Construction course.

Even before completing his first course, Rick was able to open his own TV repair shop. Then, in 1979, Rich went to work for the Bank of Virginia as an electrician. To enhance his knowledge of the electronics applications industry, Rick enrolled in his second course. Today Rick is Senior Field Engineer with the Bank of Virginia and has earned the highest employee rating possible. He has also received several awards for outstanding service to his employer.

"The only formal training I've had in electronics has come through correspondence (NRI's courses)." Rick comments. "That says a great deal about the quality of the training I've received."

Jo had worked for local builders and land developers and was impressed by how much her husband had learned from his home study courses. So she decided to take NRI's Building Construction course. Combining her knowledge of business and computers with her NRI training, Jo has opened her own consulting firm, Controlled Construction. She sets up computer systems and trains builders and land developers to use computers and software to conduct their business more effectively. She has landed several contracts, including a six-month contract for a building and land developing firm.

"I was as thrilled to receive my NRI diploma as I would be to get my college degree," says Jo, "because I know how much I worked for it."

JAMES R. FOSTER

Mr. James Foster's only formal training was through the Air Force Cardiopulmonary School many years ago. He felt a weakness in his knowledge in the respiratory aspects of his job as a Critical Care Therapist at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland. To further his formal education, Jim decided to take courses from the California College for Health Sciences.

It had taken Jim three years to complete his associate degree while he worked full-time. With the birth of their second child, Jim dreaded the thought of trying to maintain a normal family life and going to school in the evenings. The Educational Coordinator where Jim worked told him about earning his degree through correspondence study and about CCHS's courses. This was just what he was looking for. Jim completed CCHS's Respiratory Therapy Technician course in February of 1984.

"California College provided me with a quality of education that has been reflected both by my national examination board scores and also by my improved clinical proficiency. The option of taking a traditional program in respiratory therapy involved a very long process and it would have been difficult to maintain a normal family life. Professional advancement through California College has been the perfect solution for me."

ALBERTA LEE KLEIN

Alberta Lee Klein enjoyed an upwardly mobile career in financial planning, financial analysis, and financial data systems in the food service industry until 1984. Bitten by the "entrepreneurial bug," Lee contemplated a career change into the fashion industry where she would have more creativity in her work and a more direct involvement with customers. She researched classes at several trade schools but could not find a class schedule to fit her needs. She decided that the only way to continue her earning power, gain practical experience, and study her chosen field of endeavor was to study via correspondence. International Correspondence Schools offered just the course she wanted.

One month prior to completing the ICS course in Fashion Merchandising, Lee and a partner started their own company: Casa Le'. Since that time, the firm has successfully designed, sold, manufactured, and delivered two seasons of women's sportswear.

Lee enjoys sharing with others the knowledge and skills learned from her course. She and a partner have a second consulting business developing marketing plans for retail outlets. She uses her ICS materials for reference in the preparation of marketing plans, sales promos, advertising tactics, and visual merchandising strategies.

"Each section of the course was interesting and helpful. I have all of the course study materials on my desk at my office and use then daily for reference. I will continue to use the knowledge gained from the course for many years to come."

BARBARA S. LEFEVER

Barbara S. Lefever is a free-lance writer. Her recently completed novel, The Stargazers, traces the lives of Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, the 18th century surveyors of the Mason-Dixon line. Barbara enrolled in the International Correspondence Schools' Surveying and Mapping course in order to authenticate her writings about surveying.

Barbara points out in her book that the Mason-Dixon Line, contrary to popular belief, is neither a railroad nor the dividing line between the Northern and Southern states, but is the border between Pennsylvania and Maryland. As a result of continuing conflict brought about by the failure of the Penns of Pennsylvania and the Calverts of Maryland to agree on the limits of their wilderness territories, the boundary became the subject of the longest Chancery suit in history and the scene of bloody altercations for more than 80 years. This situation prompted the hiring of Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon in 1763 to survey accurately the disputed 233-mile boundary with the help of astronomy.

"Indeed, the benefits I derived from studying the course have been useful in the composition of my novel, The Stargazers. I could not have written it as interestingly or as intelligently without the help of my ICS course."

PANCRAZIO NINO MISEO

Pancrazio Nino Miseo studied Hotel Management at Cornell University before receiving his diploma in Hotel Administration from the Educational Institute of the American Hotel & Motel Association. Before his present position as hotel manager for the Concorde Hotel in Owerri, Imo, Nigeria, Mr. Miseo worked in many parts of the world, including the Ivory Coast, Seychelles, Switzerland, Belgium, Italy and England.

Mr. Miseo took the hotel administration courses because he wanted to learn and progress in his chosen career, and to make sure that any hotel he worked for provided the best service possible.

Mr. Miseo believes that he has done a lot to improve the standards of Nigerian hotels. He is training staff locally with the help of other expatriots. He has been asked to serve on the Olympic Committee to help organize a sports club and to give advice on how to improve the tourist industry in Nigeria.

"I have benefited in my work and also personally by the courses I took from Educational Institute of AH&MA. Higher positions have obviously provided higher wages and carry greater responsibility. The knowledge I gained from my home study courses has helped me handle these added responsibilities."

WILLIAM H. ROCHON

William H. Rochon used to drop by local radio stations when he was in high school. Sometimes the disc jockeys would invite him to sit in on their shift. "Someday," he thought, "I'm going to be a radio announcer." Columbia School of Broadcasting helped him fulfill his dream.

Following a series of family hardships in his native Wisconsin, Bill moved to California. He enrolled in Columbia and he graduated in 1984. While studying, he worked for KPCC, a non-profit station, doing the announcing and music direction. After he graduated from Columbia, he began working for KHSJ-AM and KHYE-PM in Hemet, California.

Bill, who has adopted the radio name of Rick Eliot, is the full-time AM morning personality for the adult contemporary station. His duties include announcing the news, copywriting for commercials on both stations, and production of most of the programming he plays. He also manages to produce most of the advertising he writes. Bill also works as the emcee for local talent shows and is involved with sponsoring activities for the American Cancer Society and the Hemet Fair.

"Go confidently in the direction of your dreams. A winner is a loser who makes it, because it really comes down to believing that you can do anything if you only try. To accomplish great things, you must not only act, but dream. Columbia School of Broadcasting helped me to make my dream a reality."

TYINA STEFAN

Ms. Tyina Stefan was fascinated by medicine while she was growing up in Park, Kansas. After graduating from high school, she attended a community college and received a secretarial certificate. While working as a bookkeeper at the Gove County Hospital in Quinter, Kansas, Tyina learned about a program in medical record technology.

In 1978, Tyina moved to Dodge City, Kansas and began work as a medical transcriptionist at Humana Hospital Dodge City. She took some night classes and in 1981 she enrolled in the American Medical Record Association's Independent Study Program in Medical Record Technology.

While enrolled in the course, Tyina was promoted to Assistant Director of Medical Records and received the Humana Hospital Dodge City Outstanding Employee Award for the third quarter of 1982. During this time she redesigned quality assurance forms for her department and designed a work scheduling system that ensures a smooth flow of work. After graduating from the AMRA course in 1984, Tyina wrote the coding guidelines for her department.

"With the knowledge I gained from my AMRA courses, I was able to complete projects that have helped our department supply high quality, timely information to the health care team, and to improve patient care."

ANDREW J. SVABY

Staff Sergeant Andrew J. Svaby, a Marine Reservist, completed 76 home study courses from the Marine Corps Institute in 1984. Thirty-one of these courses carried a grade of 95–100% on the final exams. He completed these courses while holding down a full-time and a part-time civilian job to help with his mother's chemotherapy treatments, being a single parent, coaching midget soccer and wrestling, helping three marines past their state GED exams with extensive preparation, and being heavily involved in the Marine Corps League and Toys for Tots activities.

Sergeant Svaby has the difficult task of keeping interest, enthusiasm, morale, and self-discipline high between drills for the Allentown, Pennsylvania Marines. His MCI courses have helped him in providing various public service functions. There are hundreds of individuals and families in the Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania area who have completed other high school and college courses, a sports season, a beauty pageant and other endeavors all because of Sergeant Svaby.

Sergeant Svaby is always "on-call" with the Allentown Marines for counseling and tutoring. In addition, he speaks to other training groups in the Marine Reserve at least six times a year "at his own expense" to improve morale, enthusiasm, and completions of the MCI correspondence education programs.

"There is a great sense of self-worth that you have been a catalyst, a shaker and a mover, and an inspiration to other Marines who would otherwise have never enrolled, opened a book, or put a number two lead pencil to an MCI course."

SETH SYKES

Dr. Seth Alexander Greer Sykes is a private family physician in the United Kingdom. Rather than settling down to the responsibility of making money and advancing his career, Dr. Sykes was concerned about the deepest levels of human need. He accepted a position as a Primary Care Physican within a large military hosptial in Saudi Arabia. His first few months there were very difficult because he was separated from his wife and four children.

Rather than surrendering to despair, Dr. Sykes set his mind to the study of International Correspondence Institute's courses and his heart on helping other people. He initiated a small fellowship group and soon found he was functioning as a lay preacher. When the local Presbyterian church (which was ministering to the needs of expatriots) was closed because of government pressure, Dr. Sykes found himself in charge of ten lay preachers and a large, but widely scattered, church community. His studies with ICI found direct application through these varied ministries.

Dr. Sykes has now completed the degree requirements for a Bachelor of Arts degree in Religious Studies and has returned to medical practice in the United Kingdom.

"My ICI courses and study were to prove invaluable as we met together weekly for prayer and Bible study."

FLORENCE G. WILLIAMS

Staff Sergeant Florence G. Williams is a graduate of the U.S. Air Force Extension Course Institute. She has integrated her off-duty academic studies and professional interests into a systematic philosophy of military education. She has used her success in correspondence study not only to enhance her own career interests but also to serve as an example for subordinates and other Air Force members to emulate.

The knowledge Sergeant Williams has gained from ECI courses has enabled her to implement improved warehousing procedures and to increase inventory accuracy to 98.9 percent. Her efforts contributed to the individual Equipment Unit receiving an excellent rating during a recent Management Effectiveness Inspection.

Sergeant Williams is a member of the National Vocational Education Association and has recently received her Bachelor of Science degree in Occupational Education. Through experience with ECI programs, she firmly believes that home study plays a vital role in allowing people to meet present and future work demands.

"I realize that the future of the Air Force and our country depends on the current 'cross training' trends. Home study courses will play a vital role in allowing employees to meet their future work demands. ECI courses have certainly helped me to excel in my own career."

TRIBUTE TO MERRITT W. SPRAGUE, MANAGER OF THE FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I rise to draw to the attention of my colleagues the resignation of Merritt W. Sprague, Manager of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. Mr. Sprague will leave his position to devote more time to his family farming operation.

I believe, based on premium volume between 1948 and 1984, my home State of North Dakota has been the No. 1 user of this form of insurance. I know many a farmer who's still farming today because he had the good sense to purchase crop insurance. I hope for our farmer's sake that Mr. Sprague will continue to exert some influence over the Corporation's further development.

For those of you who don't know Mr. Sprague, he came to Washington, DC, from Illinois. On the family farm in Pike County, one of the leading hog producing counties in the United States, Mr. Sprague grew corn, wheat, and soybeans on 2,000 acres and annually marketed 5,000 hogs. He also served as the Illinois State chairman of Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service from 1973 to 1977.

In Washington, Mr. Sprague served as Deputy Administrator for Commodity Operations at the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service beginning in March 1981. While there he was responsible for the administration of the milk price support program, management and storage of all Commodity Credit Corporation owned inventories—dairy products, food and feed grains, and sweeteners—and procurement and transportation for Public Law 480, title II programs.

The passage of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation Act of 1980 overnight obligated the Corporation to move from being a limited pilot insurance program to becoming the primary form of Federal disaster protection for farmers. Between 1980 and 1982, when Mr. Sprague assumed the leadership of the Corporation, five diferent men sat in the Manager's seat. The early 1980's were turbulent times for the Corporation and demanded resourceful and innovative leadership. Merritt Sprague delivered.

The results Mr. Sprague and the FCIC achieved in a short period of time are significant. Under his leadership, FCIC developed and fully implemented a production based guarantee program, which makes crop insurance attractive for our Nation's most productive farmers. County programs increased almost 300 percent, from 4,629 in 1980 to 18,892 in 1985. Acres insured, insurance in force, and premiums also increased dramatically. In 1980, acres insured were 26.6 million compared with 48 million for the 1985 crop year. Insurance in force increased for the same period from $3 billion in 1980 to over $7 billion in 1985. Premiums increased from $158 million in 1980 to over $440 million in 1985 due to increased participation.

Sure, I could recite a litany of the problems we have with the crop insurance program. So could Mr. Sprague. But, to achieve these kinds of results while American agriculture is going through some wrenching adjustments required solid leadership. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in thanking Mr. Sprague for his dedication and commitment to American agriculture and the crop insurance program.

TRIBUTE TO FLORENCE S. LOWE

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to praise Florence S. Lowe who recently left her post of Chief Public Affairs Advisor at the National Endowment for the Arts. During her 16-year tenure at the NEA, spanning four Presidential administrations, the name Florence Lowe has become synonomous with arts in America. What Florence Lowe has done for the betterment of the arts in this country is unparalleled, and for that she has our eternal thanks.

Ms. Lowe came to the NEA in March 1970. Since that time Florence Lowe has diligently toiled, often times in anonimity, to further the endowment's cause and mission. Over those 16 years the eyes of the public have gradually started to open and now, due in large part to Florence's efforts, the endowment boasts a substantially increased recognition factor.

In a glowing tribute to Ms. Lowe's accomplishments' the National Council of the Arts adopted a resolution documenting Florence's invaluable career at the NEA. Mr. President, I request that the context of the resolution be printed at the conclusion of my statement.

Mr. President, to illustrate further to this body the depth of Ms. Lowe's character, allow me to share some of Florence's own thoughts on this warm tribute to her accomplishments. Florence stated "In all the words that were used in the resolution, all marvelous, flattering and very meaningful, the word that stands out is 'love', because that best describes my own feelings."

I know my colleagues join me in wishing her well for the future. Her contributions to the endowment and the whole arts movement in this country will never be forgotten.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE ARTS RESOLUTION, NOVEMBER 1, 1985

Whereas Florence S. Lowe has put the National Endowment for the Arts into the consciousness of America, and

Whereas she served with distinction through 15 years of growth and turmoil and achievement for the endowment, and

Whereas she has both shamelessly and skillfully manipulated all the levers of all of the media in this country, and

Whereas there can never be another Florence Lowe to do all these things with quite the same style and effect, and

Whereas the National Council on the Arts has never previously broken from its solemn and judicious manner in commenting on matters of public concern;

Be it now resolved that the National Council on the Arts here assembled wishes to break all tradition, and to express in the wildest and most raucous and tumultuous manner possible, its total admiration, deep affection and profound thanks for the lady who gave us our public face;

Be it further resolved that as a token of our esteem, Florence Lowe is hereby authorized and empowered—even entreated—to continue planting good stories, giving influential dinner parties, and otherwise manipulating the national media in our favor until the end of time; and

Finally, be it resolved that we return now to our normal reserved nature and record for history, in the simplest and quietest way we know, that we love her and all her works, and that we are proud that she is our own Florence Lowe.

OPPOSITION TO THE FEDERAL OCEAN SPORTS FISHING LICENSE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the President has proposed, in his fiscal year 1987 budget, a Federal Ocean Sports Fishing License of $10 minimum per angler. Each coastal State would be required to provide $5 of the fee to the Federal Government, and the States would retain the remainder of the fee. The States could also assess an additional amount to recoup the cost of administering the license program and to recover the cost of fishery management within that State.

The administration argues that since recreational fishermen benefit from Federal maintenance of our coastal resources, the fishermen should bear the cost of administering Federal services which support recreational fishing.

I think we should closely examine the facts of this proposal. In fiscal year 1986, the National Marine Fisheries Service received less than $3 million to support recreational fishing. The President's proposed fishing licenses user fee is projected to raise $200 million over the next 5 years. Clearly this is a burden on the fishermen far beyond that which the Federal Government requires to cover its services. Furthermore, salt water fishermen spend most of their time in inshore waters which are under the management of the States. Recreational fishermen are already paying an excise tax on equipment and motor fuel which goes into the State management programs operated through the Fish and Wildlife Service. I might add, that these States management plans are operated at no cost to the Federal Government.

While I have not been supportive of the user fee concept, this particular license or user fee tax greatly disturbs me more so than the usual user fee. The administration justifies the need for this tax by telling us that the recreational fishermen should help pay the cost of maintaining those services from which they benefit. However, in this particular case, the Federal Government would use the revenue from this tax for deficit reduction, and not for those services from which they are benefiting.

Mr. President, I urge the administration not to push for legislation imposing this license fee. This proposal goes far beyond asking the fishermen to help pay the cost of Federal maintenance of the coastal resources. This proposal is simply a tax on those that enjoy sport fishing.

CHUCK PERSON APPRECIATION DAY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, today, April 24, 1986, has been declared "Chuck Person Appreciation Day" by the city of Brantley, AL, by Brantley High School, and by the Crenshaw County Auburn Alumni Club. I am sure that everyone involved will have a most enjoyable time. I am delighted to rise today to congratulate Chuck Person for his outstanding achievements playing basketball for Auburn University. This year, the Auburn basketball team was one of the final eight teams remaining in the NCAA national tournament when they suffered defeat to the team which went on to win the championship. Auburn's success was largely due to Chuck's great talents. His accomplishments at Auburn are tremendous. There, he is the all-time leading scorer, and led the team in scoring and rebounding both as a senior and as a junior. He ranks third in the Southeastern Conference's all-time scoring chart, was honored as the amateur athlete of the year for basketball in 1985 by the U.S. Olympic Committee, and was selected as an alternate for the U.S. Olympic squad in 1984. These are just a few of Chuck's great successes. To name them all would take pages.

Chuck Person has demonstrated that hard work and dedication pays off. Participation in athletics teaches discipline, drive and the value of team effort. Chuck has set a great example for youths to follow in Alabama and the Nation. I salute Chuck for his accomplishments, and wish the citizens of the city of Brantley, AL, Brantley High School, and the Crenshaw County Auburn Alumni Club every success in their activities today.

A TRIBUTE TO JUDGE JOHN HENRY ARMSTRONG

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to commend the great efforts of Judge John Henry Armstrong, probate judge of Washington County, in my home State of Alabama. Judge Armstrong has provided the people of Washington County with excellent leadership and understanding in his duties both on the bench, and as ex officio chairman of the county commission.

In his service, Judge Armstrong has labored to maintain an open door policy with his constituents throughout the daily discharge of business. In this way, all those with grievances are able to voice their problems and opinions. This practice guarantees that all elements of a case or conflict are heard, and that the parties involved are satisfied that their views were considered. Thus, Judge Armstrong has implemented a most effective addition while resolving disputes. Furthermore, with this open rapport, the judge is able to provide advice and counsel to any who may seek it. This is a traditional role of a probate judge in Alabama, and is important in giving valuable leadership and direction to the entire county.

I am delighted to see that Judge Armstrong has been so effective in perpetuating the valuable role of the office of probate judge. He is a man who possesses great understanding, equity, and integrity. He is a worthy member of his community and a great example to those he represents.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Mobile Press Register, which describes Judge Armstrong's achievements, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROBATE JUDGE'S OFFICE SEEN NERVE CENTER FOR ENTIRE COUNTY

(By David Gary)

CHATOM, ALA.—John Henry Armstrong knew the official duties of a county probate judge when he first ran for the office in 1976.

He said it was only after his election that he learned the true scope of the office—that it serves as an informal information nerve center for the entire county.

"This office keeps really busy with the telephones and there always seems to be an office full of people," he said.

"They are in here wanting to know everything. You get asked a lot of things and I believe that we get asked every type of question in the world. Not to mention that they think we will know the details of everything going on in the county."

The barrage of inquiries on everything from legal questions to "When does the school meeting start" has not made Armstrong a recluse from the public.

"I maintain an open-door policy here," he said "I may not be able to stick to any kind of schedule, and someone may have to wait a little while to see me, but I try to see or speak to everyone who wants to talk to me."

"I've learned that you have to know the people in any setting to learn the way they tick and I try to treat everybody the way that I would want to be treated."

Armstrong's job carries with it the added responsibility of being "ex officio chairman" of the four-member Washington county commission.

"They are four of the greatest fellows to work with. We may spend a lot of time in the meetings disagreeing, debating and arguing a lot, but when the meeting is over, it's all put aside."

Recent challenges to the county commission, according to Armstrong, include attempts to implement federal fair labor act overtime guidelines.

"We've had to examine what we do and as much as possible avoid overtime with the county employees. We have to stay away from it (overtime payments) because of the cost involved."

Armstrong said another problem facing county governments is the general belief that city governments are more essential.

"As county officials we represent all the county, including city dwellers. But it is tough to keep us in a higher profile than city officials. The county officials are representing a greater number of people and a greater geographical area."

According to the judge, this image of county and city governments is illustrated by the lower amounts of federal funds going to county governments.

"This is a gross impairment to our ability to serve the people," he said.

Being in the forefront of public criticism and scrutiny is another part of being judge, according to Armstrong.

During moments of heated debate, such as recent controversies over the operation of the county-owned hospital, Armstrong said that dealing with difficulties in a low-key fashion helps to calm the heat of the moment.

"We're always on the front line, but I've found that if things are dealt with in a low-key fashion; things go better. Nevertheless, emotions still ride high."

Armstrong also thinks that a proper use of humor also has a place during heated discussions.

"I try to exercise humor in what we do . . . ," he said.

Versatility is another reason the judge likes his job.

"The best thing about the job is meeting all the different types of people. The variety it has in terms of the hours I spend out of the office dealing with different situations is another thing I like."

Carrying the weight of judicial responsibility is one of the job's tougher aspects, he said.

"Dealing with estates, guardianships and adoption cases is through the probate office. We have contested adoptions and this get touchy. There are domestic situations in which we have to decide how to handle the children."

Resounding his belief that maintaining an open-door policy is a must, Armstrong said confidence plays an important part in maintaining a good public rapport.

"I've made a habit of keeping confidential what people want me to keep confidential. It's not good for people to have any reason to lose confidence in me," he said.

A county native who was born and still lives in Millry 15 miles north of the county seat of Chatom, Armstrong teaches a senior men's Sunday school class at Millry Baptist Church.

An outdoorsman who enjoys deer and turkey seasons best, Armstrong said his greatest aim in sporting life is to one day out-hunt Monroe County Probate Judge Otha Lee Biggs.

After graduating from Millry High School, Armstrong, 39, got a degree in business management from the University of Alabama.

He is married to the former Glenda Overstreet, a native of Waynesboro, Miss. They are parents of Tera, 12, Brandon, 9, and Tory, 8.

TAX REFORM

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, on April 6, 1986, an article was printed in the Washington Post written by Harold Apolinsky, a tax lawyer and law professor from Birmingham, AL, on the issue of tax reform. In his article, Mr. Apolinsky correctly points out that current tax reform proposals have strayed far from the goals of simplifying our tax system and making it fairer to lower- and middle-income taxpayers. Instead, we appear to be on the brink of simply proposing another major revision of our Tax Code not unlike the six major revisions Congress has passed since 1976.

There is no doubt but that most Americans believe that our tax laws have grown needlessly burdensome and confusing and inequitable in their application. However, the tax reform proposals which have been the focus of Congress over the past several months do not thus far appear to achieve the goals of simplification or fairness. The House tax bill is over 1,300 pages long and would no doubt require countless regulations in order to be understood and implemented. The Senate Finance Committee bill appears to be headed in the same direction. Unfortunately, the tax laws have been changed so often in the past several years that there is currently a backlog of 400 unfinished regulations. Furthermore, it seems to me that Congress is tending toward reform legislation which would merely shift the tax burden from one group of taxpayers to another without achieving fairness, an essential ingredient of tax reform.

Mr. President, I also fear that Congress is moving so rapidly on tax reform legislation that we are not taking the time necessary to analyze the impact of its provisions on our economic and industrial policy. It is vital to our economic security that we determine through extensive and careful study the potential impact on economic growth of the changes Congress proposes in our tax laws. We must ensure that in our zeal for tax reform we don't weaken incentives for individuals to invest and save or for business to invest in plant and equipment. To do so would be to undermine our country's long-term economic growth.

I urge my colleagues to read Mr. Apolinsky's article and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHANGES JUST COST MONEY

(By Harold I. Apolinsky)

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—House bill 3838 contains 1,300 pages of changes to the Internal Revenue Code. The Senate version will also contain more than 1,300 pages of changes. It is time to call "time out" in this annual tax game and admit that this legislation is not fair, not simple and will not promote economic growth. It is simply another massive change of our tax laws.

Too many changes have been made to the tax laws in the last few years. Consider the number of subsections in the Internal Revenue Code that have been changed:

	Number of code subsections affected
Tax Reform Act of 1976	1,849
Revenue Act of 1978	664
Economic Recovery Tax Act, 1981	483
Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act, 1982	530
1984 Deficit Reduction Act	2,245

	Number of code subsections affected
1984 Retirement Equity Act	44

[1] 3,302 since 1981.

The number of code subsections to be changed by the proposed Internal Revenue Act of 1985 (H.R. 3838) is 4,051.

The 22 tax lawyers in our firm receive significant fees for lobbying, explaining and implementing tax changes. If this latest effort continues and the law passes, we will enjoy another round of fees. But it is time to put our self-interest aside and be honest.

There used to be 15 years between major tax revisions. The 1954 code was enacted 15 years after the 1939 code, and the 1969 major tax revision came 15 years later. It takes time to study, learn and understand the law. It takes the Treasury time to write interpretive regulations. Tax lawyers and tax accountants readily admit they make their most aggressive tax planning recommendations in areas of the law where no regulations have been issued.

At a time when federal funding is being limited, the tax-writing staffs should be shifted from the chore of preparing and drafting annual tax legislation to writing regulations. The result would be simplicity through better understanding, fairness through nationwide consistency and better compliance by taxpayers.

The tax system would also be improved if the dollars spent on annual changes were appropriated to the Internal Revenue Service instead. Taxpayers understand that less than 2 percent of tax returns are audited. Why not set a goal of 10 percent? Fees for lawyers and accountants might drop, but revenue might increase significantly.

Title XI of H.R. 3838 contains 122 pages of changes to the tax laws affecting employee retirement savings plans. The Senate staff alone has made 50 pages of proposals.

Congressionally mandated changes to retirement plans that reduce savings in the interest of reform seem to occur annually. Employee retirement plans have been significantly and adversely affected by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 and the Retirement Equity Act of 1984. The three major tax laws have required four costly amendments to retirement plans. The result is that plan terminations, as compared with new plans being adopted, have increased 300 percent in five years.

Some 700,000 qualified plans are now in force covering 55 million employees. More than 600,000 plans have been adopted by small businesses. In the past 3 years amendments in these plans have forced business to pay their lawyers and accountants at least $3,000 per plan, or more than $2 billion. H.R. 3838, if passed and signed by the president, would force another round of amendments at a cost of at least $2,000 each, or more than $1.4 billion. Why reduce benefits to employees and increase plan expenses? This is not fairness or simplicity. The only economic growth is for lawyers and accountants.

Recent reports indicate that the rate of savings in the United States has declined to a 35-year low of 2.9 percent of disposable income. This is an average annualized volume of 34 percent below that of last year. Why pass laws that further reduce incentives to save, thus causing termination of savings plans?

The employee plans divisions of the IRS are swamped. One division staffed and planned for the submission of 20,000 plan changes in 1986. To date, 30,000 have been submitted, with 54,000 expected for the year. Turnaround time has swelled from 4 months to 9 months, with 12 months expected. Nearly all of the staff has, of necessity, been diverted to reviewing and processing amendments, not auditing operations. Plan terminations now account for almost 30 percent of the workload. Those pushing for more pension changes should ask the IRS whether more changes are needed. They would find the interest in more changes to be at the bottom of the agenda and survival of the system at the top.

A lot of personal capital has been invested in this latest tax reform effort—by the president; by Donald Regan, who stated this effort; and by Treasury Secretary James Baker, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert Packwood, who desperately want to finish it. They and their staffs have made an honest and determined effort. This should not be viewed as a Republican Party problem or a Democratic Party problem. It is a congressional problem—of too many changes. Let us hope the members of Congress are frank enough to admit that three rates versus 16, plus a higher standard deduction for some, is not fairness of simplicity and will not encourage economic growth.

The tax code should be left alone. It will become fair and simple through understanding and application. Economic growth will never be achieved through tax law changes; it will come from letting businessmen and motivated employees focus on marketing, merchandising and producing quality products at competitive prices. They should not be spending time and dollars on figuring out changes in the tax law.

TEXTILE IMPORTS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, recently an article appeared in the Greenville News entitled "Textile Union Officials Defend Actions by Mills." This piece quotes representatives of the major textile trade unions as saying they are convinced that rising imports are responsible for the massive plant closings and job losses in the beleaguered textile industry. Officials of both the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union said that if imports are not the cause of layoffs, it would be obvious to their organizations.

Mr. President, over the past 5 years, imports to textile and apparel products have more than doubled. Directly linked to these surging imports has been the loss of over 350,000 American jobs. A vital domestic industry, which the Defense Department ranks second only to steel in importance to national security, is struggling to survive. Without a doubt, uncontrolled imports are the cause of the problems facing the American textile industry.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, textile and apparel imports continue to climb. The year 1985 was the 5th consecutive year that imports of those products reach new record levels. For the 6 months from September 1985–February 1986, more textile and apparel imports came into our country than for the entire year of 1981. In addition, textile and apparel imports were up 27.7 percent for the first 2 months of 1986 over the first 2 months of 1985. Strong action is desperately needed to preserve American jobs in this important industry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article referred to above be printed in its entirety at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

TEXTILE UNION OFFICIALS DEFEND ACTIONS BY MILLS

(By Chris Weston)

WASHINGTON.—Representatives of the major textile trade unions say they are convinced that textile manufacturers are not using rising imports as a pretense to fire workers to proceed with plant modernization plans.

Some congressmen involved on both sides of the legislative fight for a textile industry protection bill have said privately in recent weeks there are doubts in Washington about the severity of the import problem. Some have suggested privately that some in the industry may be exaggerating the role of imports in triggering layoffs and plant closings.

Often cited is a recent study by a Clemson University professor concluding that a comparable level of layoffs would have occurred without the steady rise in imports. Richard McKenzie, in a study prepared for American University in St. Louis, said in February that modernization efforts and increased productivity would have claimed a high level of manufacturing jobs even without the import threat.

The study was denounced by leading textile industry officials and economists at the American Textile Manufacturers Institute.

Officials of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, the two major trade unions said in a recent interview that an exploitation of the import issue by the industry to close plants and reduce employment with a minimum of labor unrest would have been spotted by the unions.

Art Gundersheim, the assistant to the president of the ACTWU, said Monday that "if someone is giving us a phony story, it would be blatantly obvious."

Gundersheim's union, along with the ILGWU, are major players in the lobbying bid being orchestrated by the textile and apparel industry to override on Aug. 6 President Reagan's veto of legislation to roll back textile imports and put strict limits on future growth.

He said he suspects that some manufacturers, in a few instances, may be dramatizing the impact of imports to proceed with modernization plans that would reduce their work force or in closing plants that were no longer profitable.

Wilbur Daniels, the executive vice president of the ILGWU, said, "I think you would not find the two major unions in the field joining with the industry if that were the case."

Officials of both unions said the labor organizations routinely monitor the manufacturing plants.

Private critics of the textile protection legislation, including some who are publicly supporting the bill, say imports have provided the industry with a convenient scrapegoat to proceed with modernization plans that cost some workers their jobs. With such an outside threat, they say, the industry has been able to reduce employment and close marginal plants with a minimum of labor unrest.

Since 1981, 240 textile plants have been closed with a direct loss from those closings of about 40,000 jobs, according to figures compiled by the American Textile Manufacturers Institute. Since 1973, employment at textile plants has fallen from just over 1 million to about 703,000 in 1985, with jobs in apparel plants falling from 1.4 million in 1973 to about 1.1 million in 1985, according to the industry figures.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is now closed.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 120, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 120) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Pending: Moynihan amendment No. 1800, to modify the treatment of the general revenue sharing program.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the pending amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN].

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CBO OIL TAX STUDY

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, while waiting for the distinguished senior Senator from Florida for the purpose of discussing when we should advise Senator MOYNIHAN, the proponent of the pending amendment, to be on the floor to begin discussion of his amendment. I would like to take some of our time off the resolution to talk about a Congressional Budget Office study which is going to be released today. It has to do with import fees on foreign oil, and on certain combinations of import fees and gasoline taxes, and other energy tax options.

I had an opportunity to read it yesterday. I would like to take a few moments to describe this study because I think it is very interesting. As I indicated, it will be made public today. We will see to it that all of those interested in the U.S. Senate and those interested in the media and around the country get copies of it.

Several weeks ago, I, along with the ranking member of the Budget Committee, asked CBO to conduct a study on energy tax options. I have spoken to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and told him that this study was forthcoming and that I thought he might find it interesting as he proceeds with his various activities in the tax writing committee.

I would like to submit today for the Senate some preliminary remarks on CBO's study.

We asked CBO to review energy tax options in light of, one, the need to reduce the deficits; two, the recent decline in energy prices; and finally, the depression in the domestic oil industry that is currently upon us. More specifically, we asked CBO to look at the effect of several tax options on the deficit, on various regions of the country, on the oil industry, and on the economy as a whole.

My particular interest in this study was to examine a tax or a combination of taxes which would meet several national objectives at once. First, I wanted to know to what extent the various energy tax options would reduce the deficit. Second, in light of the current energy situation, I wanted to know that energy taxes could be used to strengthen our energy security. Third, I felt that an energy tax could only be successful if it were spread evenly and equitably across the country.

The CBO study makes some powerful observations. I would like to begin by discussing CBO's assessment of our current and projected energy. At $13 a barrel, CBO estimates that the current U.S. energy policy will cause our dependence on imported oil to grow from the current level of 30 percent to 54 percent in 1991.

Let me emphasize this point. Oil on the spot market is already lower than $13 a barrel, and some wondered whether our oil dependency would change dramatically as these prices came tumbling down. CBO concluded that at $13 a barrel, leaving U.S energy policy unchanged, our dependency on imported oil will grow from the current level of 30 percent to 54 percent by 1991. In addition, CBO estimates that stripper well production will decline by 500,000 barrels per day.

I would like to note there that this domestic oil production will be probably lost forever. Most stripper wells, if shut in, will probably never reopen because of the rules that apply to shutting them in and because of the economics prohibit bringing them back into production.

The study examines five energy options. Before getting into the study, I would point out to my colleagues that oil taxes are not new. Certainly, some people do not like these taxes. Others think they are absolutely necessary.

The most notable is the windfall profits tax which was imposed on domestic oil production during a period of rapidly increasing prices.

CBO estimates that the five options would reduce the deficit between $8 billion and $25 billion annually, depending upon the option. The summary of the study shows the different deficit reduction impacts under varying oil price assumptions.

I would like to note for comparative purposes that our budget resolution assumes $18.7 billion of revenues in fiscal year 1987.

With respect to the energy policy, CBO found that all options would encourage energy conservation. However, only an oil import fee and a combination of an oil import fee and the gasoline tax would alleviate the current decline in the oil industry and ameliorate the rapid increase in our dependency on oil imports. In fact, the other energy tax options would have a detrimental effect on domestic oil production, which is already in a depressed condition.

Some of the options have the usual drawback of energy taxes. They hit some regions of the country harder than others. For example, an oil import fee would have a negative impact on the Northeast and on the Midwest, while a gasoline tax would punish the West. In addition, there is a concern that an energy tax would be regressive. CBO found that as a percent of expenditures, the tax burden from the options they examined would not vary by income classes.

I would like to call to the Senate's attention two particularly interesting points made in the study. First, between one-quarter and one-third of the burden of energy tax options would be borne by foreign producers. Second, the magnitude of the taxes under consideration was so small that there would be no discernible effects on the economy as a whole. I expect criticism of energy taxes from opponents, and I expect criticism of these suggestions even from the White House. Most will say that it will slow economic growth. I would point out that CBO found that an energy tax could influence the economy in either direction.

For the purpose of this study, CBO assumed that the economy would not be affected. This is a standard practice for the analysis of tax options. For example, the Department of the Treasury and others in their analysis of the revenue effects of the President's tax reform bill, which will shift billions of dollars in tax burden, assume that the economy will not be affected by the tax bill.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I would direct my colleagues to one of the options that I feel deserves close study, the combination of an oil import fee with a gasoline tax. Even at a rather modest level, 6 cents a gallon and $2.50 a barrel, this combination would reduce the deficit by more than $10 billion in the first year and would go up slightly in each of the outyears. At the same time, it would alleviate the decline in the oil industry, saving thousands of jobs, and clearly would protect significant investments and institutions that finance them. It would reduce our dependence on oil imports. But most importantly, it would have an equitable impact upon the regions and income classes in our country.

Mr. President, we cannot overlook the opportunities offered by the rapid decline in oil prices.

This may be a once-in-a-century chance to simultaneously improve our fiscal condition, and alleviate our energy predicament and our dependence on foreign oil.

I ask unanimous consent that the summary from the CBO study be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY

This paper analyzes taxes on oil or oil products. Such taxes have been proposed for a variety of purposes. One aim is to reduce the federal deficit. Another is to reduce U.S. dependence on imported oil and its attendant risks to the economy and to national security. Some advocates of oil taxes see them as driving down further the world price of oil. Taxes are also favored as a way to assist the domestic oil industry, which is undergoing a severe contraction.

Oil taxes would accomplish these goals in varying degree, depending on how a specific tax was designed. At one end of the spectrum, an oil import tariff would encourage conservation, the substitution of other fuels, and domestic exploration and production. At the other end, a general energy tax—such as an ad valorem tax on all fuels consumed—would lead to reductions in energy use but would do nothing to encourage the production and consumption of oil substitutes or the exploration and development of domestic oil supplies. Oil taxes also raise a variety of questions as to their effects on the economy, on foreign trade, on the distribution of income, and on specific industries such as refining.

This paper examines five oil tax options:

An import tariff of $5.00 per barrel on imported crude oil and $10.00 per barrel on imported refined products;

A $5.00 per barrel excise tax on all crude oil (domestic and imported) and $5.00 per barrel on imported refined products;

A $0.12 per gallon motor fuels tax;

A 5 percent sales tax on all energy consumption; and

A combination of a $0.06 per gallon tax on motor fuels together with a $2.50 tariff on imported crude and refined products.

Since each tax would have different effects depending on the underlying level of world oil prices, and since there can be no certainty as to future oil prices, this report examines the taxes under three alternative assumptions: that oil prices hold steady over the next five years at levels of $23.00 per barrel, $18.00 per barrel, or $13.00 per barrel.

ECONOMIC ASSUMPTIONS

In estimating the economic and budgetary impacts of any tax, one must make some simplifying assumptions. In this case, perhaps the most important involves the operation of energy markets.

The economic effects of energy taxes depend to some degree on the response of foreign producers. This is difficult to forecast, because the governments of producing countries often play a crucial role in determining production levels. At one extreme, producers may respond by reducing production in order to maintain world prices at their pre-tax levels. At the other extreme, they may not change production at all and accept a fall in price equal to the implied per unit tax. This analysis makes an intermediate assumption. It assumes that world prices would fall, but by considerably less than the amount of the tax. Consequently, oil taxes would to some extent raise energy prices for U.S. consumers.

Analysts must also make some assumption about the behavior of aggregate production levels (gross national product, or GNP) in response to a tax. If foreign producers were forced to lower their prices, an oil tax could stimulate the economy and raise GNP. But there are offsetting influences. In the short term, higher taxes of any sort could lower GNP since they reduce household income. But to the extent that taxes also reduce the federal deficit, they may tend to reduce interest rates and the international value of the dollar, which would tend to raise GNP. In view of these various offsetting influences, and the fact that the net effect of any of the taxes on nominal GNP is likely to be rather small, CBO has followed the convention that nominal GNP (not adjusted for inflation) remains approximately constant in response to a tax.

REVENUE AND OUTLAY EFFECTS

Oil taxes affect the budget on both the revenue and the outlay sides. On the revenue side, the federal government would collect the tariff or tax directly. In addition, some taxes would increase domestic oil prices and the stream of revenues produced by the crude oil windfall profit tax. Finally, on the assumption that nominal GNP remains approximately constant after the imposition of a tax, the taxes and resulting price increases in the oil sector would reduce the income and profit streams of corporations in other sectors of the economy, correspondingly reducing the taxes they pay to the government.

On the outlay side, the federal government is both a producer and a consumer of oil. As a producer, it would receive more royalties from oil and gas production from the outer continental shelf and other federal lands if oil taxes were to raise wellhead oil and gas prices. On the consumption side, federal agencies, principally the Department of Defense, use roughly 500,000 barrels of refined petroleum products per day; they would pay more if prices rose. Thus the net budgetary effect of oil taxes is likely to be less than the initial revenue collected.

In general, broader-based taxes, such as an excise tax or an energy tax, would reduce the federal deficit by more than would more narrowly defined taxes, such as an import tariff or a motor fuels tax, at the same level of tax. This is because the former would be imposed on a broader category of oil and/or energy sources. Moreover, because windfall profit tax collections and domestic oil prices are positively associated, the revenue differential between a tariff and an excise tax would widen if domestic oil prices fell. Estimates of the net budgetary effects of the tax proposals are given in the Summary Table. These estimates differ somewhat from those provided in CBO's "Reducing the Deficit: Spending and Revenue Options" because different assumptions regarding oil prices and other factors are used in this analysis.[1]

It should be noted that at the $23.00 and $18.00 levels, the import tariff of $5.00 per barrel on crude oil and $10.00 per barrel on refined products would have the same revenue effect as a flat $5.00 tariff on both imported crude and refined products: the extra $5.00 on refined products would make their importation prohibitive, resulting in no new funds. Consumer costs, in contrast to federal revenues, might rise as less efficient domestic refining capacity was brought into production. At $13.00 per barrel, however, petroleum product consumption would exceed domestic refining capacity, and the extra tariff on refined products would lead to additional revenues.

ENERGY MARKET EFFECTS

The tax proposals described above raise a number of issues for federal policy and for the energy industry. Reductions in oil imports caused by oil taxes would be greater with lower initial oil prices, since a fixed tax represents a greater percentage increase in oil prices as underlying, pre-tax prices fall.

Source: Congressional Budget Office.

At $13.00 per barrel, oil imports in the absence of taxes are projected to reach 7.3 million barrels per day. An import tariff could reduce this amount by close to 1 million barrels per day by stimulating conservation and fuel substitution, and, very importantly, by softening the impact of low world prices on domestic oil production. Other taxes would not reduce imports by as much, because they would not provide domestic producers with additional incentives to explore or produce. At $23.00 and $18.00 per barrel, the effect of price changes on domestic production would not be as drastic, and hence an import tariff would not have as great an advantage over other taxes in this regard.

The effects of any oil tax in reducing oil imports, putting downward pressure on the world price of oil, and providing protection for the U.S. oil industry would be interrelated. Oil taxes would put downward pressure on the world price of oil insofar as they led to a reduction in the U.S. demand for oil imports, and that reduction would be greater if a tax encouraged domestic exploration and production.

An oil import tariff would be superior to other energy taxes on this score. By raising the price of oil imports, an oil import tariff would encourage all activities that could substitute for oil imports: domestic oil production, production of substitutes for oil, conservation of oil, and substitution of other fuels for oil. It would therefore lead to the greatest possible reduction in oil imports (for a given level of tax) and provide the most assistance to domestic producers. An excise tax on foreign and domestic oil would lead to the same reduction in total oil consumption, but would burden rather than encourage domestic oil production, leading to a smaller reduction in oil imports and, therefore, putting less downward pressure on the price charged by foreign producers. A motor fuels tax would lead to a smaller reduction in oil consumption because it would be directed at only one form of oil use and would therefore preclude many oil conservation possibilities. It would also provide no incentives for expanded domestic production. Finally, an ad valorem tax on the consumption of all fuels would lead to energy conservation, but discourage the production of domestic oil as well as all U.S. energy supply sources. These last two taxes, therefore, would do less to reduce world oil prices, encourage a reduction in oil imports, and assist the domestic oil industry.

THE U.S. REFINING INDUSTRY

The two-tiered tariff ($5.00 on crude imports and $10.00 on refined product imports) is of special interest because it would raise consumer prices and domestic refiner and shipping company profits while providing no incentives for domestic oil exploration and production beyond those offered by a single $5.00 levy on imported crude oil and refined products. Even if domestic refining capacity was sufficient to fulfill domestic needs entirely, this would require using domestic refineries that are older and less efficient than existing capacity.

The East Coast would be at some disadvantage under a two-tiered tariff, since it relies heavily on refined product imports and has very little excess refining capacity of its own. The difference could be supplied from Gulf Coast refineries, but product pipelines from the Gulf Coast have limited capacity and would have to be supplemented by tankers and barges at higher cost. All product shipments among ports in the United States would have to be made on U.S. flag ships, whose rates are already higher than those of foreign ships and are likely to become more so at higher utilization rates.

The most common arguments for two-tiered tariffs are that national security requires a stronger domestic refining industry, and that U.S. refiners suffer a disadvantage in having to pay pollution abatement costs. But the risks posed to national security from oil imports generally concern the threat to supplies of crude oil rather than refined products. A cutoff of refined products from the Persian Gulf—the most severe likely product disruption—would cause minor damage compared with a cessation of crude oil flow from the same countries. In 1985, only 0.4 percent of U.S. consumption of refined products was drawn from Persian Gulf sources, although that share is growing. Even if refining capacity was of paramount importance, a more appropriate response might be to fill part of the Strategic Petroluem Reserve with refined products in place of crude oil.

The other argument advanced for a two-tiered tariff concerns the costs U.S. refiners bear for pollution abatement, and holds that domestic refiners need protection to offset these costs. On net, the costs are much less than the $5.00 per barrel differential found in one version of the proposed tariff—perhaps as low as $0.50 per barrel, if the cost of removing the lead from gasoline to meet U.S. environmental statutes is also included. And even if the pollution abatement costs were higher, there is no precedent for offsetting them by imposing protective tariffs. Indeed, such an offset would encourage pollution.

Finally, like the oil regulations of the 1970s, two-tiered tariffs would encourage the construction of refineries that would be viable only because of federal protection. Half the refining capacity that has shut down since 1981 closed not because it was old, but because it had been built in the 1970s to take advantage of biases in federal regulations (often called the "small refiners' bias") and could not match the efficiency of internationally oriented refineries on its own terms. After oil was decontrolled, such capacity had to be shut down. This proposal would once again promote the creation of refining capacity dependent on federal protection.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Oil taxes would have their maximum depressing effect on world crude oil prices if imposed by all or most oil-consuming countries. Acting in concert, these countries could force producers to accept a larger proportion of any oil tax than if the United States acted alone. The result would be a smaller decrease in oil imports and a smaller tax burden.

In fact, other industrialized countries already have higher levels of oil taxes than the United States. Most of these taxes are gasoline taxes; motor fuels taxes are four to ten times higher in these countries. Taxes on other fuels also exist: Japan, for example, has an $18.00 per barrel tax on distillate fuel while the United States has none. Higher energy taxes in these countries reflect their far greater use of sales and consumption taxes as revenue sources. Industry sources note that many of these countries appear prepared to raise their oil taxes again now that world oil prices have fallen.

"VARIABLE TARIFFS"

One variant on the oil import tariff, proposed in S. 1997 by Senator Wallop, would set its value according to the difference between the existing world price of oil and some "benchmark" price. In S. 1997, this benchmark price is $22.00 per barrel; thus if oil prices were to stay at $13.00 per barrel, the tariff would equal $9.00 per barrel.

The variable tariff would, in essence, provide a floor price for the domestic oil industry. If oil prices were to rise again next winter or in the next few years, as some analysts believe they will, such a levy would protect the domestic oil industry from a harmful "whipsaw" effect in which some production is forced to close as prices fall and is no longer available when they rise again. The corresponding disadvantage of such a proposal is that it would place an artificial restraint on oil imports that are less expensive than the benchmark price. If oil prices had found their long-term level below the benchmark, the tariff would redistribute income from other industries and regions to domestic oil producers, but would do so only at a cost to economic efficiency. This cost might be sizable, since only a fraction of current domestic oil production is jeopardized by current low prices; a variable tariff might give other domestic oil producers a subsidy they do not need in order to continue producing. Moreover, if the goal of energy policy is to encourage marginal producers to continue supplying oil now that the price is low, there may be better ways of accomplishing this than a variable tax.

DISTRIBUTIONAL ISSUES

At oil prices of $23.00 per barrel, the energy taxes discussed in this paper generally would cost families an average of 0.3 percent of their annual income, or about $85.00 per year at current price levels. Using another measure, these added energy costs would amount to 0.4 percent of their total expenditures. The latter may be a better measure by which to assess the distributional effects of the tax because families usually choose a level of expenditure that reflects their expectations of long-term income.

Measured as a percent of total expenditures, the tax burden would not vary widely for families with different incomes. In absolute terms, at current price levels, the added expenditures would range from about $35.00 per year for families with annual incomes of less than $5,000 to $130 per year for families with annual incomes of $50,000 or more, or from 0.4 percent to 0.3 percent of total expenditures.

Except for the two-tiered tariff, which would require the use of uneconomic refining capacity and place a heavier burden on the Northeast, the increase in energy expenditures would also be roughly the same across regions. In the Northeast, additional energy expenditures under the two-tiered tariff would be about $115 per year at current prices or 0.6 percent of total expenditures, while the rest of the country would spend no more than $82.00 per year or 0.4 percent of total expenditures. At $13.00 per barrel, the two-tiered tariff would penalize Northeast consumers even more, raising their energy costs by $192 per year, more than twice the cost burden imposed by other oil taxes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as I indicated, the report will soon be on the Senate floor and available for public consumption.

I understand that Senator CHILES has arrived. I suggest the absence of a quorum to be charged equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time I may use off the resolution, not off the spending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a list of entitlement and mandatory programs. In my discussion about the Federal budget and the various components of it on Tuesday, when we began debate on the budget resolution, I indicated that I would, since I used charts, incorporate in the RECORD the individual components of each of those major ingredients in the budget. I have that ready now, and I shall put it in the RECORD for reference. These will match up and indicate to anyone who is interested those four major components of the budget we discussed—discretionary appropriations, entitlements, defense, and interest on the national debt—what makes up each of those.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table showing the annualized rate of change of categories of the budget in real and nominal terms.

As I said before, it shows what has happened over the past 20 years in 5-year increments to the major components in growth and nongrowth. Some were interested in what the nominal growth will be. I used only real growth—that is, growth after inflation.

The table that I asked to have printed in the RECORD expands on those and gives the nominal growth for each of those categories for each of the 5-year periods preceding 1986.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I designate the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] to manage the bill on our side.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

TOURNIQUET BELOW THE WOUND

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am brought to the floor by the remarks of my distinguished colleague from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], who this morning spoke about an oil import fee. I believe he spoke with approval of a $2.50 import fee along with a 6-cent-per-gallon gasoline tax. Mr. President, I very strongly favor an oil import fee. I think it ought to be larger than $2.50. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Now, Mr. President, there are many who say that an oil import fee is dead as an idea: the President is against it, the industry is split, and there are all kinds of problems with Mexico, Venezuela, and chemical companies. I have heard all of those arguments before. But, Mr. President, I believe those arguments are either unpersuasive or will be satisfactorily addressed when it comes time for the Congress to actually decide on whether we should have an oil import fee. I believe it is a very viable idea substantively and that it is a very viable idea politically.

The reason I believe that, Mr. President, is I do not think this tax reform bill is going to go anywhere. My own mail is running 40 to 1 against. There were well over half the Members of the Senate who said we should not deal with tax reform until we balance the budget. That is simply another way of saying they give tax reform—I put "reform" always in quotas because I do not believe the measure being considered by the Finance Committee is tax reform—no chance to go anywhere.

The issue that is going to go somewhere is the need to raise revenue. And when the oil import fee, which raises significant amounts of revenue, is compared to various other kinds of revenue enhancements, to use the euphemism, I think the oil import fee comes off very well.

Mr. President, there is real suffering in my State, and I use that word advisedly. We have 13.2 percent unemployment on the way to 16, and who knows what after that. The whole economy of my State and that of our neighboring oil-producing States is imploding. It is imploding with frightening speed. The whole underpinning of our economy is collapsing and there is nothing to sustain it.

I do ask for sympathy, but in addition to sympathy, Mr. President, I ask for understanding of the plight of the oil industry in this country. Unless we do something to save it, it is going to be gone and once gone will not be easily resurrected. Once these companies are bankrupt and the geologists move on to become accountants; and the service industries and the mud companies close their doors and move away; and the drillers and the roughnecks, the myriad other people who are involved in the oil industry leave the State and move elsewhere—and all of these things are beginning to happen—it is going to be very difficult to resurrect a domestic oil and gas industry.

We are going to be a country dependent almost exclusively upon foreign sources for our crude oil. And when the supply gets short and the price goes up the fat will be back in the fire again. Only this time, instead of having a domestic industry capable of producing 10 million barrels a day we will have a domestic industry with only a few old wells continuing to produce and little ability to discover and drill new ones.

Mr. President, with a great deal of fanfare, the President of the United States a day or two ago announced his plan to deal with the preservation of the oil industry. He came up with four proposals, all of which I have favored, but not one of which will be of any significant or immediate use to the oil industry given the magnitude of its current problems. He says we ought to repeal the Fuel Use Act. Of course, we should. I am a coauthor of legislation to do that and I hope and anticipate we will do it very soon. But the assistance it can bring to the industry is months and years down the road.

He says we ought to deregulate natural gas. We have fought that battle in the past. I have been for it. I have sponsored legislation to accomplish it. But I do not think Congress is going to do it. We received less than 30 votes last time after we debated it for days on end. But even if we pass it, it is not going to help the price of new gas and therefore will provide no incentive at all for drilling for new gas.

Yes, we ought to repeal the windfall profits tax, and I have authored legislation to accomplish that, too. But that is of no use at all, because the price is below the threshold at which the tax must be paid.

Yes, we should help stripper wells whose production we would othewise lose. But the margin of relief which doing so would provide is of no help. We need to get drill rigs active looking for new oil and gas. The active rig count has dropped below 900 from a high of over 4,500 just 5 years ago. In the face of this the President of the United States gives us a program for saving the oil industry which is like putting a tourniquet on below the wound—no help at all.

If we want to preserve the industry, we have to do something now, and we have to do something dramatic. And the only thing that I can see is to use the Tax Code and to have an oil import fee.

The rise in prices which it would cause—or, more correctly, the limitation on the amount of price decline which it would cause—would be very minimal—certainly very minimal when compared to saving in domestic oil production and preserving a domestic oil industry. I think it is a very good tradeoff.

So I believe that the oil import fee is a very viable political idea. I do not believe we need to make exemptions for Canada, Mexico, or Venezuela. In fact, I see no justification at all for that. I think we ought to have an exemption for imports which are in turn exported. But that would be easy to describe, easy to administer, and totally fair upon its face. Other than that, I think we could put together an excellent and appealing revenue raiser which also preserves a domestic oil industry.

So I want to congratulate the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for having proposed the oil import fee. I will join him and others in trying to get it passed here later this year.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New York for allowing me to speak on what otherwise would have been his time, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

AMENDMENT NO. 1800

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator from Louisiana for his gracious remarks and for his interest and comments.

Mr. President, as I understand our situation, the amendment laid down yesterday for myself, Mr. SASSER, Mr. BYRD, and others is now the pending business. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, as Senators well know, this is a straightforward proposal to retain general revenue sharing for the coming fiscal year and for such other years thereafter—1988 and 1989—as the Senate Finance Committee chooses to approve.

Two things are required: First, that the Finance Committee reauthorize the program, and it has typically been on a 3-year basis, although it could be done on a 1-year basis; and second, the Finance Committee must provide increased revenues in order to maintain the program at its level of $4.6 billion. Because there is a one-quarter lag in the outlays, the Finance Committee would only be required to come up with revenues of $3.4 billion in fiscal 1987.

Mr. President, we are no doubt going to hear that we ought to abolish general revenue sharing or that we cannot afford to continue it, and we should let it lapse, because there is no revenue to be shared. I have heard that statement from a number of Senators in the past during the debate when we dropped State revenue sharing, and I have heard it from Senators who are now cosponsors of this legislation, having looked longer and harder at the situations of their own communities and at the qualities of this program. Indeed, we have 24 cosponsors at this time, which is about one-quarter of the Senate.

As a preface to some general remarks about the program, let me offer to the Senate some insights into the fiscal difficulties—the protracted fiscal crisis, indeed—in which we find ourselves in the Federal Government.

For several years now, since 1982, as I recall—and in writing since 1983—I have made the point that the deficits, the extraordinary triple-digit deficits, that appeared under the Reagan administration were deliberately contrived, contrived in order to create a crisis that would require the dismantling of the main outlines of the Federal Government as they have developed under Democratic and Republican administrations over the last half-century.

I do not think that this proposition, when I first offered it, was greeted with any great acceptance. It seemed too irresponsible a thing to have done, or too dangerous a thing to have done, and credence was not given the proposition that responsible Government officials could go about their duties and deliberately create a crisis which then they thought would have serious consequences.

If I recall, I did not say that the deficits were deliberate policy. I said that the creation of a situation in which the deficits would arise was the deliberate policy, which is to say the revenue loss incurred as a result of the 1981 tax legislation.

Mr. President, it is always difficult to put a proposition such as that, in any event; and even indirection is no protection from the obvious fact of what is being said, so why do I not say it straight out? I was right. I was dead right, and Mr. David Stockman now so states.

The administration knew perfectly well that it was going to create an enormous deficit with this legislation in 1981 and assumed that this would force Congress into huge reductions in Federal programs. And then it turned out the programs were not there to be cut.

Yesterday, the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Budget Committee offered an amendment to terminate 44 programs and said, "Here, cut them." I think there were 14 Senators willing to say so and do so.

A marvelous article in this morning's Washington Post described some 24 Senators who had been writing letters to the President saying "cut" and then their opportunity to cut came and they, including the distinguished Senator who had organized the letter, could not bring themselves to do so.

How did we get ourselves into the situation?

Let me read some passages from David Stockman's book, and so we get a feeling for this, we are talking now about the time in late summer, early autumn of 1980 before the election.

> I discovered that to balance the budget we would need huge spending cuts too—more than $100 billion per year. The fabled revenue feedback of the Laffer curve had thus slid into the grave of fiscal mythology 40 days after the supply-side banner had been hoisted at the GOP Convention.
> These dramatic changes in both my comprehension of budget estimating and the true fiscal math of the supply-side program occurred almost overnight. That should have been cause for second thoughts and reassessment of the whole proposition.
> But it didn't happen that way.

Mr. Stockman recognizes that even before they went forward, he should have said, "Now, listen, will this work?" But then another idea occurred to him. Adopt Kemp-Roth and its 10-5-3 depreciation schedule and then, and I quote him, "We would have the Second Republic's craven politicians pinned to the wall," which craven politicians I think by a vote of 80 to 14 or something yesterday displayed what it regarded as craven.

We are of the Second Republic, and unlike the virtuous First Republic, the craven politicians would be pinned to the wall,

> They would have to dismantle its bloated, wasteful, and unjust spending enterprises—or risk national ruin.
> The idea of a real fiscal revolution, a frontal attack on the welfare state, was beginning to seem more and more plausible.

Mr. President, we are in the presence of a conspiracy. A young man is telling us how he came to Washington, seized control of fiscal policy and created a crisis that will be with us the rest of this century.

Here is his last paragraph I will read. He said:

> The success of the Reagan Revolution depended upon the willingness of the politicians to turn against their own handiwork—the blotted budget of the American welfare state. Why would they do this? Because they had to! In the final analysis, I had made fiscal necessity the mother of political invention.

Mr. Stockman ends his book by saying he had learned differently and for all that politicians might be bad. "There is only one thing worse," he says, "and that is ideological hubris."

He concludes,

> That the fiscal programs of the first few years of this administration were the most irresponsible in the 20th Century.

He writes,

> In the entire 20th century history of the Nation there has been nothing to rival it • • • a willful act of ignorance and grotesque irresponsibility.

My good friend from Tennessee is on the floor and he will be speaking in a moment. I do not know if he has read that far in the memoirs to the conclusion where Mr. Stockman describes—

> The policies of this administration so put in place with such deception, such concealment as a willful act of ignorance and grotesque irresponsibility. In the entire 20th century history of the Nation there has been nothing to rival it.

Mr. President, the proposition I put to you today is whether we are going to allow that conspiracy to continue and to permit that willful ignorance and gross irresponsibility to control our actions in the coming year with respect, in this instance, to one program, the program of general revenue sharing with local governments in the country.

I have a certain personal history in the General Revenue Sharing Program. I drafted the plank in the Democratic platform of 1964 that called for revenue sharing with State governments, and, as it happened, I also drafted the Presidential message of 1969 that called for revenue sharing with State and local governments, particularly city governments.

That was the legitimization that finally was enacted in 1972. A proposal first appeared in a Democratic platform and then was adopted by a Republican President, Mr. Nixon, and enacted in turn by a Democratic Congress. It has had bipartisan support and it has made its way into the structure of Federal relations in this Nation.

The theory of revenue sharing was simple enough, and I think it has proved over time to have held up, which is simply that the revenue resources of the National Government are both larger, and more responsive to economic growth than the revenue sources of State government and most particularly of local government where property taxes and such like are a principal source of revenue and are very sluggish in their response to growing economic needs of government that correspond to a growing economy.

We put it in those days, that for every 1-percent increase in GNP, you get about a 1-percent increase in the need for government, roads and infrastructure, and things like that, and the revenue the Federal Government would increase at something more than 1 percent and of local government at something less. I think those general ratios have held up.

In the President's budget, the legacy of the conspiracy of the Stockman era—coping with this protracted crisis and the continued belief that it could be done—asks us to put an end to revenue sharing with some 39,000 units of government, including 3,049 counties of the United States.

For our part, Mr. President, we hope this will not happen. We will hope that in the aftermath of the conspiracy we will do some damage control right here on this floor and not sever that relation between the Federal Government and the cities and counties that we began to grow up in the 1960's and in the 1970's.

Not long ago, Mayor Cisneros, of San Antonio, spoke with great eloquence on the subject of that partnership that gave cities a sense of their role in the Federal mix of things, gave counties and smaller units of government the same.

Let me just end my remarks by quoting from the speech which Mayor Cisneros gave to the National League of Cities just a while ago. He said:

This year all of us together face a new problem that none of those who sat in these chairs has faced before. It is a disastrous dismantling of the federal-local partnership. It is a meat-axe chopping of the domestic obligations of government.

These are not in the category of threats or distant storm clouds, but the realities of the next 90 to 120 days. The mood, our response, must not be gloom or timidity or uncertainty or hang-dog apologetics. We must be determined to stand up for what is right in the face of what I can only call disrespect: a disrespect for our cities, disrespect for the people who govern them and disrespect for the people who live in them.

I see the same disrespect he sees, Mr. President. I hope we will pass this amendment.

I see the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has risen. The Senator from Minnesota would like to speak very briefly from the other side of the aisle, if that is possible.

Mr. SASSER. I would remind the Senator from New York, although I do want to accommodate the Senator from Minnesota, I have been sitting here for almost an hour.

How long, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota, will he take?

Mr. DURENBERGER. At the most, 4 minutes. I will try to be briefer than that.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am glad to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, at this point, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the National Coalition to Save General Revenue Sharing be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COALITION TO SAVE GENERAL REVENUE SHARING,
Washington, DC, April 22, 1986.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Coalition to Save General Revenue Sharing urges you to support the Moynihan, Sasser, Byrd, Heinz, Specter, Andrews Amendment to allow for full funding at $4.6 billion for General Revenue Sharing.

Let us tell you what this amendment does not do:

It does not mandate a tax increase;

It does not "bust the budget" or add to the deficit since there would be no funds put in the budget for revenue sharing until the Finance Committee develops a mechanism to pay for it.

What this amendment will do:

If the Finance Committee reauthorizes the program and enacts additional revenues to pay for it, then General Revenue Sharing would be allowed to be fully funded for $4.6 billion for FY87.

Revenue Sharing has been one of the few programs that seeks to lessen fiscal disparities among our states. Jurisdictions with a population of under 10,000, most of which receive no other assistance from the federal government, make up more than 85 percent of the program's recipients. It is the only form of federal assistance to 77 percent of the 39,000 local governments that receive general revenue sharing funds. Sixty-two percent of general revenue sharing funds now go to jurisdictions with average per capita income less than 125 percent of the national average.

General Revenue Sharing helps cities and counties across this nation to provide essential services to their citizens such as police and fire protection, schools and hospitals. It has supplemented public education and supported health and welfare programs such as indigent health care and nursing homes.

Between 1980 and 1985, while total outlays increased by 23.3 percent, grants to state and local governments decreased by 23.5 percent. Since 1981 federal aid to state and local governments has been cut by almost 40 percent; in major urban programs it has been cut even deeper totalling 71% in actual dollars. General Revenue Sharing has provided the flexibility to respond to these reductions.

Please show your support for this vital program by voting for the Moynihan, Sasser, Byrd, Heinz, Specter, Andrews Amendment.

Sincerely,

ERNEST N. MORIAL,
Mayor of New Orleans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota such time as he requires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I will be very brief in deference to my colleague from Tennessee, who is the former ranking member of the Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee of the Governmental Affairs Committee.

Mr. President, I rise to add a dimension to the debate on general revenue sharing.

Let me say that I favor the amendment by my colleague from New York, and I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, the dimension that I would add is a dimension that I know the Senator from South Dakota, who occupies the chair, and the Senator from Tennessee, who will speak next, will particularly appreciate, and that is the importance of the continuation of revenue sharing to rural America. I trust that my colleagues will take the time to consider the fact that, in the face of the very substantial reductions in Federal support, both the tax-subsidized support and the direct Federal-aid support for local governments in this country, some things are happening to rural America that are not happening to the cities of this country.

In southwestern Minnesota, land values have dropped in constant dollars from $2,232 an acre in 1979 to about $955 in 1985 an acre. That is true in South Dakota and that is true in many parts of America. This represents a reduction in the base from which local governments can raise the resources necessary to continue public services. Public services that include hospitals and public health, public transportations, services for the elderly, streets and roads, and many more. The ability of rural or local governments to provide these services to their citizens is substantially dwindling.

We must consider the impact of budget cuts on rural communities. It is an important consideration that often gets overlooked. We must be certain that in our attempts to solve the budget crisis that we do not exacerbate the agricultural crisis. Eliminating or severely cutting GRS would do just that.

GRS is more important to rural communities than urban communities. The value of GRS to urban communities has received widespread attention in the press and on the Capitol Hill. But GRS funds are even more important to rural communities that are not experiencing a severe drop in land values, and, consequently, property tax revenues. For rural communities, GRS has served as a lifeline, enabling their governments to continue to provide basic public services.

Communities where the greatest source of income is derived from agriculture rely on GRS to a much greater extent than nonfarm communities. Revenue sharing comprises, on average, 44.5 percent of all Federal aid received by local governments in farm dependent areas, compared with a national average of 21.8 percent for all local governments.

I have a table which compares general revenue sharing as a percentage of all Federal aid to agricultural versus nonagricultural local governments in selected States: North Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Arkansas, Kansas, Georgia, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, and Montana. It shows, for example, that in nonagricultural communities in North Dakota, general revenue sharing is 20 percent of their total Federal aid, while in the agriculture communities of North Dakota, revenue sharing is 38.6 percent of the Federal aid they receive. In Iowa, it is 25.8 percent for nonagriculture and in agriculture 46.6 percent comes from general revenue sharing. In Nebraska it is 22 percent to 49 percent; Kansas, 24 percent to 51 percent; Georgia, 21 percent in nonagriculture to 54.1 percent in agriculture. In Mississippi, GRS is 32.2 percent of Federal aid in the nonagriculture counties but 67.8 percent in the agricultural counties.

For many rural communities, GRS is the only form of direct Federal assistance they receive. We rely on rural governments to provide the same services as their more urban counterparts, yet they are not eligible for a large portion of intergovernmental aid. UDAG, CDBG, and mass transit subsidies by and large benefit urban America. The elimination of GRS, as many have proposed, would have an immediate and devastating impact on the ability of rural governments to provide basic public services.

Recently, I received some survey results from counties in southwest Minnesota. This is a rural area where, as I said agricultural values have dropped dramatically. As a result, property tax revenues—the major source of local funding—have also declined dramatically. For these communities, GRS is more important than ever. The survey results I received from these counties listed the following uses for GRS funds:

Highway, roads, sidewalks, bridges—construction and repair.
Hospital equipment.
Snow plow equipment, snow removal.
Public transportation for elderly and handicapped.
Senior citizen activities—centers, meals, transportation.
Police, fire protection and public safety.
Library books.
Day care.
Public service programs: health, mental health, family service, outreach programs, chemical dependency programs.
Sewage plant work, landfills, garbage collection, storm sewage construction.
Parks and recreational facilities.
Agriculture assistance to farmers.
Ambulance service.
Liability insurance payments.
Water department repairs, well updating equipment.

Few, if any, of these activities would be considered luxuries or unnecessary. They represent the very heart of what local governments are about. If these communities lose their GRS funds, they will be forced to eliminate or cutback on these very vital, very basic public services.

I call on my colleagues, particularly those from rural areas, to consider the value of general revenue sharing to local governments.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table I referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I suggest, whether we believe changes are appropriate in general revenue sharing or not, the future of the ability of rural America to provide for the needs of its people will be decided by our vote on this.

I thank my colleague from New York for what he is doing and for yielding to me, and I thank my colleague from Tennessee for his time and patience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee such time as he desires of the hour assigned to this side, all but 5 minutes that the Senator from Pennsylvania will require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. President, I am delighted to join today with my friend and colleague from New York, Mr. MOYNIHAN; my friend and colleague from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD; and 23 other cosponsors in offering an amendment to the budget resolution which I think exemplifies the very essence of the federalist form of government that we enjoy here in the United States.

It is the consummate Federal-local partnership. It has been vitally important in helping local communities deal with a variety of problems at the local level, including, but no limited to, law enforcement, fire protection, education, health programs, programs important to our elderly citizens, such as Meals-on-Wheels, other nutrition programs, water treatment and sanitation facilities, and road construction and maintenance. I am referring to the general revenue-sharing program.

There is one important point I think that needs to be emphasized here and that is that the general revenue-sharing program is one of the most efficient, if not the most efficient, Government transfer programs ever devised. Less than two-tenths of 1 percent of general revenue sharing funds are used to administer this program.

Now, revenue-sharing moneys are targeted to communities based on tax effort and based on per capita income. The program is not only very efficient, but also extremely flexible. Local governments may spend revenue-sharing funds for all types of capital outlays. They may spend it on operating costs. They may spend it for maintenance expenses.

General revenue-sharing funds find their way to more than 39,000 local communities across the length and breadth of this great land of ours. Eighty-five percent of these communities have populations under 10,000. So this is a program that benefits middle America, that benefits the small towns and small communities in this country.

These local governments are able to use these moneys based upon the needs of their communities, a decentralized form of financial decisionmaking, which, one would think, is fundamentally consistent with the efforts of the current administration.

This administration makes much ado about reviving federalism. It puts great stress and credence on the subject of transferring responsibility back to the State and local governments. Here is a way of fostering responsibility for local and State governments.

Nationwide over 18 percent of general revenue-sharing moneys are spent on police protection; almost 20 percent of general revenue-sharing funds go for police protection at the local level; 14 percent of general revenue-sharing funds go for infrastructure improvements such as street maintenance; 10 percent of general revenue-sharing funds go for fire protection; 8 percent for education; 7 percent for health needs and hospitals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I believe the Chair misunderstood.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee such time as he desired. Would he take cognizance that we have but 30 minutes left. The Senators from Pennsylvania, from Louisiana, and from Michigan would also wish to speak.

Mr. SASSER. I thank my distinguished friend from New York.

I will try to speak for no more than an additional 10 minutes.

I might say that 5 percent of the general revenue-sharing funds go for parks, 6 percent for sanitation and sewage, and the remaining 25 percent for other categories.

This administration generally opposes taxes. Yet, they have consistently proposed eliminating the general revenue-sharing program. I would suggest to my colleagues that there is an inconsistency here. If the general revenue-sharing program is eliminated, then there will be no other choice than for local governments to increase property and sales taxes. This would disproportionately impact upon middle-income and lower-income taxpayers because of the regressive nature of sales and property taxes.

In the major cities of this country the Federal tax system, even with all of its problems, which our colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee are striving mightily to correct at this very moment, is more than twice as progressive as local tax structures around this country.

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations has compiled a comparison of the progressivity of Federal versus local taxes by region. I would like to share some of these figures with my colleagues.

Using a scale in which 100 represents the dividing line between a progressive and regressive tax structure, the U.S. median individual Federal income tax index was 169, while the personal local tax index registered 71. Thus, across the Nation, the Federal tax was more than twice as progressive as were local taxes. Let me share some examples with my colleagues.

Bridgeport, CT, registered an individual Federal income tax rate of 174 and a local tax rate of 59, indicating that the Federal income tax was nearly three times as progressive as local taxes in Bridgeport, CT. Or the flip side is that local taxes were three times more regressive than the Federal income tax.

Portland, ME, for example, registered a Federal tax rate of 164 and a local rate of 63. Des Moines, IA, registered a Federal rate of 170 and a local rate of 70—on and on, indicating that on the average local taxes are twice as regressive as Federal income taxes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the region-by-region table from which I have been quoting, be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Source: Calculations based on ACIR Staff Working Paper No. 3, "Tax Burdens for Families Residing in the Largest City in Each State, 1982" (April 1984).

Mr. SASSER. So we ask ourselves a question: Where will the moneys come from to replace the funds lost by general revenue sharing? Of course, they are going to have to come from increased local property and sales taxes, the same regressive taxes that I referred to just a moment ago. So instead of a revenue-sharing program, we are going to end up, I suggest, with a tax-shifting program, and a tax-shifting program that shifts the tax burden away from a progressive tax structure and onto a regressive local tax system.

While the current revenue-sharing program is vital to both large and small communities, the program represents a much higher percentage of the budgets of the smaller local governments. For cities in the 20,000 to 100,000 population range, revenue-sharing funds represent almost 7 percent of the taxes raised. In cities with populations exceeding 1 million, these funds represent roughly 4 percent of the taxes raised. So what are we doing if we deny these smaller communities, which make up the backbone of this country, revenue sharing? We shift an even greater percentage of the tax burden onto their local taxing systems which we have seen from my comments above are more regressive than the Federal tax structure. Well, it is not an accident that most of these communities are in the poorer States and in the more rural States. There are 17 States out of our 50 where general revenue-sharing funds account for more than 10 percent of the funds raised by local government.

For example, Arkansas will lose $46 million if general revenue sharing is eliminated. This represents over 22 percent of the local taxes raised by communities in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SASSER. I am delighted to yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Do I take him to be making a point not different from the point that the Senator from Minnesota makes that, however, as much as this program may have been conceived as an urban program, the reality once in place is that it is far more significant to agricultural communities than to urban communities. In Mississippi, for example, 68 percent of the revenue of agricultural townships come from revenue sharing. It has become in many ways a program for rural America.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my colleague from New York that he is entirely correct. This program I am seeking to demonstrate, and my friend from New York, I think, has gone to the meat of the coconut very quickly, but this program, the general revenue-sharing program, as it has been administered, as it has come to be accepted over the past few years, does, I think, decidedly aid local and rural communities more than it does the large urban areas. That is one reason we are so grateful to the Senator from New York for his sponsorship of this amendment. Although it will be of assistance to New York, and to many in his urban constituency there, it will be of more assistance, I say, to the constituents of some of us from Southern States and of Western States.

I would like to take this point a little further.

Mississippi is one of the lowest per capita income States. My neighboring State of Mississippi will lose nearly $60 million if this program is eliminated, and that represents almost 20 percent of the amount of local taxes raised in the State of Mississippi.

So they are going to have to raise local taxes in the State of Mississippi by 20 percent to offset the loss of general revenue sharing.

I am hard put, since my State of Tennessee is adjacent to the State of Mississippi and we share many of the same common economic problems, to see how local officials in the State of Mississippi are going to be able to raise this 20 percent loss in revenue.

Other States that are adversely affected and that are severely impacted include Delaware, Idaho, Kentucky, Maine, Montana, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

To target revenue sharing for continued cuts will effectively continue this administration's assault on aid to local governments.

Last year, general revenue sharing was reduced from a funding level of $4.6 billion to $4.2 billion, an 8-percent reduction. In addition, because of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings across-the-board reductions in March of this year, the funding level was cut by another 4.3 percent. Since 1981, Federal aid to local governments has declined by over 40 percent in grants to State and local governments after adjusting for inflation.

If the loss of revenue sharing was made up either through property tax increases or through local service cuts, the national impact of eliminating revenue sharing would be either a 9.2-percent increase in property taxes levied by local governments, or an across-the-board cut of 18,494 police officers, 8,250 firefighters, 18,152 teachers, 20,000 human service workers, and 26,065 street maintenance workers.

So these are the facts surrounding the general revenue sharing program.

The amendment we are offering is a simple one. It would merely assume full funding for the general revenue-sharing program over the next 3 fiscal years at a level of $4.6 billion contingent upon two premises.

I say to my friend from New York I am about to wind up here.

First, it would be contingent upon the Finance Committee reauthorizing the program. As you all know, the Budget Committee can only make overall assumptions as to how the funding for specific budget functions is to be achieved. So we leave it to the Finance Committee to make the determination as to whether the program will be reauthorized.

Second, it allows the Finance Committee maneuvering room to go up to the full funding level of $4.6 billion if it so desires.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SASSER. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I take it he means that the authorization could be up to the $4.6 billion level, but in the end we will have to live with what the Finance Committee and the Congress finally decides.

Mr. SASSER. That is correct.

The amendment does not suggest what the program might look like as far as proposed formula changes are concerned, but merely allows in this budget resolution room for full funding if that is the decision of the finance committee.

I know that there are many in this body who would like to see a formula change in the general revenue-sharing legislation, and many of my colleagues are supporting the Durenberger approach to targeting fiscal assistance. Those decisions are best left to the Finance Committee. But under the current budget resolution, only $1.8 billion is allowed for revenue-sharing, we are allowing for the flexibility to go to the full funding amount.

I think it is important to note, finally, that the Government Operations Committee in the House Tuesday approved full funding for the general revenue-sharing program by an overwhelming majority of 28 to 10. This is an important victory for all local governments across the Nation and I believe that we should send a similar message here in the U.S. Senate today.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the National Coalition to save general revenue sharing in support of our amendment. There is a copy of this letter on each desk.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COALITION TO SAVE
GENERAL REVENUE SHARING,
Washington, DC, April 22, 1986.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Coalition to Save General Revenue Sharing urges you to support the Moynihan, Sasser, Byrd, Heinz, Specter, Andrews Amendment to allow for full funding at $4.6 billion for General Revenue Sharing.

Let us tell you what this amendment does not do: It does not mandate a tax increase; It does not "bust the budget" or add to the deficit since there would be no funds put in the budget for revenue sharing until the Finance Committee develops a mechanism to pay for it.

What this amendment will do: If the Finance Committee reauthorizes the program and enacts additional revenues to pay for it, then General Revenue Sharing would be allowed to be fully funded for $4.6 billion for FY87.

Revenue Sharing has been one of the few programs that seeks to lessen fiscal disparities among our states. Jurisdictions with a population of under 10,000, most of which receive no other assistance from the federal government, make up more than 85 percent of the program's recipients. It is the only form of federal assistance to 77 percent of the 39,000 local governments that receive general revenue sharing funds. Sixty-two percent of general revenue sharing funds now go to jurisdictions with average per capita income less than 125 percent of the national average.

General Revenue Sharing helps cities and counties across this nation to provide essential services to their citizens such as police and fire protection, schools and hospitals. It has supplemented public education and supported health and welfare programs such as indigent health care and nursing homes.

Between 1980 and 1985, while total outlays increased by 23.3 percent, grants to state and local governments decreased by 23.5 percent. Since 1981 federal aid to state and local governments has been cut by almost 40 percent; in major urban programs it has been cut even deeper totalling 71% in actual dollars. General Revenue Sharing has provided the flexibility to respond to these reductions.

Please show your support for this vital program by voting for the Moynihan, Sasser, Byrd, Heinz, Specter, Andrews Amendment.

Sincerely,

ERNEST N. MORIAL,
Mayor of New Orleans.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. First, Mr. President, may I thank my friend for his extraordinarily clear presentation of this problem, particularly regarding the governmental relations.

I am, of course, managing the time. I have to say that my friend from Pennsylvania was first to ask. I yield 5 minutes to him. Then I will be glad to yield to the Senators from Louisiana and Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank my colleague, the Senator from New York, for yielding me these few minutes.

Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York and our other colleagues in offering this amendment. I rise as sponsor of S. 318, the authorizing bill introduced on January 29, 1985, to extend the General Revenue Sharing Program at what was then the funding level, for the next 5 years. Senator MOYNIHAN's amendment, of which I am a cosponsor, seeks to leave in the budget room for the full funding of $4.6 billion for fiscal 1987 that my bill would authorize.

We all understand the fiscal reality that we do not have a lot of revenue to share. But I must say that I have deep, serious reservations about the drastic reductions called for in this budget resolution which would reduce the funding for the program from its current level of slightly more than $4 billion to $1.8 billion in fiscal 1987.

What that means is that halfway through fiscal 1987 the revenue-sharing program would be totally terminated, and during the first two quarters of fiscal 1987 municipalities and local governments would receive drastically scaled-down amounts of assistance.

Mr. President, that is not only drastic; it is deeply discriminatory.

What we are talking about is not only a 57-percent cut from the level appropriated in fiscal 1986 but a termination of this program. There are other programs in this budget that the Budget Committee decided to cut. They froze assisted housing, a cut in real terms. They cut UDAG 10 percent. They froze community development block grants. They cut operating assistance for mass transit by 20 percent, and put in a 10-percent cut for EDA. None of those programs are being terminated. Here, revenue sharing is not only being proposed for termination but in the process, during the phasedown of next year, it is being cut by 57 percent. That is truly unfortunate and unfair.

I believe we have an opportunity to voice our support for this program without increasing the debts that the American people are going to have to face up to one of these days.

Mr. President, most of the revenue from revenue sharing, as it is spent by the municipalities, is spent for necessary public services that someone has to pay for. I will speak to exactly what that goes for in a moment.

So all we are doing, if anybody claims we are reducing the budget deficit by agreeing to the Budget Committee's proposal, is that we are taking a small portion, a very small portion, of the Federal budget deficit and we are picking it up and simply placing it on the backs of the municipalities who are going to have to continue these services.

My good friend from Tennessee referred to this as tax shifting. I do not disagree with him. But it is also deficit shifting. To my mind, what will happen if we do this is that we will create some tremendous hardships and we will force many municipalities to raise taxes in the most regressive way.

Most municipalities, if they are going to be able to do anything about this, will have to raise their property taxes. Of course, people who pay property taxes have to pay the property taxes whether they are working or retired, whether they are unemployed or working, regardless of whether they have the money. They have to pay those property taxes and they may very well have to borrow to do it. That is real deficit-shifting, right from the Federal Government to those who can afford it least. I for one believe that we can find a revenue source that is more equitable and would produce less hardship than severe increases in local property taxes, which is what would certainly occur in many communities in my State of Pennsylvania and across the Nation if this program were cut by more than 50 percent as proposed in this budget resolution.

Mr. President, general revenue sharing is one of the most important and widely used Federal programs we have. There are few Americans who do not directly benefit from the proceeds of general revenue sharing. In my State of Pennsylvania, it is the only direct source of Federal assistance for more than 90 percent of the municipalities. And this assistance goes for services that are vital to the health, safety and general welfare of the people in each community.

There are some 39,000 units of local government, Mr. President, that benefit from this. Let me just point out that some of these local government units, such as those in my home State of Pennsylvania, simply have been so devastated by the closing of industries and mills that, even if they wanted to, they cannot possibly afford in any way, shape, or form to make up the lost revenue.

For many municipalities in my State of Pennsylvania, general revenue sharing is the sole means of providing essential human services such as police and fire protection, highway and road maintenance, water and electric service.

In the town of Clairton, PA, where the United States Steel works has closed, the tax base has already been so severely decimated that they have had to lay off all the firemen, all the policemen, and all the employees at city hall. If this amendment is not agreed to, they are probably going to have to sell city hall, or at least take out a big mortgage on it.

And this is not an isolated example. We have literally dozens of municipalities—Duquesne, Mckeesport, Midland, White Oak, Swissvale, Wilmerding, Lock Haven—throughout that area and many other parts of my State as well, where this reduction will cause enormous hardship.

Some of my colleagues will still say, "why can't these towns raise taxes?" The answer is that in many cases, the State legislature will not let them. There are laws that restrain the municipalities covered under our municipal codes from exceeding certain levels of taxation. And the communities that I have just named, plus a lot of others, are at their absolute maximum. They cannot raise any additional revenue.

Mr. President, let me simply conclude by saying that although we are all dedicated to fiscal restraint and to deficit reduction, and while we all know there are hard choices to be made this year, I find it ironic that no program, domestic or otherwise, has taken nearly as deep a cut in this budget resolution as general revenue sharing—a program that provides direct assistance to our smallest communities that are struggling to become more self-sufficient in the face of numerous other spending cuts. I do not think the Congress displays fiscal courage by taking funds away from other units of government.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that a special report prepared by the National Association of Counties immediately follow my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL REVENUE SHARING IN PENNSYLVANIA

(In my State of Pennsylvania, where the economy has been so distressed, a survey of local governments found that revenue-sharing accounts for 16.7 percent of the average local budget. Replacing revenue-sharing funds with property tax revenues in Pennsylvania would require an average increase of 62 percent. For nearly 94 percent of the Pennsylvania municipalities responding to the survey, revenue sharing is the only direct source of Federal funds.—Sen. H. John Heinz, III, introducing S. 318, a bill to extend General Revenue Sharing—Jan. 29, 1985)

(A special report by Ralph Rathburn and Herb K Schultz)

County officials throughout the State of Pennsylvania are concerned about the possibility of losing Federal General Revenue Sharing. Local governments in Pennsylvania receive $220 million in General Revenue Sharing funds. These monies are an important portion in county budgets in a state which saw tax increases in more than half of its counties last year.

Doug Hill, executive director of the Pennsylvania State Association of County Commissioners, said "GRS monies are spent to support broad categories of human services and to a lesser extent the court system. We, like many states, do not use GRS for capital improvements as much as for service provision."

In a survey conducted among the members of the State Association, almost every county stated that a reduction or loss of General Revenue Sharing will mean a tax increase or a decrease in services.

Charles Griffiths of the Pennsylvania Intergovernmental Council said "Counties are probably the hardest hit by the reductions in federal dollars than any other level of government." The Intergovernmental Council is a private non-profit organization which promotes intergovernmental cooperation on a state level.

"The difficulty in cutting services at the county level is that many are mandated by the state and the federal government," said Hill. "We are saying to our legislators, 'We have all these mandates which we are carrying out on your behalf and reimbursements are decreasing. GRS is the only way for us to make our ends meet.' "

Congressman William H. Gray, III (D-Pa.-2), chair of the House Budget Committee, has said that states with budget surpluses should not expect to receive General Revenue Sharing funds. Pennsylvania is one of the states which has a surplus.

"The State currently has a $100 million surplus," said Doug Hill. "Governor [Richard] Thornburgh (R) has said consistently over the past six years that he has no intention of replacing any federal monies lost at the local level."

Mike Moyle, deputy press secretary to the Governor said, "Local government can't expect the state to pick up the costs if they lose it [GRS]. You can't hope to go out and pick up everything which the feds are going to cut." The Governor's office states that he has no position on GRS.

"When you have a $100 million surplus you have to be very careful. You have to turn away many who want some of that money. I could give you 25 times the requests which you [local governments] are making on that surplus," added Moyle.

Paul Bartle is the president of the Pennsylvania Association of County Commissioners and a commissioner in Montgomery County, PA. Through the State Association and other avenues he has been working to retain General Revenue Sharing.

His county provides him with reason to be a strong supporter of GRS, "Losing General Revenue Sharing would be a big problem. Montgomery County receives $2.5 million in GRS money. For us to go into 1987 without those monies would be a serious problem and the Federal government should address it."

Gov. Thornburgh stated in December that there will be a tax decrease in personal and business rates to return the surplus to the people. "The Governor feels that when you have a large surplus, it should be returned to the people. That will help the economy. That will increase spending and create jobs," said Deputy Press Secretary Moyle.

"The real problem is that we in the county don't have the latitude of the state and federal government. We depend upon real property tax. We do not have, in this state, the ability to levy an income tax," said Bartle. As a result, even if the economy benefited from the tax decrease, counties would receive no increased tax revenues from the additional activity. Local governments will be forced to raise taxes, if they can.

According to Dough Hill, "This year we already increased taxes by an average of 14 percent in the counties which had increases. One half of all PA counties raised taxes this year. Additionally, we have a statutory limit on tax rates in PA. Probably one fourth of the counties in the State are at or near the limit. They obviously don't have much more flexibility there. Pennsylvania counties have no budget surpluses overall."

Sullivan County has reached the statutory limit on its taxing authority. Under Pennsylvania law, it can not raise taxes. General Revenue Sharing represents 22.6 percent of the total revenues of this county. The county expends the bulk of those revenue sharing dollars on corrections and health.

GRS monies make up 60 percent of the Sullivan County corrections budget and 100 percent of the county health budget. The remaining GRS funds are used in a variety of other budgets. The county estimates that between 21 and 30 percent of the total county budget is used for mandated services. This leaves little flexibility for local budget cuts to make up for a loss in revenue sharing.

Sullivan and neighboring Luzerne, Columbia and Carbon counties include some of the most economically depressed areas in the state. The unemployment rate in the area is between 10 and 11 percent—more than 3 percent higher than the national average.

Rep. Paul Kanjorski (D-PA.-11) represents these counties in the northern part of the state. A strong supporter of reauthorization, he is a cosponsor of one of the GRS reauthorization bills—H.R. 1400.

The General Revenue Sharing formula "has benefited relatively low-income, but high tax effort areas like Northeastern Pennsylvania," said Rep. Kanjorski. "If revenue sharing is eliminated, towns, cities, boroughs and counties in the 11th Congressional District of PA. will lose more than $10.1 million in federal aid that currently makes up 16.7 percent of their non-educational revenues. Some smaller communities will lose as much as one-third of their non-educational revenues."

In Western Pennsylvania, Allegheny County estimates that it will have to raise taxes by 2 mils to compensate. This would be in addition to the 2.25 mil increase which went into effect on Jan. 1 of this year.

Revenue sharing money is used to fund the Allegheny County Port Authority. County funding for this local transit system is required by law. Meeting state and federal mandates commands nearly 40 percent of the total county budget. If GRS is lost the county will "either have to increase taxes or have severe cutbacks in other traditional county services," said Guy Tumolo, Allegheny County director of budget and finance.

Congressman Douglas Walgren (D-PA.-18) of Allegheny County said in support of GRS in the House of Representatives, "I have heard from many of the over 60 local communities in my district and their message is clear: Elimination of revenue sharing can only result in one of two things: cuts in basic services such as police or fire protection or higher local property taxes."

Fiscally conservative Adams County in Southern Pennsylvania is very concerned about the possibility of losing GRS. Commissioner Catherine W. Cowan said, "The Federal and State governments have shifted increased responsibilities to counties over the past ten to 15 years. Some monies have come with the responsibilities but these are decreasing and there are also many hidden costs which are not reimbursed. General Revenue Sharing is a way to regain some of those costs."

Commissioner Cowan is one of a number of county officials who are fed up with the response which they are receiving from the Governor's office. "I don't think the Governor knows what kind of situation the counties are in and I don't think he cares. He hasn't been on the front line of public service. He is very insulated. He doesn't understand the situation on the front lines," she said.

When it comes time to cut programs, Adams County will look at what is mandated by the State and Federal governments. Cowan explains that "Communities, in general, have less flexibility in cutting those services which are mandated, and so local options will be cut."

Loss of GRS in Bucks County would disrupt county operations. "We'll need an overall reduction of services in all departments. That right away means 2.5 mils or a 6.6 percent tax increase. That is the stark reality," said Richard Gore, finance director for Bucks County. Bucks, which is located to the northeast of Philadelphia, would lose $3 million in direct GRS appropriations.

Lancaster County Commissioner James Huber believes, "If we lose GRS we will have to reevaluate all the programs which receive GRS funds and determine which programs will be cut or eliminated. There is also a strong possibility that there will have to be a tax increase."

Should GRS fail and the local governments be forced to increase revenues to make up for the shortfall which that would cause, finding revenues would be difficult. The possibilities for local tax increases in PA. are not good. One-half of the counties in the state had a tax increase last year and one-quarter of the counties are at their top tax rates. A second problem is that "Counties in PA are on a calendar year budget. We can't raise taxes in the middle of a year. The only options we have are service cutbacks or layoffs," said Hill of the State Association.

"Governor Thornburgh really does believe that you can 'do more with less' that is his slogan. He believes that if the local governments lose some federal dollars that they can pull themselves up by their bootstraps and that they will make it," said Griffiths of the PA. Intergovernmental Council.

"We find a very insensitive attitude when it comes to social services from the Governor's office," said Commissioner Paul Bartle. "We have asked the Governor for additional dollars for Children and Youth services which include programs on child abuse. As a result of increased awareness and a greater effort to adequately address this problem, reports of child abuse have doubled. The state mandates services in this area. We agree that the services are needed. But the state has placed a cap on the state funds which are available to meet this need. We use GRS funds to make ends meet."

Commissioner Cowan points out that the elimination of GRS is being played against the backdrop of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act which will cause massive cuts in program funding for federally mandated programs. "Given the combined results of Gramm-Rudman and the cuts it will bring, the loss of GRS would have quite an impact."

"We have implemented all the efficiencies that we can," said Commissioner Cowan. "Counties in Pennsylvania have a very limited ability to adjust financially," she said.

"General Revenue Sharing is not a gift. We need to educate legislators that these dollars are being used to provide federally mandated programs," Cowan said.

"Unless the state and federal governments put dollars with their mandates, we will have a real problem. Revenue sharing can be very helpful to us with that," said Commissioner Bartle. "We urge every representative of state and local government to talk with their congressmen," said Bartle.

"We will be hit very hard by Gramm-Rudman. We get a big piece of the various block grants which are subject to Gramm-Rudman cuts," said Doug Hill.

"The President can say all he wants about no tax increases," said Hill. "But, the reality is that without GRS and with the cuts from Gramm-Rudman, if they continue to provide the same level of services, counties will go into debt this year and have to raise taxes next year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE].

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I rise in support and as a cosponsor of the amendment by the distinguished Senator from New York.

Local governments have already made a significant contribution to deficit reduction. In the last 5 years, Federal spending on State and local programs has been cut by 23 percent. Defense spending rose by nearly 40 percent during the same period.

I was pleased when a bipartisan majority of the Budget Committee adopted my proposal to preserve General Revenue Sharing, and that we were able to keep the program alive at about half of last year's funding level.

That was the best we were able to work out during Budget Committee negotiations.

I rise today to say that that proposal clearly does not go far enough. We ought to have the full revenue-sharing amount provided, as this amendment would do. If we fail to take this action today, I think we will hurt taxpayers across the country, certainly in the State of Michigan but in other States as well. Most of the cities and towns across America use a substantial part, if not all, of the revenue-sharing money to provide basic public services; in many cases that is police and fire protection.

Just to give some examples: In the State of Michigan, of the revenue-sharing money received by the city of Detroit, 90 percent is spent for public safety. That, in effect, is for police and fire activity. In the city of Grand Rapids, 85 percent of the money from revenue-sharing finances public safety activity in the police department. In the city of Flint, my hometown, 100 percent of revenue sharing is used for that purpose. One hundred percent is used in Lansing for that purpose; in Kalamazoo, Saginaw, and Pontiac, 100 percent; in Muskegon, 85 percent.

In the city of Jackson, an all-American city, 100 percent is used for public safety; in Hazel Park, MI, 100 percent; Benton Harbor uses 100 percent, Muskegon Heights, 100 percent.

I could go on. In many other cities there are a very high percentage of revenue sharing money used to provide these basic services.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. RIEGLE. If we take this money away, Mr. President, these communities will be in a terrible situation. They will either have to reduce police protection and other public safety services in those communities or raise local taxes. Quite frankly, the strategy of the Reagan administration over the past 5 years has been a systematic attack on local governments. We see it now in the attack on revenue sharing which originally, in the old days, was a Republican proposal. Now we see a recommendation to do away with it. We have seen other very substantial cuts in help for basic services for State and local governments over the last 5 years.

We have a proposal from the President before the Finance Committee to eliminate the deduction for State and local taxes. This is another attack on State and local governments, another way to shove the cost burden on the local taxpayers and to stick them, in effect, with the cost of the big defense buildup and the other waste which I think still exists in Federal activity.

So revenue sharing makes sense. It is a partnership, a way for local communities to get back some small share of the money extracted from them in terms of the broad Federal tax base.

Mr. President, if we do not fully restore Federal revenue sharing, we will be creating additional taxing at the local level. As the Senator from Tennessee said, we do not need to see local property taxes or other taxes brought up as a way for us to save money that comes off the broad tax base of our system.

This has been one program that has worked. It has worked effectively. There is a minimum of bureaucratic cost involved with it. Local communities make their own decisions on how to use it. Because it has been there so long now, it has taken on vital importance.

As I say, in most instances in my State, 100 percent of it is used to finance police departments and to provide for the public safety, which is clearly something that is essential from the point of view of people getting something they need from their tax money and from the money that they contribute in that form.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will go on record today as favoring the continuation of this partnership. It is essential that we do it. Some States today are in very serious difficulty. I know the States that are affected by the oil and gas problem, particularly now, desperately need the revenue sharing money, but we do in Michigan as well. I hope the Senate will go strongly on record today for keeping this very vital program alive.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan and interpolate the observation that no one knows the future. One moment, this part of the country is prosperous, another not; this kind of economy is doing well, others are not. They shift.

One of the points about Federal revenue sharing is that it provides a steady level of support no matter what the change which takes place.

I see the Senator form Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] has risen. I look forward to hearing from him. We have been reading of the city of New Orleans having the most difficult economic situation in a half century, since the Great Depression. We would not have thought that possible 3 years ago. Today, New York City is not doing all that badly. Three years ago, you would have thought that not possible.

That is why we have a National Government and national programs, I think.

I yield the Senator from Louisiana 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New York and I am delighted to join with him as a coauthor of this amendment. What he has read about the city of New Orleans, what he has read about Louisiana is not as bad as the actual reality. The reality in my State is so bad it is without parallel, I believe, anytime since the Great Depression.

We have 13.2-percent unemployment as last measured and this is rising rapidly. The State of Louisiana has an $800 million deficit as last measured; this comes on top of raising taxes by almost $1 billion 2 years ago.

The city of New Orleans just announced this morning that their deficit is not $12 million as they had thought it was, but $30 million

Mr. President, when you translate the deficits of the city and the State into job losses, particularly for State employees and State programs, it is absolutely devastating. We have already closed our libraries in New Orleans. And we are going to have to let more workers go: firemen, policemen, street cleaners, city workers of all kinds will have to be let go by the score.

Mr. President, New Orleans 3 years ago was not in good shape. It was directly dependent 3 years ago, at the height of the oil boom, upon revenue sharing. Revenue sharing now is nothing less than a lifeline. It is nothing less than a safety net. Indeed, it is not a safety net strong and firm enough to save us from economic difficulty, but it may be enough to save us from total economic ruin, from economic catastrophe.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I certainly will.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. We earlier heard the Senator from Tennessee speak of this as a tax shifting measure, if we go ahead as indicated by the budget resolution; in other words, that local governments will have to raise the taxes they loss to replace the revenue.

The Senator is saying in the city of New Orleans there is no capacity to raise the taxes; you simply cut the services. They have closed the libraries and they may close the fire departments as well.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is exactly correct. To say to New Orleans, "Go raise your taxes," is very much like saying, "Let them eat cake." The sales tax in New Orleans is already 9 percent, one of the highest rates in the country. If it is raised any higher, then it will discourage tourism, which is the last bit of business we have. You cannot raise revenues effectively from an income tax increase in New Orleans. People commute from the suburbs. Such a tax would have to be authorized by the State legislature. They would not do that any more for New Orleans than you would do it in Washington, DC. It would be vetoed.

Mr. President, we have very few places to turn. Washington is one of those few. Do you know what we get when we turn to Washington? We get the Reagan budget. If you look at the Reagan budget superimposed on the difficulty we now have, we in Louisiana will lose 9,000 guaranteed student loans, almost 5,000 Pell grants, almost 2,600 State student initiative grants; and we would have lost 750 jobs in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Program had the Reagan budget "rescission" gone forward. Thankfully, we reversed that. We would also, in the Reagan budget, lose 2,820 jobs on Red River and 290 jobs in the Cooperative Extension Service. In historic preservation, we would lose 4,000 jobs; for dislocated worker assistance, so-called TAA, in Shreveport, alone, 3,000 workers who have lost their jobs would not get benefits; 125,000 kids would be removed from the school lunch program; and from the summer feeding program, we would lose 40,000 kids.

Mr. President, we in Louisiana need help. We do not need in the kind of budget President Reagan proposes that takes away the remainder of Louisiana economic lifeline and allows us to go into economic ruin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might I inquire, how much time remains on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the committee has risen.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. President, clearly I want to permit the senior Senator from Washington, who currently occupies the Chair, who was here in my stead for most of this debate, to discuss the matter with the Senate for as long as he needs. I understand we have about 60 minutes remaining. I do want to comment. I yield myself as much time as I use off the amendment itself.

In my absence, I understand the distinguished junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] discussed my statement earlier this morning with reference to a CBO study on the economic effects of various energy taxes and the combination of a 6-cent gasoline tax and a $2.50-a-barrel import fee. He discussed that in morning business, I am told, but nonetheless I want to thank him for the comments he made.

Once again, with an additional number of Senators on the floor and obviously others who are not interested in the debate, I do commend to them the CBO report which I understand will be delivered sometime today. It will be on every desk in the Senate, and it will be available for the offices, for the press, and for various committees.

(Mr. GRAMM assumed the chair.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to repeat two points. I make these also for my good friend, the junior Senator from Texas, who occupies the Chair.

I believe, regardless of where one stands on any kind of energy taxes, there are two very, very important findings which, if they are not refuted, are rather dramatic for the United States.

As we all know, one of those findings assumed oil would get down to $13 a barrel. In many instances, it is already there. They assumed that the dependency of the United States on imported oil will rise from 30 percent today to 50 percent by 1991. I think that is a very, very important issue for our country. For all of us who were concerned in the early 1970's when we had a boycott of less than a million barrels a day at a time when our dependence was less than 50 percent clearly they should be very signficantly concerned about a situation in which our vunerability is much greater.

There is another fact that is very startling, and that is that 500,000 barrels a day by way of stripper production will be lost at current price levels. I think their assumption is right. They have, obviously, talked to people in "Oilpatch." Most of wells will be lost forever. That is also a very important fact.

The CBO also concludes that if you mix a revenue raiser between a $2.50 import fee and a 6-cent gasoline tax, you have equalized disparity in burdens among regions that arises with a straight import fee.

In addition, the CBO concludes interestingly enough, that one-third of the import tax would not be borne by Americans at all; that in its final mix it will be borne by the foreigners who supply us with oil.

The import tax I have just described would yield $10 billion in the first year, $11 and $12 billion in the next 2 years respectively. And I only use those numbers because quite by coincidence they match up very well with some of the assumptions we make in our budget resolution of ways and means to arrive at a revenue change.

Finally CBO concludes the tax would have little or no discernible effect on the American economy, and that is an interesting conclusion. Obviously, as I indicated this morning, that would be debated by a number of people. But I also was intrigued with their analysis. Perhaps everybody knew this; I did not. Their approach to this tax change which yields no significant economic change is an extrapolation of the current practice. When the Finance Committee talks about, let us say, a new excise tax of $10 billion, they use the same contention which is called a static evaluation. This also applies to other new taxes and tax reform. It would appear to me—I have said it different ways before—that what is good for the goose is good for the gander. For those who think that some revenues in this budget resolution of the type just discussed will have this significant negative impact on the economy, I suggest that we assess all taxes in a similar way they are going to budget reduction on to reform the tax system. If you can assume none there, then I think it is pretty fair that you assume, as CBO has, that there be none here. I am not sure of either of those, but there is some merit to consistency. Since it is being done in one place very dramatically with a lot of revenues and a lot of tax changes, I think Senators will find this CBO evaluation rather interesting.

Now I yield to my friend, the senior Senator from Washington, who wants to speak in opposition to the proposal before us, as much time as he needs.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. President, it is with some trepidation that I speak not just in opposition to this amendment but to the case made by the distinguished Senator from New York. That Senator is not only an extraordinarily able Member of this body but is, I believe, the most eloquent Member of the U.S. Senate both orally and in writing. He presented to the Members of the Senate at the outset of his remarks an interesting book review on the book published yesterday by the former Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

In his fairly extensive comments, however, he spoke very little about the amendment itself, although it was addressed by very firm and persuasive presentations on the part of other cosponsors of the amendment.

Mr. President, the amendment and the arguments in favor of it present us with something of a paradox. Perhaps it is best stated by the letter from the National Coalition to Save General Revenue Sharing, a copy of which has been deposited on the desk of each Senator. I should like to quote one paragraph from that letter. The writer says:

> Let us tell you what this amendment does not do. It does not mandate a tax increase. It does not bust the budget or add to the deficit, since there would be no funds put in the budget for revenue sharing until the Finance Committee develops a mechanism to pay for it.

Mr. President, in all candor, the statement that this amendment does not mandate a tax increase is, at best, disingenuous.

The amendment proposed is a paradox because on the one hand it may result in no action at all, because the Finance Committee will not act upon it. In this case, of course, it will not add a tax increase or spending on the part of the Federal Government. On the other hand—and I believe this to be the purpose of those who propose the amendment—it will result in action on the part of the Finance Committee, and therefore will, of course, mandate a tax increase and will add quite substantially to the spending of the Federal Government.

So, to present this amendment to us as being innocuous because it has no tax or budgetary implications is either to mislead Members of the Senate or to say that we are wasting our time by debating it because nothing will happen in any event. I choose to treat the amendment as I believe the distinguished Senator from New York does: As the first step in a serious attempt to see to it that the Finance Committee of the Senate authorizes $4.6 billion in general revenue sharing for 1987 and adds $4.6 billion in taxes in 1987 on the people of the United States in order to pay for it.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORTON. I yield.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Perhaps the Senator heard that it is the nature of this program, being lagged, that it would be $6 billion for fiscal 1987; and if it continues, it would go up.

Mr. GORTON. The Senator appreciates the correction on the part of the Senator from New York.

On the assumption that the amendment is presented seriously as an attempt to rescue general revenue sharing and to impose taxes on the American people to finance it, it is in effect a request by its chief sponsor, a member of the Finance Committee, and a number of other members of that committee who have spoken in favor of it today, that the 80 Senators who are not members of the Finance Committee delegate to the 20 Senators who are members of that committee the authority not only to revive general revenue sharing but also to tell us precisely what taxes we must raise in order to finance that program.

In other words, we are asked at this point to delegate to members of that committee—the committee which is bringing us the tax reform proposal which has been under consideration for the last 8 or 10 weeks there, to the approbation of almost all Members of the Senate—the authority to find $4.6 billion a year in taxes on the American people to support a program which, by definition, will benefit local governments, but which those local governments are unwilling to fund themselves. In other words, we are asked to impose on the people of the United States this amount in additional taxes and then to delegate the responsibility for spending that to local governments—local governments, which, by definition, do not wish to raise their taxes in order to provide the services which we have heard eloquently defended on the floor of the Senate in the course of the last hour or so.

Mr. President, that, in some respects, may be too harsh a comment. My own view is that general revenue sharing has indeed been a successful program. It does have the great merit of getting some 99.8 percent of the moneys involved in it through to local governments for their decision as to the type of services which will be provided by them.

This Senator, at least, would be strongly inclined to vote for this amendment were it a substitute for $4.6 billion of categorical aid programs now going to States and local governments rather than something which is to be based on a tax increase levied upon the people of the United States. I would do so simply because more of this money does get through to ultimate beneficiaries than in the case of any categorical aid program, and because I agree with the sponsors of the amendment for the proposition that a local government is better able to set its own priorities than is the Congress of the United States.

Unfortunately, however, this amendment does not come to us in that form. It seeks simply to add to all the remaining categorical aid programs an additional several billions of dollars, to be paid for by the taxpayers of the United States, but to be used by various local governments.

Finally, as the Presiding Officer and as the distinguished Senator from New York well know, this Senator, at least, has not been averse to voting for additional revenues in order to meet the goals of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act and to meet what he considers to be appropriate national priorities. In fact, the budget resolution at the present time includes some $18.7 billion in new revenues for fiscal year 1987, to which must be added some $300 million to offset $300 million in outlays by reason of an amendment adopted yesterday on the floor of the Senate.

The true question under those circumstances, Mr. President, is not whether or not this program, in the abstract, is a desirable one. The true question is whether or not spending an additional $4.6 billion in taxes on general revenue sharing represents the highest priority of the Government of the United States; whether that is higher in priority than our investment in research in science or health; whether it is a higher priority than the American space program, which by definition can only be financed by the Federal Government; whether it is higher in priority than debate over a defense budget; whether it is higher in priority, in other words, than every other Federal spending program which is under great constraint in this budget, the vast majority of which are the exclusive province or the primary province of the Federal Government and not of State and local governments.

Mr. President, I must say bluntly that for this Senator, there are literally dozens of Federal programs which rank higher in priority than this one, which are functions of the Federal Government and which, in my view, should be funded before we come to the proposition which remains as true this year as when we began this debate a year ago—the proposition that very bluntly we no longer have revenue to share with local governments in this fashion.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, one of the most pressing issues confronting the Congress today is the reauthorization and funding of the Federal General Revenue Sharing Program. Revenue sharing constitutes a very productive partnership between Federal and local governments. It comprises the single largest Federal program assisting local authorities, providing $4.6 billion annually. As my colleagues know, general revenue sharing is a comprehensive and flexible program, allowing funds to be used for a wide range of programs and activities, determined at the local level, and giving localities the opportunity to respond quickly to new problems.

In my State of Pennsylvania, the general revenue sharing program has provided an annual allocation of $225 million which represents 16.7 percent of revenues raised locally by taxes. The need to continue this program has been fully documented. A recent survey found that revenue sharing in Pennsylvania accounted for almost 17 percent of the average local budget. The survey also indicated that 85 percent of township general revenue sharing funds were utilized for police, fire, and public works expenses.

The survey states that if revenue sharing does not receive reauthorization when it expires at the end of next fiscal year, at least 64 percent of Pennsylvania's counties would be compelled to compensate by raising taxes or cutting services. This would include an average 61-percent increase in property taxes. In a State like Pennsylvania, that has not fully benefited from economic recovery, such results could strike a crippling blow to continued recovery and economic well-being. The same is true for many States in this country.

In budget hearings that I held throughout the State, it became evident that revenue sharing is the critical part of the funding equation for many municipalities. The figures that I have cited above indicate why local officials, who represent their constituents, have made general revenue sharing a top priority and are most active in promoting its benefits.

Funding for general revenue sharing has been frozen at $4.6 billion annually from 1977 to 1985 with a drop to $4 billion in 1986, as the program has not contributed to the increase in Federal deficit during the past 9 years.

The amendment before us will provide $4.6 billion for general revenue sharing for each fiscal year from 1987 through 1989, if the Finance Committee reauthorizes the program and finds additional revenues to support it. There is a bill before the Finance Committee, of which I am a cosponsor, to reauthorize and provide revenue for general revenue sharing. The funding in these amendments is responsible, level funding.

I urge the support of this amendment by my colleagues as a step toward preserving this vital program.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I find myself in the situation of comanager of the resolution, and I yield 5 minutes off the resolution to my friend, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG].

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the manager.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to insure the continuation of the general revenue sharing program. I am an original cosponsor of this amendment.

It is fitting that this amendment should be offered by my distinguished colleague from New York. For many years, he has been one of our Nation's foremost experts on urban America. The senior Senator from New York knows the richness and vitality found in our cities. Our cities are centers of art, commerce, finance, and education. But he knows as well that many of our most pressing and intractable problems are found in our cities.

But we are not talking only of large cities. In New Jersey, local governments—large and small—will share $126 million in revenue sharing in fiscal year 1986. Nationwide, 39,000 local governments participate in this program.

Revenue sharing is vital to the survival of many of our cities and towns. Revenue sharing is a key element in the partnership between the Federal Government and our localities. The ability of many local governments—large and small—to provide basic services without resorting to regressive tax increases hinges on the continuation of revenue sharing.

Mr. President, the Senate has the opportunity by adopting the Moynihan amendment to send a message to our local governments that we are not abandoning the Federal/local partnership. The Senate can tell mayors across the Nation that the challenges before their communities are of concern to us all.

The message being sent by the administration, Mr. President, is in stark contrast. Like the famous statement of a previous administration to New York City, the administration is saying to urban America, "drop dead." Our localities are being told that their concerns are not the proper business of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the question the Senate must answer today is this: "Is the ability our Nation's local governments to provide basic services—to provide for the public safety and the health and well-being of their citizens—in any way a concern of the Nation as a whole?"

The President's fiscal year 1987 budget answers that question with a resounding "no!". And it goes beyond revenue sharing. Beyond terminating revenue sharing, the President's budget would: Cut the Community Development Block Grant Program by $500 million in fiscal year 1986 and $1 billion in fiscal year 1987; terminate the Urban Development Action Grant Program; cut federally assisted housing by over 70 percent from $10 billion to $2.3 billion.

Terminate the Economic Development Administration.

Cut Federal aid to mass transit by 66 percent.

Terminate Federal assistance to Amtrak.

Reduce Federal assistance to highways and airports.

Cut Medicaid payments by $1.3 billion.

Mr. President, the fiscal year 1987 budget offered by the administration represents the end of the Federal/local partnership.

Mr. President, the budget before us contains painful cuts for local governments. Perhaps the most painful is the proposed phaseout of general revenue sharing. Coupled with other suggested reductions, the phase-out of revenue sharing will mean higher local taxes and service cutbacks.

The services provided by revenue sharing are not frills to be quickly shed and little missed. We are not talking about discretionary spending. Revenue sharing pays for basic services. It insures that a policeman will be available to answer an emergency. That a fire truck is there to respond to a call. The schools, libraries, and hospitals will remain open.

Mr. President, opponents of revenue sharing argue that if local governments want the services paid for by revenue sharing, then they can pay for them. This argument ignores the immense pressure under which local governments are laboring in response to a 23.5 percent decrease in grants to State and local governments since 1981.

The proposal to end revenue sharing is being made at the same time the administration wants to eliminate the deductability of State and local taxes and limit the use of tax exempt bonds. These measures would make it virtually impossible for local governments to raise the revenues necessary to compensate for the lost Federal funds.

Mr. President, added together, these proposals lead this Senator to an inescapable conclusion. If the Federal Government will not assist local government in providing services, and if we deny local government the ability to raise alternative revenues, services will just not be provided. It is not a matter of putting local governments on a diet. It is a matter of starving them to death.

Mr. President, across this country there are examples of mayors and county officials struggling to maintain and revitalize their economies in the face of declining tax bases. It is one thing to heap praise on local officials and quite another to ensure that they have the tools to do the job. Programs like revenue sharing, urban development action grants and community development block grants are absolutely essential if our cities and towns are going to make it.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment by the senior Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes from the resolution.

May I thank the Senator from New Jersey for his emphasis on the central concern that so many of us have here which is the Federal-local relationship which has been established over the past 30 years and of which the key element here was revenue sharing, a statement of trust, as the Senator from Washington said to the good sense and priorities of local government.

I might just note that one of the things that led up to this was the occasion in late 1960 when the administration found itself proposing a rat control bill here in Congress. The elemental urban service is rodent control before anything else. And what is the Federal Government doing with such matters? That is why we let local governments decide.

A relationship was created, it does exist, which is as much or more important for rural communities as for urban communities.

A crisis was created for the deliberate purpose of destroying this relationship. We are saying, "No, we know we have a budget crisis but we are not going to let it carry out its intended objective, which is to destroy all these relationships." It is not good government and it is submitting to a conspiratorial turn that is certainly, in this Senator's view, unwelcomed.

Mr. President, I yield an additional 2 minutes off the resolution to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to support this amendment to restore full funding for general revenue sharing. I am a joint sponsor of this amendment.

The budget resolution under consideration by the Senate allows $1.8 billion for two quarters to close out the general revenue sharing in fiscal year 1987, if the Finance Committee reauthorizes the program and then finds additional revenues to pay for it. This is not acceptable.

Mr. President, many units of local governments, including those in my State, are facing serious problems trying to meet the needs of their citizens. The general revenue sharing is one of the most important Federal programs in existence today. It is not a giveaway program. As you know, this was a program enacted in 1972 and at that time a commitment was made between the States, municipalities, and the Federal Government. This was a commitment by those who believe in the constitutional principles of Federalism. The revenue sharing program was begun as an integral part of a long-range plan to return government control to the people through their local governments. The idea at that time was that Government bureaucracies in Washington had too much to say over how a local government should spend its tax dollars. That was a valid argument then—and it still is today.

I am here today to ask that the Members of this body act now to see to it that the Federal Government stands by its commitment. As you, of course, know, throughout its existence the basic purpose of general revenue sharing has been to bring about a balance in the total tax revenues going to the Federal, State, and local governments of this Nation.

The General Revenue Sharing Program has the lowest administrative costs of any of the Federal assistance programs; it is distributed on a fair and equitable basis. The funding received by local governments through this program has been crucial to enabling local governments to provide the much-needed services to its citizens.

Mr. President, money worthwhile and money well spent equals revenue sharing for the local governments. We are talking about money for education, fire protection, health care, highways, housing, hospitals, libraries, natural resources, parks and recreation, and police protection.

Mr. President, revenue sharing helps local governments with their day care programs for the young and hot meals for old folks.

Let me assure each Member of this august body, the distinguished Members of the House of Representatives, and, most importantly, the American people, that revenue-sharing funds have not been wasted. Revenue sharing has been used to pay for basic essential needs and services for the citizens of this great Nation.

Mr. President, I further add that a great deal of revenue-sharing funds in my State goes for police protection. With crime as one of the major problems, I dare any Member of Congress to go to his or her home town and try to convince his or her neighbors, families, and friends that police protection is not an essential service. If the local police are to fight crime and do their jobs well to protect the citizens, we need to help them. We have an opportunity to help the local police forces through this Revenue Sharing Program, there being many new impositions placed on State and local governments as a result of Federal court action as well as Federal congressional action, and it seems to me that this particular area of dealing with crime that revenue sharing is needed. We certainly ought to continue it.

Mr. President, I believe that revenue sharing is the best way to get some of the tax dollars back into the local communities. Without revenue sharing, local governments would be faced with the choice of increasing taxes or reducing services. If the funds are not restored for revenue sharing, there will be many city, town, and county governments across America that will be completely handcuffed fiscally.

I strongly support multiyear funding for the Revenue Sharing Program so that local governments may have a realistic basis for their fiscal planning.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution which was adopted by the legislature of Alabama urging Congress to take affirmative action to extend the Revenue Sharing Program be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION

Whereas, the federal revenue sharing program launched during the early 1970's has pumped millions of dollars annually into state, county and city treasuries throughout this nation; and

Whereas, the current authorization for the federal revenue sharing program terminates at the end of fiscal year 1986; and

Whereas, in Alabama, federal revenue sharing funds account for over 9 percent of total municipal revenues and over 5 percent of total county revenues; and

Whereas, without federal revenue sharing funds, many local governmental entities will be forced to cut back or even curtail such vital services as police and fire protection among others; and

Whereas, the federal revenue sharing program is generally recognized as the most equitable and administratively efficient federal program now in existence; and

Whereas, there is no provision of law that sunsets federal revenue sharing in 1986, but merely a consensus of the conferees on the Budget Reconciliation Bill of 1985 that it would be sunsetted after the next meetings of the various state legislatures; and

Whereas, under such consensus agreement, seven state legislatures are not scheduled to meet again until 1987; and

Whereas, because the Alabama Legislature meets in 1986, this state's federal revenue sharing funds would be sunsetted at least one year prior to those of the aforementioned seven states, thereby placing an inequitable financial burden on the citizens of Alabama; and

Whereas, there are no less than five bills presently before Congress that would reauthorize federal revenue sharing at least through the fiscal year 1987; and

Whereas, the sense of the Alabama Legislature is that if federal revenue sharing is to be terminated, Congress should reauthorize the program for at least one more year while it formulates a gradual and equitable sunset plan; now therefore,

Be it resolved by the legislature of Alabama, both Houses thereof concurring, That we do hereby urge Congress to take affirmative action to extend the federal revenue sharing program at least through the end of fiscal year 1987.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution shall be presented to the President of the United States and to each member of the Alabama Congressional Delegation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me first inquire, how much time do the opponents have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

The distinguished Senator from Texas [Senator GRAMM] would like to speak for a few moments and then I would like to speak for a while. I would mention, unless the majority leader or the minority leader have something different in mind, I would hope now that I would not use all of our time, and the proponents have no time left on the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponents have 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. They have 2 minutes remaining; excuse me.

Mr. President, I think we might start voting, if it is satisfactory with Senator MOYNIHAN, at 1:15 or 1:20, at the latest. There are a number of Senators who want to be put on notice.

So it would seem to me we would be ready to start this vote at about 1:15.

Let me state just for a moment that I have received a message from the leadership office that we do not want to vote that soon. I have to discuss it with him and perhaps delay it because a group of Senators have to go to the White House. So let me reserve on that and we will talk about it in a little while on the record as soon as I have confirmed that.

I yield as much time to the Senator from Texas as he desires.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the chairman yield for just one question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. There is a meeting the President has requested at the White House at 1:45. It seems to me possible to vote before then or, if not, we want to accommodate the Senators going to the meeting. I have been asked. That does not happen every day. But is it because of that meeting or is it because of Senators who cannot be here to vote?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me clarify it with the leader. That message that came in was from his office. It may very well be we will finish our debate and ask that another amendment be called up and set a time, perhaps somewhere around 2:15 or 2:30, for a vote on this. We will accommodate the Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I do not get asked to the White House every day.

Mr. DOMENICI. Well, I do not know whether you do or not. I am delighted you are going. I hope you have a very, very good meeting and return convinced that we ought to vote for less add-ons on this budget.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am going to put a word in to the President on your behalf.

Mr. DOMENICI. We need the President to put a word in with you in our behalf.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. He is a busy man.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee for yielding.

This amendment is in all ways reasonable and proper and, looking at the list of cosponsors, it is probably popular.

I rise in opposition to it and in doing so I would like to begin by associating my remarks with the senior Senator from Washington. The senior Senator from Washington outlined options in the Federal budget that could use $3.6 billion this year and $4.6 billion next year. And I would like to add one alternative and that alternative, of course, is to leave the money in the pockets of the people who earned it in the first place. Then that money could be invested in the American dream, invested in education, invested in housing, invested in new plant and equipment to create new jobs.

The biggest problem with the budget before us is not the fact that many of us do not like the priorities in terms of defense and nondefense spending; that many of us do not like the priorities of raising taxes to fund domestic spending. The biggest problem is that the budget, by its very nature, has to be a partnership between the Congress and the President.

Under the law, we can adopt any budget we want, but to enforce that budget we have to adopt a reconciliation bill, in this case a reconciliation bill that prior to yesterday would have raised taxes $53 billion over a 3-year period above the level that the President asked for in his budget.

Yesterday, we proposed raising taxes through action on an amendment by roughly another $3 billion, raising the total to $56 billion. If we, through the adoption of this amendment, add another $13 billion to taxes, we are talking about almost $70 billion worth of taxes above the level that the President requested in his budget.

Now, this must lead Members to speculate as to what the President is going to do. Having listened to the President through the 1984 campaign, having listened to the President every day since that time, having listened to the President as late as yesterday say that he was going to veto a tax increase above the level called for in his budget, I would have to conclude that, if we send a tax increase for $70 billion to fund increases in domestic spending down to the White House, that bill is going to be vetoed.

Now, that in no way reflects on the perfect right and consistency of this amendment. But I think it does reflect on the fact that, if we simply write a budget and set out spending levels and sustain expenditures without taking into account the possibility of enacting taxes to pay for it, we do create the problem under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill that we may find ourselves at the beginning of the fiscal year with an across-the-board cut being imposed. And I guess maybe I am a little sensitive to that because when the headline runs, it will be "Gramm-Rudman Cuts; Gramm-Rudman Denies." The reality will be that Gramm-Rudman did not do any of those things, but instead that Congress did not live up to the commitment to meet the target of $144 billion.

If the distinguished Senator from New York had offered an amendment that joined together the amendment we voted on yesterday and this amendment, I would have supported it. As you will remember, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee offered an amendment that set out all the terminations in the President's budget and proposed that they be adopted and that tax increases be reduced. As I remember, that total was about $4.2 billion. Had this amendment had that offset, accepting those terminations, I not only would have voted for it, but I would have been a strong proponent of it.

I have always felt, relative to the grant program, that revenue sharing was preferable. I guess part of it is regional in nature. I have always felt, whether you were talking about heating days squared in the formula for low income energy assistance or the age of housing as a factor in HUD funding, that my part of the country has always ended up on the short end of the stick in terms of the grant system. I have always felt that priorities set at the local level were more likely to be priorities representing the public interests than priorities set in Washington.

But our choice today is not to terminate UDAG and EDA and a multitude of other programs to fund revenue sharing. I would support that amendment. Our choice is, do we want to over the next 3 years raise taxes by almost $13 billion to fund a program that we claimed termination for in last year's budget; that we took credit for, in fact, in the whole process of going through the adoption of a budget last year in reconciliation. We are back again voting on it and debating it this year.

I think the odds of the President signing a revenue-sharing extension without an offsetting reduction in spending somewhere is relatively low.

But I rise in opposition to this amendment. I hope we can vote it down. While I do not oppose revenue sharing as compared to grants, I think we are moving in the wrong direction in raising taxes on the working men and women of America so that Government can continue to grow at a rate several times the rate of growth in the private sector. I remind my colleagues that, even the President's budget proposal which had $53 billion less in revenues, Government spending in the aggregate was not cut. The fact tends to be lost in all of these arguments about these massive reductions in Federal spending is that under the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman law, if the economy stays healthy—and I submit that $70 billion of new taxes will not help keep it healthy—but if it stays healthy, Government will grow every day under the Gramm-Rudman requirement because revenues are growing faster than the deficit reduction requirements under Gramm-Rudman. The problem is that Congress does not want to limit the growth of Federal spending, but in fact wants to expand it and that is what this amendment is about. I hope my colleagues will vote it down. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, now I am prepared to indicate what the leader wants us to do with floor votes. I think I can accommodate it without having to do anything extraordinary. The leader indicated that we would not vote on this amendment, either up or down or table, before 2:15 p.m.

Anyone who is interested in making sure that they are around for the vote and have something else that is important, should know we will finish this debate, and if there is not another amendment that we can call up and temporarily lay aside in order to vote on the Moynihan amendment, I will use time off the bill to accommodate the leader's concern with reference to the time we vote on this.

Mr. President, I yield myself as much time as I need now in opposition. However, I would like to be advised if I use up the remaining time that I have under the amendment itself.

In my opening remarks a few days ago when this budget resolution and the fiscal policy plan for the country was taken up here on the floor, I mentioned that there was a figure in Greek mythology named Sisyphus. In mythology he was pushing a large rock up a mountain. He would get the rock up to the top, and it would roll back down. He kept trying but never could get it quite up to the top of the mountain, where it would fall down on the other side once and for all.

As I said, I have a cartoon of this in my office. It is most interesting. It has Sisyphus trying to push that rock up, but that rock is the budget. He has it about halfway up. You know the rest. It did not matter how far. It comes rolling down. Well, this amendment reminds me of Sisyphus' large rock. We have eliminated funding for all or part of this program in two separate pieces of legislation and now it is back.

Shortly, I will tell you of my involvement in revenue sharing. Obviously, if I had my druthers and we could vote to cut some other programs, it would not take much to get the Senator from New Mexico not only vote for revenue sharing, but I would offer the amendment to keep it. But my experience is that Congress will not make enough cut to make room in the budget for something like revenue sharing.

Let me remind the Senate the budget is growing, not coming down. My only comment to my friend from Texas would have been that he is absolutely right. But the President too wants the budget to grow. It is just that he wants it to grow in the areas that he prefers.

Obviously, the President would say, as others do, that my preference is something very important—the military. That is true. There are many who agree with him. Nonetheless, we all have our own preferences. But on this amendment, last year we voted in the budget resolution to phase out revenue sharing. It passed.

On the floor of the U.S. Senate, the HUD-Independent Agency Subcommittee of Appropriations, chaired by Senator GARN brought an appropriations bill to the floor. There was not enough money in it for veterans, and there was not enough money in there for the space program—it also included revenue sharing fully funded. I do not know how many Senators know it, but in that appropriation bill they voted here on the floor to phase out revenue sharing.

That is why I am reminded of the Greek figure, Sisyphus pushing the rock up the mountain. I am sure that when the Appropriations Committee acted last year, many members thought they had finally pushed one budget rock over the mountain. Then we reinforced this action with reconciliation.

The proponents say this amendment does not mandate a tax increase. Well, that is right. But I guarantee you that there is no way within the budget that you can pass this amendment to reinstate revenue sharing fully for an additional year. This budget contemplates payment for one additional quarter, the one before us. We have been asked to give a transition period. The transition period contemplated is all of the rest of this year, and the first quarter of next year. But this amendment says that you can provide for a full fiscal year and it just will not cost you anything. Let us go ahead and say to the Finance Committee, keep the program. If they can find $4 billion that is a rounded number in new taxes, we can keep this program and everything will be OK.

I just hope everybody knows that this is a real vote to add $4 billion to the deficit, or to add $4 billion to the $19 billion in taxes for the year 1987 that are now prescribed by this budget resolution. Yesterday's amendment in the name of education added another $300 million in new taxes in the first year. It is a little bigger in the outyears—$1.2 billion and $1.4 billion in 1988 and 1989.

Frankly, I have already given some indication of my perception of this program. I really did not think the day would ever come that we would have put in revenue-sharing. Prior to general revenue-sharing, we were certain that we knew how to do things better. We had decades of categorical grant programs, with strings attached, for education, for aid to the counties, for aid to the cities to take care of the homeless. We always wanted to have our committees involved, and pass on programs every year. Then general revenue-sharing came along, and said let us just put that money in local officials' hands and see if they cannot do some good with it. That was a great day.

Yesterday, however, we saw that $4 billion could be saved with 44 individual programs that have strings attached. Only 14 Senators desired to get rid of the $4 billion for those categorical grant programs.

Let me tell you that this is just the beginning. The budget before us has $108 billion in grants and aid of different types to State and local governments. Whatever changes we have made in the past 5 years, that is how many are still there. Yes, some of them are far more important than others. Some of them have to do with health. Some of them have to do with economic development. Clearly, Congress has said it is not going to get rid of the 44 programs that are among the lesser categorical grant programs. They may be the least efficient or perhaps even the least necessary of the entire 2,400-and-some programs of our National Government. We cannot get rid of those either.

So today if my count is right, we revisit this issue for the third time, including last year in the budget. Let us bite one serious bullet. It is a pretty big one. It is almost $4 billion. Let us do it. We ordered the committees to do it in reconciliation and we thought it was done. We voted in an appropriation bill to cut it out.

Now we are here again with an amendment that says, "Put it back, but do not worry about its impact on the deficit; it does not mandate anything."

Obviously, I have grown to appreciate the fact that we cannot expect everything here. You cannot get your way all the time. Clearly, there is room for disagreement and there is room for compromise. But I do not think one ought to doubt this one.

If revenue sharing is put back this year, with its $4 billion a year price tag, for those who thought there was one breakthrough for fiscal responsibility, just say goodbye to it. In fact, that fellow who pushed the rock up the mountain for all those years moved to another mountain on this one. There is no question he is not going to be pushing here anymore. He is going to find another one. Maybe he will find some other program and start pushing the rock up to see if he can get the rock over the top of the mountain. This one is gone.

I urge that everyone understand that we do reach the point at some place that we just cannot continue to say, "Add some more taxes." We cannot even say, "We do not even add that number to the tax side unless and until they pass the revenue sharing and then unless and until they pay for it."

I think we ought to decide that we cannot afford it.

Mr. President, I want to repeat that I have plenty of county commissioners and some of the smaller cities in my State who desperately need revenue sharing. They also use many of the other programs that I have alluded to, that $108 billion, and they use some of those programs that will be terminated.

There is no way that their Senator can find a substitute for revenue sharing or some of those others. I cannot get anyone around here to do that. I tried to draw up a bill on that but it will not work. You just cannot find enough categorical programs that people are willing to give up and to marry into some kind of a swap for revenue sharing.

I would hope that we would not follow on the heels of a $4 billion programmatic increase yesterday, as I indicated, one-half of 1 percent increase in what America is spending for education. We added that to our national commitment, which is a very small commitment. That is the first vote.

The second vote is this one. It is a little bigger. Yesterday's and today's votes will be a victory for, those who want to send a signal that we are going to have a sequester at the end of the year and cut everything across the board. I would even think this is the last amendment that might be adopted in the next 4 or 5 days to add some more. I do not think it is getting us closer to a budget, however. I think it is getting us closer to a situation where we will have none. We will have to take about a $25 billion to $30 billion outlay cut across the board at the end of the year.

How much additional time remains in opposition, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield such time as the distinguished Senator from Florida desires in opposition.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. As I understand it, the vote is to be called for 2:15.

Mr. DOMENICI. In response to the leader's request, I think it is to be no sooner than that.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am sure the Chair will confirm this, but I did not get a unanimous consent that we would have a vote of any type. I merely said we would not vote sooner than that.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I understand. I wanted to be absent from the floor for a period.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the budget debate always produces a series of attractive amendments. This one is attractive. I see a long list of other very appealing amendments.

The trouble is each one compounds the problem we have passing this resolution. They certainly do not add revenue. That is one of the problems with the amendment before us.

The committee tried to take into advance consideration the views expressed on the floor today by the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from New York, the Senator from Michigan, and many other sponsors of this amendment. We said we would try to make allowances if revenue sharing was reauthorized. That is what we need to remember. The authorization for revenue sharing is expiring and it must be reauthorized. The President of the United States has said he will not countenance the reauthorization of revenue sharing. It has been made very clear that he will veto any bill that attempts to reauthorize revenue sharing. Because of that, our Budget Act last year, and the appropriations bills we passed last year, took into consideration that revenue sharing was going to expire.

But because of some of the views we heard expressed here today and have heard in the committee, we fenced off some money. We said that in the event revenue sharing or a portion of it is reauthorized, and in the event the Finance Committee raises the additional money to pay for it, we will allow approximately half of the revenue sharing money to come forward for 1 year.

That was our attempt take care of these concerns and, at the same time, put together a product with some balance in the amount of spending cuts and, at the same time, not have it overbalanced with new revenue in the package.

Our concern is, as we see these amendments come forward, we are going to lose that balance we put in.

Revenue sharing is something tremendously popular in my State. I hear from all my cities. I hear from all my counties. They certainly want it.

We have been trying to tell the officials down there for the last several years that this was a program whose life was expiring, that the President was not going to reauthorize it. They needed to make other provisions.

We attempted to do that in last year's budget. We attempted to give the signal as strong and as loud as we could give it, "Get ready to replace this money because you will be in trouble with revenue sharing." We have done that again in the budget resolution.

But if we provide this money, the problem we run into is the possibility that it will be sequestered under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Sequester will work all kinds of havoc on the cities, all kinds of havoc on the counties, much more havoc on our State governments, to say nothing of what it would do to all our domestic and defense programs.

That is what people must take into consideration, that and the fact that in this proposal we try to provide additional phase-down time, additional money to allow the counties and the cities to be able to readjust.

Mr. President, let me remind my colleagues of the name of the program itself—revenue sharing.

What have we been doing over these past years with revenue sharing?

We have been sharing revenue we do not have in the Federal Government because we are running a deficit. This year, last year, the year before, the year before, the year before, the year before, and the year before that. So we are simply sharing our printing press, that's all. We are sharing a printing press.

We have seen what that has done to us over the years: a tremendous increase in interest rates, inflation, and recessions.

The whole purpose of the present exercise is to provide ourselves with some revenue to share. We might be able to get our deficit down. We certainly will not be able to do that if we turn around and continue this program.

Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Ohio wants to ask a question. I shall be happy to yield to him.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

If the Senator will yield for a question, it is my understanding that the distinguished manager of the bill, Mr. DOMENICI, had come on the floor and indicated that he hoped there might be some other amendments called up while waiting for a vote on the Moynihan amendment. It is a fact that the leader has also been pressing those of us who have amendments to call them up. I am on the floor not to make any disturbance but to indicate that I am prepared to offer an amendment.

I am prepared to call it up, debate it very briefly, with the understanding that there be no vote on it until such time as the Moynihan amendment is disposed of.

If that is the pleasure of the managers of the bill, I am perfectly willing to proceed at this point and if it is not, I hope that after the Moynihan amendment is disposed of, the Senator from Ohio might be recognized for the purpose of calling up my amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first, I had not the slightest suspicion that the Senator from Ohio was on the floor to cause the slightest disturbance.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Never.

Mr. DOMENICI. Which amendment is it, I ask the Senator?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Child health. I think the managers have been notified about that; it is approximately $200 million over 3 years. I do not think there will be any debate. We can vote it up or down and I have no problem with respect to the time limit.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from Ohio that we had already advised Senators KENNEDY and DECONCINI that we were expecting them to offer amendments. Let us check and see and we shall get right back to the Senator if either of them is ready. They have been told they will be next. We will try to do that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I shall stand by until the chairman informs me. I thank both managers.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, let me conclude by saying I think the amendment of the Senator from New York is very attractive and has a strong base of support in our cities and counties. But what we have before us in the resolution is a reasonable, practical approach we should follow. It would give the best opportunity for some kind of additional support for revenue sharing.

Mr. DOMENICI. May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CHILES. I hope that we would follow that course rather than adopt this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of the amendment which allows for the full funding of the General Revenue Sharing Program for each of the fiscal years 1987 through 1989 at the $4.6 billion funding level.

Since the inception of the Revenue Sharing Program in 1972, I have been strongly committed to the program's objectives and have supported each reauthorization of the program.

Mr. President, revenue sharing has been one of the most successful programs we have funded. In my State of Louisiana, the cities, parishes and townships that have received revenue sharing funds have used this money to provide essential services to their residents. Improved education, policy and fire protection, health and public hospitals, roads and highways, and parks and libraries have been the result of the revenue sharing dollars. Revenue sharing represented over 8.9 percent of the total available tax revenues for localities in Louisiana and if revenue sharing funds were to be cut off, our smaller communities would be forced to pass sizable tax increases of over 30 percent or cut public services to compensate for the loss of these funds. More than 85 percent of the program's recipients are jurisdictions with populations of less than 10,000.

Mr. President, Louisiana is currently in the midst of an economic crisis due to the international oil situation. Unemployment is now at 13.2 percent, the highest of any State. In some areas where the oil and chemical plants have closed, unemployment has exceeded 25 percent. Our communities have already cut public services and if revenue sharing is discontinued, a 30 percent tax increase to offset the loss of revenue sharing from an already limited base would appear impossible.

Revenue sharing is essential to allow local governments to pick up the increasing burdens from declining Federal support for domestic needs. According to the Congressional Research Service, the Federal Government has cut State and local programs by 23.5 percent in 1980–85—constant dollars were used for comparison. In many communities, revenue sharing is a large part of the local government's budget.

Revenue sharing also allows the local community flexibility to allocate the funds to meet their individual needs. Mr. President, where can we find a program today that is more efficient dollar for dollar than this program? The Federal administrative costs are less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the total outlays of this program. Revenue sharing works and it works well.

I cannot think of a time when reauthorization has been needed more. Reauthorization will help our financially strapped local governments and provide jobs for our citizens.

Reauthorization of the General Revenue Sharing Program has the full support of our Nation's mayors, parish, county and law enforcement officials. Reauthorization should also hold the highest priority among our Members in this Congress.

That is why, Mr. President, I strongly support this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support the continuation of full funding for the full General Revenue Sharing Program for fiscal years 1987 through 1989.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time to be charged equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislation clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished manager of the bill yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment which would allow for the continued funding of the General Revenue Sharing Program. This program is the highest priority Federal assistance program for our cities and counties, and with good reason.

There are some who argue that revenue sharing was instituted to share what was at the time surplus revenues with the cities and counties. Now that we no longer have surplus revenues, the argument goes, we can no longer afford the program. I would argue the opposite: we cannot afford not to have revenue sharing. The disruption in vital services that a loss of these funds would cause far outweighs the benefits of the dollars saved by ending the program.

These funds provide necessary services such as police and fire protection, water and sewer services, life centers for our senior citizens, clothes for the needy, and food for the hungry. And the list does on and on. Revenue sharing enables our cities and counties to provide for their own and in the long run reduces the drain on the Federal Treasury by allowing the most efficient allocation of resources. Revenue sharing allows our communities to provide for the specific needs of their citizens, rather than the generic needs that other targeted Federal programs provide.

There is a great myth in Washington that our communities will be able to adjust to a loss of these funds. I wish that were true. For years I have been preaching to the cities and counties not to put these dollars into reoccurring expenses—use them for single expenditures—knowing that the time would come when even this great program would come under attack. One thing I learned about Washington when I was Governor is that nothing is permanent. Unfortunately, many of our communities put these funds into reoccurring expenses because they had no other sources with which to pay for the services. I can't fault them; these local officials were only trying to improve their communities by providing necessary services.

I think that our local officials recognize that revenue sharing will not be around forever. They are preparing to have fewer dollars, and over time will find ways to adjust. But this transition cannot occur overnight. Our communities must be given adequate time to reorder priorities, seek and enact other sources of revenue, and reassess needs, without an interruption in services. I know that there are those who feel that local officials have been on notice for several months now and so should have been able to get their houses in order and prepare for an elimination of these funds. But that simply ignores the realities of local financing and budgeting, and the types of governments these funds go to.

More than 85 percent of the recipients of revenue sharing are local communities with populations under 10,000. The large majority of these communities receive no other assistance from the Federal Government. It is impossible for these communities to replace these funds within a few months or even a year's time. General revenue sharing is the only form of Federal assistance for more than 30,000 local governments. Even providing these communities with an additional two quarters of revenue sharing will not solve their problems. They simply need more time. The 49 largest cities receiving revenue sharing spend 55 percent of these dollars on fire protection, and police protection and education. Perhaps these larger communities will ultimately be able to replace these dollars, but they certainly will not be able to do so within the next few months.

Our cities and counties are strapped for fiscal resources also. A 1985 survey by the National League of Cities showed that 30 percent of the cities responding had already raised property taxes in 1984, 18 percent had raised sales taxes, 24 percent had raised business taxes, and 39 percent had raised user fees. We cannot expect these same communities to raise the additional funds to replace revenue sharing dollars.

The fact is, our communities must provide essential services. Not all communities are fiscally able to do so. Revenue sharing provides a way of sharing the great wealth of this Nation with all in an attempt to give each community the opportunity to provide for its citizens. While I am as strong a supporter of reducing the deficit as anyone, I believe that there are some programs that are worth funding, and general revenue sharing is definitely one of those programs.

I urge my colleagues to recognize the continuing vital needs of our cities and counties and support this amendment.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the Senator from New York, Mr. MOYNIHAN, in offering this amendment to provide for full funding for general revenue sharing for the next 3 fiscal years. I know of no amendment that we will consider to this budget resolution that is of any greater importance than this one. Revenue sharing is providing over $42 million to Arkansas cities and counties this year, and a recent study showed that revenue-sharing funds make up over 22 percent of the typical budget for most communities in Arkansas.

This amendment is a fiscally responsible way to continue revenue sharing. The way the amendment is drafted, it will only take effect if two things occur. First, Congress must reauthorize the program. Second, sufficient revenues must be found to pay for the continuation of the program. Therefore, adoption of this amendment will not increase the budget deficit.

Mr. President, revenue sharing is a program that enjoys widespread support, and should stand on its own merits. It's about the only program operated by the Federal Government that cuts out all the redtape and strings that so frequently go with Federal assistance. This program is basically a conduit—funds are returned to the cities and counties of our Nation, and local officials decided how the money is spent, not someone sitting behind a desk here in Washington. This is a very efficient use of tax dollars. It's important to note, Mr. President, that this program doesn't have any bloated bureacracy here in Washington. Only two-tenths of 1 percent of all funds in this program are used for administrative costs. Therefore, 99.8 percent of the money goes to local governments.

Mr. President, I've heard from mayors, county judges, emergency medical personnel, teachers, and many, many others who support this program. These funds are used to provide emergency medical services, transportation for our elderly citizens, police and fire protection, and many other important services.

We shouldn't eliminate this very important program, which is as effective as any program operated by the Federal Government. We should focus our attention on other parts of the budget where inefficiencies are well-documented.

For all of these reasons, Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the pending amendment. Also, I ask unanimous consent that a news article from the Arkansas Democrat on the issue of revenue sharing be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FUNDING LOSS TO HIT ARKANSAS HARDEST

(By Damon Thompson)

WASHINGTON.—Arkansas' cities and counties will lose a bigger portion of their budgets than local governments in any other state if the federal government eliminates its general revenue-sharing program Sept. 30.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors, during a recent meeting at the nation's capital, circulated a chart indicating how much federal revenue sharing goes to local governments in each state and the percentage of local tax increases—excluding school taxes—that would be needed to replace those funds if they were eliminated.

The chart, based on 1985 fiscal year figures provided by the Department of the Treasury, shows local governments in Arkansas receive about $40 million annually from revenue sharing and would have to raise taxes by an overall 22.3 percent to equal that amount.

Only West Virginia, which would require overall local tax increases of 22.2 percent to raise the $44.5 million its local governments get in revenue sharing, was anywhere near Arkansas on the chart.

General revenue sharing, begun in 1972, now provides $4.5 billion in no-strings-attached federal funds a year to local governments nationwide.

However, Congress agreed last year in its 1986 budget resolution to end the program Sept. 30, at the end of the fiscal year, and President Reagan is expected to seek its elimination when he unveils his proposed 1987 budget this week.

That prospect already has local officials and lawmakers from Arkansas and elsewhere scrambling to convince Congress to reauthorize the program. But they say the outlook isn't rosy.

"It doesn't look promising at all to us," Courtney Langston, executive director of the Arkansas Association of Counties, said. "And Arkansas is going to take a big end of the loss."

Langston said elimination of revenue sharing would cut county government budgets on the average by 10.5 percent, or about $290,000 per county.

More specifically, he said the percentage of county budgets that revenue-sharing funds comprise ranges from 5.6 percent in Grant County to a whopping 19.8 percent in Hot Spring County.

The amount of revenue-sharing funds a county gets is based on factors including population and poverty level, which he said were also what determine how heavily counties depend upon them.

Langston said he has been warning county officials to prepare to cut services or find new revenue.

However, he said finding new revenues won't be simple. Twenty-six of Arkansas' 75 counties have already agreed to local sales taxes in recent years, while nearly three-fourths of the state's school districts have enacted millage increases.

"We don't have much of an option in Arkansas, except for the local-option sales tax," he said. "It's not going to be easy to ask for a tax increase in areas where people have already raised them."

In Hot Spring County, where unemployment has spiraled after a shutdown by the aluminum industry, he said a tax increase to cover a nearly 20 percent revenue loss would be an especially severe double whammy.

Don Zimmerman, executive director of the Arkansas Muncipal League, said the problem would be even more severe for Arkansas' cities. He said the cities receive about $24 million overall in revenue-sharing funds which account for 15 to 30 percent of the cities' operating budgets.

"Some cities that are able to have been using revenue sharing only for capital improvements, because they feared this was coming down the pike," he said. "But a large number are using them in their operating budgets right now to pay employees like their firemen and police.

"They're going to have to lay off some of them if they lose it."

Just as the impact on cities will be more acute, so will the problem of raising alternative revenues, Zimmerman said. He said more than 200 municipalities in Arkansas have already enacted a local-option sales tax, either by themselves or along with a county government.

"Most of the places where it would be most beneficial have already got one," he said. "But a lot of cities in Arkansas just don't have the tax base. They could possibly levy a sales tax, but they don't have any degree of retail sales. And counties have a better property tax source and they have pretty good fee systems in place that cities don't have."

Local government had already included this year's revenue-sharing funds in their budgets when Congress passed the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law that mandates automatic 4.3 percent cuts in most non-defense programs in 1986 unless Congress can work out an alternative by March 1.

Congressional leaders have indicated no alternative will be reached, however, meaning Arkansas' allocation of revenue-sharing funds will be cut by about $2 million.

"We'll manage to get by this year, but 1987 will be really critical," Langston said.

In addition to the possible loss of revenue-sharing funds, he said Gramm-Rudman also poses a threat to cities and counties in the form of possible cuts in aid which they traditionally receive through the states in the form of block grant programs.

Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., said recently he also feared cities and counties could be caught in a crunch if Congress approves a tax reform bill that does away with tax-exempt municipal bonds as well as deductions for state and local taxes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to express in the strongest terms my support for the Moynihan amendment to fund general revenue sharing in full next year.

Revenue sharing is the only program we have that helps nearly every city, town, and county throughout the country. These local governments depend on revenue-sharing funds to provide essential public services including education facilities, police and fire protection, health and public hospitals, roads, parks, and libraries.

There is simply no question that if this amendment fails, it will mean serious cuts in public services in these communities.

Last year, for instance, revenue sharing represented over 7.9 percent of the total available tax revenues for localities, other than school districts, in my own State of Ohio. That translates to a 7.9-percent reduction in services, or a 7.9-percent increase in local taxes, if this amendment fails.

The fact is, States and localities have been willing to do their share to solve the Federal budget problem. But they have already borne the major brunt of Federal budget cutbacks. Every single assistance program for the cities has experienced major funding cutbacks since 1981.

Communities simply cannot afford to lose revenue sharing. They need revenue sharing to make up for the increasing economic burdens caused by declining Federal support for other domestic needs. For instance, much of the burden of Medicaid cuts will fall on local public health services whose budgets are already strapped. Without revenue sharing to make up the difference, I have no doubt that local health services will decline in quality.

Revenue sharing is ideal for local communities because it is flexible. Communities may allocate the funds to meet their particular needs.

In addition, revenue sharing is efficient. Federal administrative costs are less than two-tenths of 1 percent of total outlays, far less than it would cost most communities to raise the needed revenue themselves.

Mr. President, I believe this is a good amendment. The cities and towns and counties of this country are depending on it. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I am deeply concerned about the ability of local units of government to finance critical services.

Over the past few years we have taken a number of steps that dramatically erode the ability of local governments to finance these important functions.

We are taking many more this year.

I am especially concerned about the termination of general revenue sharing.

Of all of the programs which assist local units of government, this reaches the most.

Over 39,000 municipalities receive funding from general revenue sharing. Many of these receive no other funds from the Federal Government.

Revenue sharing is critical if these municipalities are to continue essential services.

Instead of eliminating this program, we should be using it as a model of how to efficiently deliver services. General revenue sharing is widely regarded as a program which spends an extremely small fraction of its funds on overhead, and delivers its resources to the actual performance of municipal services.

Many of the communities that depend on revenue sharing will not be able to fill in the void created if this program is significantly cut or terminated.

A very large number of communities are currently levying taxes at the maximum level allowed under State law. In addition, any community which raises its taxes faces the likely prospect of driving revenue producing industries outside of their jurisdiction.

I will support this amendment, although I believe it is imperfect. I believe that fencing the funds for general revenue sharing makes it unlikely that these critical resources be turned over to local units of government.

While I have opposed an increase of Federal taxes, I support this amendment. If we allow revenue sharing to be terminated we are mandating either the termination of essential services such as police and fire protection or an increase in local taxes.

For this reason, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, pursuant to the budget resolution passed last year by Congress, authorization for the General Revenue Sharing Program will expire at the end of the 1986 fiscal year. We thoroughly debated this issue last year and decided that the Federal Government no longer had any revenue to share. We still have no revenue to share, and for that reason I am opposed to this amendment which would restore revenue sharing for another year.

Mr. President, when the revenue sharing program was proposed by President Nixon in 1972, it was meant to be used by local governments for capital improvements. Soon afterward, the strings were loosened to give local governments more flexibility and revenue sharing operated much like a block grant. Many local governments began to rely on this source of funds for operating expenditures in lieu of other sources of revenue. Some have become dependent on revenue sharing and naturally want the flow of money from Washington to continue.

Over the past few months, I have heard from local officials all across the country, including a number from my home State of South Carolina. Many of them have urged me to support efforts to resurrect revenue sharing. They have expressed concern that without revenue sharing money, they would have to face the difficult task of either cutting services or raising taxes. Well, that is precisely the decision confronting us here in the Congress. It is understandable that some local officials would prefer that no changes be made and that the Federal Government continue to send them money. Unfortunately, 19 cents out of every dollar the Federal Government spends is borrowed money which adds to the national debt.

Mr. President, all Americans pay for the current $2 trillion national debt our past fiscal policy has created. In fact, interest alone on that debt has become by far the fastest growing part of the Federal budget. It currently takes the personal income taxes of all Americans who live west of the Mississippi River just to pay the interest on the debt. That is correct, just to pay the interest. Most disturbing to me is that the tax dollars that go to pay the interest on our debt do not enforce one criminal statute, help the needy or provide for the national defense.

Really, Mr. President, the money we spend on interest is the ultimate waste of taxpayer dollars. It is not fair to our children and grandchildren for us to ignore the current fiscal crisis. We must confront the problem and make the difficult decisions necessary to ensure the continued viability of our system of Government.

Mr. President, given the financial condition of our Federal Government, I cannot support the continuation of general revenue sharing. Thus, I intend to vote against the pending amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment, which would restore full funding to the General Revenue Sharing Program.

Continuing this assistance to local communities is extremely important to local communities throughout the country. In my State of West Virginia, it is absolutely imperative: If revenue sharing payments are eliminated or sharply reduced, most localities will be forced to slash essential public services.

To give a few examples, in McDowell County—one of the poorest areas of the State—revenue sharing pays for part of the police force. Wood County uses the assistance to upgrade its fire department, while Mercer County relies on the program to finance a health clinic. Throughout my State, revenue sharing supports public education, libraries, law enforcement, and other major functions of local government. These are clearly services that no area can readily forego.

It is frequently argued that local governments should go ahead and raise their own taxes to pay for such services rather than depending on the continuation of Federal aid. But in a State like mine, with an unemployment rate above 13 percent, the alternative of raising taxes enough to make up for the loss of revenue sharing simply is not practical. In West Virginia, local taxes would have to be raised 22 percent to generate the funds now provided by revenue sharing. Either way, we lose: Our communities cannot afford that kind of tax increase, but they also cannot afford to let public services deteriorate. Without good facilities and services at the local level, West Virginia's opportunities to attract industry and expand jobs will be greatly diminished.

The revenue sharing program has come under relentless attack from the Reagan administration—despite its push to decentralize and shift various responsibilities from Federal programs to State and local governments. Oddly, the administration does not seem to care whether these units of government have the means of financing such activities: Besides trying to end the revenue sharing program, the administration advocates repealing the deductibility of State and local taxes as well as placing new restrictions on municipalities' use of tax-exempt bonds. In combination, these proposals seem to make the job of adjusting to cutbacks in Federal assistance as difficult as possible.

In 1983, President Reagan said, "The Federal Government has never spent money more wisely than by devoting it to general revenue sharing." He was right then. He is wrong now.

Fortunately, the Senate Budget Committee refused to eliminate revenue sharing, and recommended $1.8 billion for the program in fiscal 1987. That is half the amount approved for fiscal year 1986 after funding was cut back by more than 8 percent in the appropriations process and by 4.3 percent under Gramm-Rudman. Half a program may be better than none, but is not enough. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment and restore full funding for the revenue sharing program.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of Senator MOYNIHAN and SASSER's amendment permitting the Senate Finance Committee to reauthorize the General Revenue Sharing Program for up to 3 years.

In his fiscal year 1987 budget request, the President recommended the complete elimination of the Revenue Sharing Program and, indeed, called for cancellation of the last quarterly payment for 1986.

This simply cannot be allowed. General revenue sharing allows cities and towns in rural States, like my own State of Vermont, to provide essential services without raising already high property taxes. Vermont's property tax burden is already the 15th highest in the Nation. Eliminating revenue sharing would create an even greater tax burden for Vermonters.

In fact, a recent survey of Vermont town officials found that 75 percent of the State's municipalities would be forced to both raise taxes and cut services to replace lost Revenue Sharing funds.

Nearly one-half of Vermont's towns would be forced to cut social services, at a time when demand for those services has increased by 50 percent at the local level. One-half of Vermont's cities and towns would also have to cut capital expenditures for such items as fire equipment and police cruisers.

Revenue sharing also pays for 15 percent of total local fire protection costs in Vermont and 11 percent of total local police costs.

Eliminating revenue sharing makes no sense either at a time when rural communities across the Nation are struggling to pay liability insurance premiums which have increased by 200 and 300 percent annually.

Ending revenue sharing makes no sense and it will hurt Vermont, whose towns and cities last year received $12.4 million in funds through this important program—funds which otherwise would have to be raised by increasing local property taxes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the amount of revenue sharing funds received by Vermont's towns and cities appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, let me also make clear that the Moynihan-Sasser amendment is fiscally responsible. The amendment simply directs the Senate Finance Committee to reauthorize the General Revenue-Sharing Program at a level which is commensurate with the amount of revenue that can reasonably be raised to pay for the program. In other words, this amendment will not increase the deficit.

The amendment simply gives the Finance Committee room to reauthorize revenue-sharing up to the current level of spending on the program, if the committee believes we can afford it.

Let me also emphasize that this amendment must not increase individual income taxes.

The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and virtually all of its members have stated that any revenues raised to reduce the deficit would not be derived by increasing individual taxes. I also oppose outright any increase in individual taxes to raise the necessary funds to finance this amendment and I encourage the Finance Committee to raise the needed revenues either through a minimum corporate tax or efforts to increase tax compliance.

Mr. President, more than 200 of our largest, most profitable corporations paid less in taxes last year than the average Vermont family. In fact, the Boeing Corp. and Dow Chemical received $13.6 million and $18.5 million refunds, respectively.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of corporations that pay no Federal income taxes appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Compiled by James Schwartz—the Washington Post.

Mr. LEAHY. This cannot go on. The Senate Finance Committee ought to report a minimum tax to ensure that these corporations pay their fair share of taxes. As part of the Hollings budget freeze, I was pleased to cosponsor a minimum tax that would raise $15 billion from corporations that previously avoided paying taxes. It can be done. Out of a sense of fairness, it must be done.

Finally, Mr. President, last year the Internal Revenue Service reported that up to $92 billion in revenues could be raised simply by collecting taxes owed to the Federal Government. It makes far more sense to increase efforts to collect back taxes from those who have skirted their responsibilities than raising individual taxes. I urge the Finance Committee to follow the lead that Senator KERRY and I took in offering a successful amendment to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings calling for an annual report on the progress of the Internal Revenue Service's efforts to increase tax compliance.

No American should be asked to pay a single cent more in Federal income taxes, when so much revenue remains uncollected and so many profitable corporations avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the amendment offered by the Senator from New York which would provide full funding for the general revenue sharing program, through 1989.

Mr. President, general revenue sharing has long been regarded as a vital economic tool in the fiscal and economic planning of our local governments. Since its inception in 1972, the program has proven to be an extremely successful vehicle in strengthening our local governments and maximizing their flexibility in responding to a variety of needs.

General revenue sharing returns to local control, a share of the tax base that localities have contributed. In this respect, the program recognizes the fundamental role that our local governments play in our overall economy. General revenue-sharing funds are distributed to more than 39,000 local communities and go toward providing a variety of services such as police and fire protection, education, health, and sanitation. These services in turn result in positive commercial development, meaningful job training and creation as well as critically necessary human services. There is little doubt that these indispensable services will suffer if general revenue sharing is eliminated.

Mr. President, I am fully cognizant of the severity of our current Federal budget deficit and the serious threat it poses to our economy and our future. I do not believe, however, that elimination of or providing less than full funding for the general revenue sharing program is either a fair or a reasonable approach to addressing this problem.

We are witnessing a massive disinvestment by the Federal Government in our cities and towns. Since 1981, Federal aid to local governments has been cut by almost 40 percent. This disinvestment has meant reduced funding for other essential community programs such as the Community Development Block Grant Program [CDBG]; the Urban Development Block Grant Program [UDBG]; and the Community Services Block Grant Program [CSBG]; as well as fewer resources for housing, education, the environment and transportation. The fact that these reductions in aid to our local governments are occurring as our military budget grows by leaps and bounds, makes the disinvestment that much more unconscionable.

In Massachusetts, the reduction or elimination of general revenue-sharing funds will be particularly hard felt due to the existence of proposition 2½. This law constrains local communities in their ability to set new tax rates and thereby offset the losses that will ensue in the absence of general revenue-sharing funds.

Throughout the course of its existence, the General revenue sharing program has enjoyed bipartisan support from both Chambers of Congress. The program has proven itself successful in achieving the goals set forth when the program was established. I reiterate my unqualified support for the general revenue sharing program in general as well as for the amendment under consideration today.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I strongly support general revenue sharing and I am pleased to join my colleagues in sponsoring this amendment, which seeks to continue full funding for general revenue sharing through fiscal year 1989.

The general revenue sharing Program provides assistance to America's 39,000 general purpose local government units. This program has enjoyed strong bipartisan support. It was proposed by a Republican President and enacted by a Democratic Congress in 1972. Three times—in 1976, 1980, and 1983—this program has been extended and amended with strong bipartisan support. And through such actions, the program has been fine tuned and has become more responsive to the needs of local governments. Funds have been increasingly targeted to local units of government. States have been provided greater flexibility in developing formulas for allocating funds to local governments. And provisions have been included which recognize the special needs of those localities with severe economic dislocation.

Last year, when confronted with the President's fiscal year 1986 budget recommendation that the program be terminated, the 99th Congress instead chose to reaffirm its commitment to this program by appropriating $4.185 billion for fiscal year 1986.

But despite general revenue sharing's history of deep bipartisan support, the President's fiscal year 1987 budget once again proposed to strike a death knell for the program: It sought to terminate the program upon expiration of its authorization in 1986. It also requested a rescission of $760 million of the program's fiscal year 1986 post-Gramm-Rudman appropriation.

The budget resolution now before us, proposes a solution but it is only a halfway measure. It would accommodate reauthorization of the program for 1 year and fiscal year 1987 funding of $1.8 billion. But I am convinced that the predicaments of many of our local governments dictate that this is not enough. I believe we need full funding of general revenue sharing.

Mr. President, throughout this Nation, millions of Americans and thousands of local communities are in serious economic trouble. Their needs are genuine and highly visible. Already, 16 States have enacted cuts in their fiscal year 1986 budgets and 7 States have deferred fiscal year 1986 expenditures to later years.

Where are these communities and who are these people? They are located throughout those States with economies that are highly dependent on the gas and oil industries and coal and steel. They are found in the bayous of Louisiana, and the fields of east Texas and Oklahoma; they are cities and townships and villages throughout the States of Alaska and Colorado. And the farm belt is full of distressed communities populated by farmers facing unmanageable debts and unemployed farm workers.

And there are other types of communities and people who are in deep economic trouble, but whose needs are increasingly ignored by this administration. These are the States and communities and families who have failed to reap the economic fruits of the national economic recovery of the past 3 years. They are the victims of deep economic dislocations associated with industrial and technological change. They are ex-employees of a town's closed factories. They are the long-term unemployed. They are the never-employed young men and women.

I know these communities and people, because my State of West Virginia contains many of them. West Virginia has an unemployment rate of over 13 percent—that is almost twice the national rate.

In fiscal year 1985, West Virginia received $44.9 million in general revenue sharing funds. Under the proposal made by the Senate Budget Committee, West Virginia's fiscal year 1987 funding would be reduced to an estimated $18 million. This represents a cut of nearly 60 percent. Most other States will experience even higher percentage cuts.

Due to the State's economic ills, West Virginia counties and municipalities would be dramatically affected by such a funding cut. The "Federal funds information for States" service, reports that in West Virginia during fiscal year 1984, general revenue sharing funds constituted 7 percent of the expenditures of counties and 5.5 percent of the expenditures of municipalities. Indeed, in some smaller West Virginia counties, general revenue sharing represents nearly 30 percent of expenditures.

West Virginia is not alone in its need for general revenue sharing. There are many other States where fiscal year 1984 general revenue sharing funding represented more than 5 percent of county, municipal, or township expenditures. Among such States are Arkansas, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, and Vermont. I might add that 10 of these States along with 22 others project fiscal year 1986 budget balances equal to less than 3 percent of their expenditures.

A drastic reduction in funding for revenue sharing will create economic hardships for many communities across the Nation, compounding an already serious fiscal situation. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will act to help our local governments that form the foundation of this country.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise to speak in opposition to the Moynihan amendment as a Senator who has seen first hand the good work represented by general revenue sharing funds. While judge/executive of Jefferson County, KY, as much as $9 million or 10 percent of the county budget was funded by revenue sharing. My colleagues have spoken eloquently today about how that money is used around the country. And I am pleased to report that the funds have always been allocated for beneficial initiatives in Jefferson County as well. Revenue-sharing funds have contributed to the maintenance of roads, the construction of drainage projects, and for police and fire protection—all good and worthy efforts.

But, Mr. President, today's debate should have very little to do with whether or not the money is being well spent—it is, and no one disputes that point. The issue we should be discussing is whether or not the Federal Government should foot the bill—whether or not a government that is $2 trillion in debt, with $200 billion being added annually, can or should be asked to pay for local services. Or whether, as the Moynihan amendment requires, we should ask our constituents to pay higher taxes—to send a greater portion of their income to Washington.

Mr. President, I cannot support the Moynihan amendment because I do not believe that Kentuckians want the Federal Government to raise their taxes yet another time to pay for a program that is most efficiently funded at the local level. That is not to say that there is not a great deal of talk about a tax increase on Capitol Hill. Not only is there talk, but the discussion invariably turns to excise taxes. I have raised objections to these regressive taxes—which hurt Kentucky disproportionally—in the context of tax reform and I will continue to do so in the context of our budget debate. The reality is that any vote which adds spending to the budget by an arbitrary tax increase, increases the pressure to realize that tax increase by further expanding excise taxes.

Mr. President, the budget debate that faces us will not be easy. There are many difficult decisions yet to be made. I, for one, am not ready to throw in the towel on trying to make the Federal bureaucracy more efficient, rather than give in to the tax and spend mentality held by some in this institution, which has created the budget environment in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I propose to maintain full funding—$4.6 billion—for the general revenue sharing program.

Two conditions must be met before the budget resolution would be adjusted to allow for such funding of general revenue sharing. First, the program must be reauthorized; second, additional revenues must be found to cover the costs of the program at the reauthorized level.

The idea of giving local government funds to use them as they best see fit is not new. In fact, the origins of Federal revenue sharing can be traced to Andrew Jackson's administration, which had collected a large Federal surplus from customs receipts and the sale of public lands. The Surplus Distribution Act of 1836 provided that all money in the U.S. Treasury on January 1, 1837, with the exception of $5 million, was to be deposited with the States in proportion to their respective representation in the Senate and the House.

The deposits were made in four quarterly installments; and in return, the States pledged to keep and repay the money as might be required by the Secretary of the Treasury. Of the $37 million available for distribution, only $28 million was actually deposited with the States. Although the transfer of funds was to be temporary and subject to repayment, it was—in actuality—an outright grant, as none of the money was ever requested to be returned.

In this century, congressional attempts to secure Federal tax sharing legislation began in 1949, when, early that year, Representative Errett P. Scrivner (R-Kansas) introduced a bill to authorize the collectors of Internal Revenue to transfer to each State treasury, on a quarterly basis, 1 percent of Federal individual and corporate income taxes collected within the State. Such shared revenues were to be used by the States for "educational purposes only without any Federal direction, control, or interference." Congress failed, however, to take action on this legislation.

The current program has roots tracing back 20 years when, in 1964, I drafted the plank in the Democratic Party Platform calling for revenue sharing with State and local governments. On that occasion, I wrote:

> Consideration should be given to the development of fiscal policies which would provide revenue sources to hard-pressed State and local governments to assist them with their responsibilities.

At that time, we were faced with an elementary fact: The progressive basis of our income tax system caused the revenues of the Federal Government to grow faster than those of State and local governments. This trend threatened the fundamental nature of our federal system, for as money flowed to Washington, so did power.

President Johnson did appoint a task force to study the merits of Federal revenue sharing, but the idea was shelved due to the acceleration of the Vietnam war in 1965 and the attendant increase in defense outlays.

But the idea did not disappear. In 1969, as Assistant to the President for Urban Affairs, I drew up the program and drafted the 1969 Presidential message calling for revenue sharing. And on October 20, 1972, President Nixon signed into law the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act. At the time, this legislation was seen as a way of halting—or even reversing—the trend toward ever-increasing concentrations of power in Washington at the expense of State and local prerogatives.

Since the creation of the program and its subsequent reauthorizations in 1976, 1980, and 1983, general revenue sharing has provided more than $74 billion in assistance to State and local governments. Today it continues to embody the fundamental concept of maximizing local control over fiscal decisions. The original program has been reformed some, to ensure that the funds would be sent to the governments which most need them. When first established, State governments as well as localities received revenue sharing funds. In 1980, this was changed to reflect the view that State governments were in better financial shape than the Federal Government.

Today, general revenue sharing continues to provide needed funds to cities and towns throughout the country on the basis of fiscal need and capacity. More than 39,000 units of Government are eligible for the program, including 3,049 counties nationwide. Jurisdictions with populations of less than 10,000, most of which receive no other assistance from the Federal Government, account for more than 85 percent of the program's recipients. Revenue sharing is the only form of Federal assistance received by more than 30,000 local governments.

These communities need the general revenue sharing program. Sixty-two percent of all revenue sharing funds goes to jurisdictions with per capita incomes below the national average. Fully 93 percent goes to those with per capita incomes below 125 percent of the national average.

And these funds are used well. Almost half pay for police, fire, schools, and hospitals. They are also used to help maintain roads, highways, and bridges and to build jails.

Less than 0.2 percent of the funds are used for administrative costs, making the program one of the most efficient the Government has ever established.

What would happen if this program were eliminated?

For many local governments, taxes would have to be increased more than 30 percent to compensate for the loss of general revenue sharing. The national impact of eliminating the program would on average be a 9.2-percent increase in local property taxes. If the loss were made up through local service cuts, these would result in reductions in force nationally of 18,494 police officers, 18,152 fire officers, 18,152 teachers, 20,220 human service workers, and 26,065 street maintenance workers.

In my own State of New York, the city of Syracuse, which uses its general revenue sharing funds for fire department salaries, would have to increase property taxes $4.48 per $1,000 of assessed value to compensate for the GRS fund losses.

Albany, which also pays its firemen with general revenue sharing funds, would have to increase property taxes $4.91 per $1,000 if the program were eliminated.

The loss of GRS funding for the city of Oneonta would translate into an increase of 9.5 percent in the local property tax levy.

For the village of Saugerties, the elimination of general revenue sharing would result in a 22.6-percent increase in the town's general tax.

Mr. President, the list goes on and on, but at this point, because it is best said in their own words, I ask unanimous consent that letters from the following officials be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time: Lucille Pattison, Dutchess County executive; Arthur LeFevre, supervisor of the town of Plattsburgh; Thomas Bradley, supervisor of the town of Alexandria; Stephen Snyder, supervisor of the town of Onondaga; Thomas Whittaker, clerk of the board of supervisors, County of Chenango; Robert Densberger, Chemung County executive; David Miller, mayor of the city of Tonawanda; and Lucien Morin, Monroe County executive.

What most distresses me about the possible elimination of the general revenue sharing program is that today our local governments are in no position to make up for the loss of GRS funding.

City governments most certainly are not. A recent study by the Joint Economic Committee found that, despite the strong economic recovery, 53 percent of cities surveyed had an actual current operating deficit in 1983—a 13-percent rise over 1982.

Another study, published in the March/April 1985 New England Economic Review, examined the ability of 86 central cities to raise revenues from their own sources from 1970 to 1982: It reported that almost 30 percent of large central cities experienced a decline in fiscal capacity during the 1970's. It concluded: "Many U.S. cities will find it increasingly difficult to raise enough locally generated tax revenue to offset declines in inflation-adjusted Federal or State aid or growing public service demands."

Nor are county governments in a position to make up the difference. Since 1981, county governments have had to raise taxes to compensate for reductions in Federal funding. The share of county government revenue coming from local sources rose by 4.2 percent from fiscal years 1981 to 1984, while the Federal and State portions each fell by approximately 2 percent. Moreover, county property tax collections increased 8.8 percent in 1984 over 1983. Elimination of GRS would necessitate more tax increases.

Finally, State governments are in no position to make up for the elimination of general revenue sharing. The alleged State surpluses are illusory: More than 80 percent of the surpluses consist of social insurance funds. Some States do hold budgetary surpluses, but in fiscal year 1986, nearly 50 percent of these are held by four States—California, Minnesota, Illinois, and Wisconsin. And though 15 States may propose tax cuts in fiscal year 1986, 23 others are expected to raise taxes.

General revenue sharing is a vital program for our localities. Its loss will most surely result in either the elimination of vital services to our citizens or increased local taxes.

We must not let this program end, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DUTCHESS COUNTY EXECUTIVE,
Poughkeepsie, N.Y., February 24, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I call to your attention again my deep concern about the proposed elimination of the general revenue sharing program.

This program has been exceedingly valuable to Dutchess County. As you can see by the attached list of GRS expenditures for 1984, 1985, and this fiscal year, our revenue sharing is not spent frivolously. Should revenue sharing be eliminated there will be a resulting property tax increase for our County residents.

I urge you to co-author a GRS reauthorization bill and to work actively for its passage.

Sincerely,

LUCILLE P. PATTISON,
County Executive.

TOWN OF PLATTSBURGH,
Plattsburgh, NY, March 17, 1986.

Senator DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Russell Building, Washington, DC.

Re: Federal general revenue sharing funds, town of Plattsburgh.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The Town of Plattsburgh, a small municipal government (16,000 plus population) in upstate New York on the shores of Lake Champlain, wishes to express to you and other members of the Federal and State Government that the Town of Plattsburgh relies on Federal Revenue Sharing Funds to provide basic governmental services in the areas of recreation, highway construction and repair, basic library services, sanitary land fill closure program and other community services. Federal Revenue Sharing has been a tremendous asset to small governments throughout our country.

The proposal for the Administration to rescind the general revenue sharing payments during the final quarter of fiscal year 1986 and to terminate the Federal Revenue Sharing Program for fiscal year 1987 will create a severe increase in local taxes to Town residents in order to continue to provide these basic services in the Town of Plattsburgh.

The Town Board and I strongly urge you and your fellow legislators to support and continue the Federal Revenue Sharing Program. We urge you to continue the procedures that you have taken in support of the Federal Revenue Sharing Program payments to all local municipalities. Federal Revenue Sharing payments assist local government in providing the very important and essential forms of government service as mentioned above including police, fire, schools, hospital, and many other programs provided by other levels of local government with these funds.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR L. LEFEVRE,
Supervisor
Town of Plattsburgh.

TOWN OF ALEXANDRIA,
COUNTY OF JEFFERSON,
Alexandria Bay, NY, April 17, 1986.

Senator DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The Town of Alexandria is very concerned about the impending loss of the Federal Revenue Sharing Program. The loss of Revenue Sharing will have a devastating effect on our taxpayers.

Being a town in northern New York with a high seasonal unemployment rate and a large number of retired and senior citizens, the impact of the loss of Revenue Sharing on real property taxes will be significant. The Town is worried about where these citizens will be able to find the money to pay the extra taxes.

The Revenue Sharing Program in our community is used to help provide services such as our sanitary landfill, liability insurance, highway garage, and library among others. If the Federal Revenue Sharing Program is ended t ıe Town of Alexandria will be faced with a decision of cutting back services to the taxpayers, or the raising of property taxes. This would be a no win situation for everyone concerned.

The Board members of the Town of Alexandria would like to urge you to continue the Federal Revenue Sharing Program. It is a necessary and needed program not only for our community, but for every community in the state.

Thanking you in advance for your cooperation.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS J. BRADLEY,
Supervisor.

TOWN OF ONONDAGA,
Syracuse, NY, March 20, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: As Supervisor for the Town of Onondaga, I am writing to express my concern over the possible elimination of the General Revenue Sharing Program.

Over the past several years the Town of Onondaga has greatly benefitted from these funds. General Revenue Sharing Funds have been used for various projects including a new highway garage; funds to improve library services; and several energy conservation projects to enhance the efficiency of Town Hall.

Without Revenue Sharing Funds, the increase in local taxes would severely undermine the quality of life in our town. On behalf of the citizens of the Town of Onondaga, I urge your support for the retention of federal assistance through the General Revenue Sharing Program.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Very truly yours,

STEPHEN SNYDER,
Supervisor.

COUNTY OF CHENANGO,
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
Norwich, NY, January 16, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I am herewith enclosing a certified copy of Resolution #12-86 entitled, "Supporting Enactment of U.S. Senate Bill S1964, An Act To Extend The Revenue Sharing Program For Local Governments Through The Fiscal Year 1988," adopted by the Chenango County Board of Supervisors on January 13, 1986.

Your assistance in implementing the intent of this resolution will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS M. WHITTAKER,
Clerk, Board of Supervisors.

RESOLUTION NO. 12-86

Finance Committee offered the following and moved its adoption:

Whereas, the General Revenue Sharing Program is scheduled for termination as of September 30, 1986, and

Whereas, these funds have been used to support police departments, and schools, as well as the maintenance of bridges and highways, and

Whereas, the termination of this program would result in either significant decreases in essential local services or a substantial increase in local taxes to continue these services.

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chenango County Board of Supervisors supports #S1964, which extends the General Revenue Sharing Program, and be it further Resolved. That certified copies of this resolution be sent to President Reagan, Senators D'Amato and Moynihan, House Representative Boehlert, NYSAC, NACO and the Supervisors' and County Legislators' Association.

CHEMUNG COUNTY,
Elmira, NY, March 26, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senator,
Dirksen Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I am writing on behalf of Chemung County to urge your continued support for the maintenance of the General Revenue Sharing Program.

This program has been targeted for elimination by the Reagan Administration in their efforts to balance the budget. While we applaud these efforts to control the national debt, we believe that in eliminating a program such as this, it will merely be shifting that debt from a national level to a local level and, therefore; having no real benefit to the citizens of localities like Chemung County.

Last year our county received $1,115,419 from this program. We used these monies to staff road patrols for our Sheriff's department, fund local portions of mandated welfare programs, help pay for a portion of our debt service, and pay for a portion of our employee fringe benefits. Chemung County, as well as other counties in the Southern Tier, is just beginning to show signs of recovery and depends on these monies. The elimination of this program would result in either a 12% tax hike, or reduction/depletion of very needed services to the people of Chemung County. Either one of these options would be devastating to our efforts to rejuvenate local economies.

In closing, we appreciate your past efforts in this area and urge you to continue the fight to maintain this still needed program.

Sincerely,

ROBERT G. DENSBERGER,
Chemung County Executive.

CITY OF TONAWANDA,
Tonawanda, NY, March 19, 1986.

Senator DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I am writing in my capacity as Mayor of the City of Tonawanda, New York, to express my opposition to the proposed elimination of the General Revenue Sharing Program. I urge you to support legislation which would extend this program beyond September 30, 1986, when it is scheduled to expire.

The City's ability to generate revenue is limited, due to the fact that the City of Tonawanda remains in an economic slump and recently suffered two plant closings. This makes a property tax increase that would be required to offset the loss of revenue very difficult.

As Mayor, I can assure you that Federal Revenue Sharing Dollars are much needed, well spent and indispensible to the City of Tonawanda. While I am fully aware of the need to reduce the Federal Budget deficit, it is my firm conviction that efforts to do so should not come unfairly at the expense of the City of Tonawanda and the thousands of cities and towns like it.

In conclusion, once again, I strongly urge you to lend your support to preserve this vital form of Federal Assistance to our local governments.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID L. MILLER,
Mayor.

COUNTY OF MONROE,
Rochester, NY, January 13, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senator,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: As Congress debates the continuance or termination of the Federal Revenue Sharing Program, I feel it important for you to know how significant this program is for local governments throughout New York State and the country.

As Monroe County Executive, I strongly urge you to support the continuance of this most vital program beyond Federal Fiscal Year 1986-87. The elimination of this program will create a fiscal nightmare for this community and local governments across the country.

General Revenue Sharing provides a source of revenue free of federal red tape and bureaucracy, which is used to provide essential local government services. It is the one program under local control which can be used by communities to fill the gaps left by federal budget cuts. According to the National Association of Counties' survey pertaining to this program, in 98% of mid-size counties, General Revenue Sharing pays for services to the poor and disadvantaged; in 83% of larger counties, it is providing needed health care services; in over one-half of all counties, General Revenue Sharing is used to meet the mandates imposed by state and federal governments; and in one-quarter of all counties, General Revenue Sharing accounts for more than 10% of the entire county budget.

In Monroe County, approximately 64% of our total 1986 budget of $501 million will be used for mandated programs. Over the years, the county government has emerged as the primary unit of local government. Accordingly, the county has assumed increasing responsibility for the delivery of essential services benefiting the entire community. Throughout this period of increasing costs, Monroe County has used federal Revenue Sharing funds exclusively for social services programs. If Revenue Sharing funds are not continued, Monroe County will be faced with a loss of $4.4 million. This can only be accommodated with a tax increase, which obviously will place an additional financial burden on the residents of our community. Any decision to either raise county property taxes or reduce programs for the needy and disadvantaged will have a profound negative effect on this community.

The concept behind the Revenue Sharing Program is a fundamental premise of federalism. This program is not revenue sharing, but, rather, tax base sharing designed to assist local governments in carrying out national policy objectives.

Again, on behalf of the residents of Monroe County, and those taxpayers throughout the state and nation, I strongly urge you to support the continuance of this most vital program.

Sincerely,

LUCIEN A. MORIN,
County Executive.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Mexico have the floor at the moment?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do not, but I had been waiting for Senators DECONCINI and ABDNOR to present an amendment. I understand that Senator ABDNOR is here now.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Senator DECONCINI will not be able to come.

Under the circumstances I ask unanimous consent that the Moynihan amendment be temporarily set aside in order that I may offer an amendment with the understanding that the vote in connection with my amendment would not occur until the vote had occurred with respect to the Moynihan amendment in the event there is such a vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, we have no unanimous-consent agreement as to the time that we would vote on the underlying amendment. So long as it is understood that when the manager or the majority leader is ready, no sooner than 2:15 p.m., will set the Senator's amendment aside and proceed to vote on the underlying Moynihan amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is this amendment going to be in the second degree, too?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. No.

Mr. FORD. That is going to be set aside and the revenue-sharing amendment will not be disturbed.

Mr. METZENBAUM. That is correct.

Mr. FORD. I have no objection.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand we have a message from the President.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President was delivered by Ms. Sara Currence Emery, Special Assistant to the White House Executive Clerk.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me 1 minute?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thought I had the floor, but I yield the floor to my colleague, the distinguished minority leader, without losing my right to the floor when he concludes his remarks.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Florida, and the Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, the message from the President that has just been presented to the Senate marks the first time in the history of the Senate that a woman has delivered such a message from the White House. I further note that the messenger, Sara Currence Emery, who is the first woman special assistant to the Executive Clerk of the White House was born and raised in Marlinton, WV. Marlinton is in beautiful Pocahontas County, which also contains most of the Cranberry Wilderness Area.

Sara Currence Emery is a graduate of West Virginia University. She came to Washington, DC, to work at the White House, where she has been employed for the last 17 years.

I wish Sara all the best in her new responsibilities.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the amendment which I and Senator SARBANES have introduced today provides for moderate increases in four key programs which meet the health and nutrition needs of America's most vulnerable children.

Our amendment provides $75 million for the WIC Program; $75 million for the Maternal and Child Health Program; $25 million for immunizations; and $25 million for community health centers. The offset is from General Revenues. Together, these programs form the front line in the battle against infant mortality, low birthweight, and childhood disease.

This child health initiative is an investment—it is not a cost, it is an investment of $200 million over the next 3 years to save anywhere from $600 million to a billion dollars in the future.

It represents a cost-effective expenditure on programs with a proven track record of delivering value for the Federal dollar.

Mr. President, it is a scandal that today there are over 13 million American children living below the poverty line; that one-third of this Nation's children lack adequate health insurance; that over half of all black preschool children are not immunized against childhood diseases; that 1 in 10 poor children under the age of 2 does not see a physician even once during an entire year.

Mr. President, ours is a nation where technological genius abounds, yet ours is also a nation where infant mortality rates for black infants in Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, and so many other cities and communities throughout the Nation exceed those in Cuba, Jamacia, Puerto Rico, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, and Poland.

As my colleague, Senator CHILES, recently pointed out, we still have nearly 10 white babies, close to 20 black babies, and 17 other nonwhite babies die for every 1,000 who are born. The GAP between black and white infant mortality has increased to the worst point in over 40 years.

And what has been our response? The Maternal and Child Health Program has been cut over 20 percent in real terms since 1981. Mr. President, this is a program which saves anywhere from $3 to $11 in the costs of medical care after birth and of institutional care for some of the babies who would have been born handicapped.

Community health centers, which provide critical prenatal and children's health services, have been frozen in real terms over the same period.

On January 10, the U.S. Department of Agriculture released a comprehensive study on the WIC Program. The report documents the significant positive impact this feeding program has had on maternal and child health in America. Yet, currently, the WIC Program serves less than 40 percent of the women, infants, and children who are eligible.

Mr. President, each dollar spent to immunize a child against measles saves over $7 in reduced illness and hospitalization costs, according to the Centers for Disease Control. Yet, over half of all black preschool children are inadequately immunized against childhood diseases, and reports from around the Nation indicate that anywhere from 65 to 80 percent of school-aged children are suffering from one or more untreated health conditions. It is anyone's guess how many of these conditions could have been prevented with an adequate Immunization Program.

The Current Immunization Program contains enough funds to finance a full series of immunizations—including pertussis, tetanus, diphtheria, measles, mumps, rubella, polio, and meningitis—for about 1 million children each year. Yet there are 21.3 million children in the United States below age 6. Nearly 1 in 5—about 5 million—is poor.

Mr. President, my amendment provides an additional $25 million for the Childhood Immunization Program in order to purchase a complete immunization series for an additional one-half million infants, toddlers, and preschoolers.

It also contains an additional $75 million for WIC which will ensure food supplements for an additional 156,250 pregnant women and their infants and young children.

In providing $75 million for maternal and child health as well as $25 million for community health centers, the amendment ensures that thousands of medically underserved pregnant women, infants, and school-aged children will receive badly needed health care services.

Mr. President, I am sure we will hear from those who say these are good programs but we just cannot afford to increase them. I believe we can. I believe we cannot afford not to increase them. Our Tax Code is so riddled with corporate loopholes, that a single year's tax refund for the AT&T Co. could finance the entire cost of this amendment with $81 million to spare. (AT&T earned $1.9 billion in 1984, paid no Federal income taxes, and yet received a refund of $281 million).

I could stand on the floor and recite instance after instance after instance of large corporations in this country, many of whom are major defense contractors, making hundreds of millions and billions of dollars and receiving tax refunds. Why can we not address ourselves to that issue and why can we consider that we cannot afford to take care of the children in this country?

Over a 4-year period, two of this Nation's biggest defense contractors, General Dynamics and General Electric, earned over $11 billion in profits, paid no Federal income taxes, and received a tax refund of $200 million. If they just paid no taxes over this period, but we kept the refund, we would have enough money to pay for this amendment.

I ask the question, Can we afford to spend $150 million a year on military bands and refuse to spend an extra $200 million on crucial children's health programs?

Mr. President, I think not.

This amendment is modest—$145 million in outlays in fiscal year 1987, $42 million in fiscal year 1988, and $10 million in fiscal year 1989.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays, with the distinct understanding that I had previously offered a unanimous-consent request that the yeas and nays, when ordered, would come after the Moynihan amendment had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICKLES). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield a couple of minutes to me?

Mr. METZENBAUM. There is no time limit.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I will just take a few moments to say that I strongly and heartily support the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. It makes sense that he is trying to increase the funding for these programs because the benefit/cost ratios of those programs range anywhere from 15-to-1 to 5-to-1.

I have said many times in the past 10 years, as we have cut Federal funding for education from 12 percent of all the funds for education down to 6.7 percent, that we are going to wind up paying a high price for these cuts. You can argue philosophically and ideologically that the local school districts ought to be raising this money or that the States ought to be raising the money, but if the United States allows Federal funding for education in this country to be whittled away, we may wind up with one or two generations where the illiteracy rate climbs dramatically.

The only reason in the world the Federal Government ever gets involved in education or health care or anything else is because we are a union of States and we have concerns about all the people in the country, not just those who can afford good education and good health care for their people.

I was visiting with a fellow the other day who said something about, "Let the States and the local school districts decide how much they want to spend on schools."

That is fine if you just look at education spending or health care spending in a vacuum. But there is a considerable difference between how much money the people of Scarsdale can afford and how much the people of South Bronx can affort for the education of their children. Now that is a slightly convoluted example of what we are talking about; that is, the question of whether some poeple are going to get education or health care and others are not. One of the real problems we have in this country is we have been moving toward a dual health care system: One for those that can afford it and one for those who cannot.

This is not a big amendment considering the way we spend money around here. The kind of money the Senator from Ohio is talking about would last the Pentagon about 15 minutes. And yet there is a real danger in this country that we are going to allow the immunization levels of our children to drop back. We are now 16th among all the nations of the world in infant mortality. The United States of America, the most powerful rich nation on Earth, 16th in infant mortality.

And the Maternal and Child Health Care Program is a program that is crucial in every State. Every State has some latitude as to how they are going to use MCH money. But in my State we use it to make sure that pregnant women get a proper diet and good prenatal medical care so that they have healthy babies.

Let me give you an illustration. Two hundred low-weight babies will cost the U.S. Government more money over the next 50 years than this entire amendment will cost. You have heard me preach this sermon on immunizations 100 times in the 11 years I have been here. And you all know that my wife was active in immunizing all the children of my State when I was Governor, and she was responsible for immunizing all of the children of the country after I came to the Senate. But we spent less money in 2 years to raise the immunization levels of our State's children from 78 percent to 96 percent than it would have cost to institutionalize one rubella syndrome child for a lifetime.

So I feel stronger about the funding for the immunization program that is incorporated into this amendment than I do the other three items. But they are all important. I spoke to the Arkansas Medical Society luncheon last Friday, a week ago tomorrow. And I talked about preventive health. And while the inflation rate for health care has been declining—down to a 9.3-percent increase in 1984, the lowest increase in any year since 1963—we still have not really dealt with the one thing that would do more to cut health care costs in this country than anything else; that is, preventive health.

The Census Bureau and the National Institutes of Health tell us that nutrition is extremely important to health, and yet we do not have a national nutritional counseling service. Hubert Humphrey used to stand at this desk right here in front of me, and make the speech I heard him make many times in the short time I was privileged to serve with him—a speech about how we talk about health insurance in this country, that we really ought to change the name of it so it would be more appropriate, and call it sick insurance because none of it is any good unless you get sick.

The Ford Motor Co. decided several years ago to implement an experimental program for its own employees in an attempt to cut down the cost of health care. Over a 3- or 4-year period they did a lot of things. The principal one was that everybody over 40 years of age who worked for them had to have a physical examination every year. They found that they saved themselves millions of dollars in health care costs with that requirement.

Every one of the items listed in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio comes under the category of preventive health—the cheapest health care dollar we spend. The Senator from Mississippi, the senior Senator from Mississippi, has always helped on Maternal and Child Health Care and WIC Programs because Mississippi has a demonstrated benefit/cost ratio from the maternal health care programs of $10 saved for every dollar we spend.

I am not going to vote for every amendment that comes up here. A lot of them are going to be meritorious, laudable, and I do not want to vote against them. But I can tell you there will not be one single amendment offered here, with the possible exception of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts dealing with Medicare, there is not going to be an amendment offered here that goes right to the heart of health care in this country like this amendment does. If we pass this amendment, we can spend $200 million and possibly save ourselves $2 billion a year.

We had an outbreak of measles this year on the campus of the University of Arkansas, and it was bad. It cost more than half a million dollars just to get that one little outbreak under control. The good news out of that was we were able to get the outbreak under control quickly. My wife accuses me of always talking about the bad news. She said it was bad that the measles outbreak occurred but there was something very good and very positive about it also. Only one age group—college age students—got the measles, apparently because they had gotten defective vaccines back in the early 1960's. The good news was that because we had immunized all the people after that time with effective vaccine, the outbreak did not spread beyond that particular age group.

But I can tell you that it is easy to assume that childhood diseases have been conquered once and for all, but they have not. You must stay on top of them year in and year out. You must do followup if the immunization program is to be effective and provide the cost/benefit ratios we want.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the people in this body will support this amendment. I know it is $200 million. I know the budgetary constraints we are operating under. But I can tell you one thing: Gramm-Rudman will be a lot tougher to deal with 3, 4 years down the pike if we start shortchanging programs like this.

Mr. President, unless somebody else wishes the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let us assume as Senators that whatever the distinguished Senator from Ohio has said about the condition of things out in our country relevant to the groups we are helping in these programs is true. Let us also assume that in the areas that the Senator from Arkansas spoke of there are some problems. I hope everyone understands in the Budget Committee, which was bipartisan, is we did not cut these programs. Funding for discretionary health in this budget that is before us is $74 million above the 1986 funding level. The WIC Program is already $52 million above the 1986 level. In January there were 3,323,588 women and infant children participating in this program.

For a time, 2 years ago, we could not even get people on fast enough. The States were not even able to get on the people that we were giving the money for. That is still the case in a few States, but over 3 million are now being taken care of. The budget resolution contains $52 million above the 1986 level for the WIC Program.

The Senate Budget Committee reported out by a bipartisan rate contains $300 million for the years 1987 through 1989 in higher Medicaid spending for infant mortality initiatives. In fact, the distinguished Senator from Florida, Senator CHILES, has already in fact introduced legislation that would address the high infant mortality rates. Clearly, there is sufficient money in this budget resolution for the appropriators to take additional steps to deal with this problem.

This amendment, clear and simple, says, "We have to tax the people $200 million more because the amendment says we have to add more to programs that we have already added to."

It is hard for the Senator from New Mexico to come down here when our country, like most countries in the world, has some health problems. It is doubly hard when they are women, infants, and children.

I submit that we are doing a good job. I submit that the Senate Budget Committee was well aware that while we cut other programs, while we ordered reforms of other programs, these programs ought to increase.

I had a suspicion about what would happen this year in spite of the need for fiscal restraint. We made a decision, and made a bipartisan agreement in committee. We added where some Democrats thought we ought to add. We added where some Republicans thought we should; and we reached an agreement, I had a suspicion that when programs like these, a Senator would come to the floor and say that the problems are still not solved out there and we need more money.

I suspected that the Gramm-Rudman rules would not have stopped any of that, that it would be here just as it is all the time. I imagine that even if we had added $200 or $300 million, people would come to the floor and ask for more money. They would talk to us and, in a sense, talk to their constituents, to make a point that they support higher funding because the problem is still there.

Our Government spends $119 billion for health care. When you look out across the land there is $119 billion for health care. Any of us, given 24 hours' notice, can get somebody with statistics, somebody with numbers, somebody with ideas, to say, "We still have people who either cannot afford health care, who are still ill, who are not able to get this, that, and the other." We still have problems. The $119 billion ought to be $140 billion. Someone may offer an amendment that we ought to spend another $30 billion or $40 billion. Every time we have this kind of problem in the budget and in the appropriations process there is no question that an argument can be made and a difficult vote can be put before the Senate. Who wants to be against more money for these kinds of problems.

We do not have all the money in the world. We have tried our best to prioritize. We have increased where it is necessary and where absolutely you could not get by with less. In these programs we did not freeze or cut even with a $180 billion deficit. We increased funds for these programs.

I told the Senate how much the Federal Government spends for health care, how much the American people pay. Our estimate is $460 billion and the Federal Government pays about 26 percent of that.

Is it really credible that we can solve these problems that are discussed by the proponents with $200 million. Look at these statistics about health deficiencies in our country. Are we really going to solve them with $200 million, when we are already spending $460 billion? This amendment would add about two-tenths of 1 percent to the health functions for Federal expenditures, four one-hundredths of 1 percent to the expenditures made in behalf of health care across the country.

I remind my fellow Senators that these are all appropriated accounts. This does not mean that we are going to add anything more to these accounts. It merely means we are adding $200 million more to the discretionary programs, $200 million more in taxes on the American people. The assumption being made is that these funds would be specifically and adroitly targeted to the problems we are discussing here today.

I do not know when, if ever, enough will be enough. It seems to me that if this amount of money is as important for these programs as the proponents say, at the least they could say, "Out of the $1 trillion budget there must be $200 million we can find someplace and apply it to these programs. At least, we want to express the sense of the Senate today and hope the appropriators would follow it." They have not said that. We have to add $200 million more on the tax side, which already has $19 billion in new taxes.

I hope Senators do not think it is easy to just vote for this and add to the tax side. We did for years before the congressional budget process was started. We assumed there was no relationship between the two and we did not have to worry. At least there is an accounting now. At least we say add on $200 million in taxes.

I yield to the ranking minority member such time as he desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I have listened to the remarks of the chairman. He has made an excellent point. As we went through the process in our committee markup, there were some compromises made between the mark the chairman had and the mark we were proposing. Part of the compromise added money in these areas. We did add funds. But there is no way either he or I can argue we are spending enough for child health care. We would both like to spend more.

We recognize these programs are cost efficient. I make that argument all the time, that the dollars we spend are returned to us manyfold.

If we adopt this amendment, someone could well say we ought to be spending $500 million more. And they would be right. We should be. You can say, "When that is won, we should be spending more than that." And they would be right, because we need it.

But one of the best ways to set priorities is to get our budget in order. Look and see what we tried to do within our resources, within the problems we have writing a budget that accommodates Gramm-Rudman-Hollings without having a devastating cut across the board. I would say to the proponents of this amendment, sequester would devastate these programs. If we cannot get our budget in order, if we cannot meet those targets, that is when child health will be terribly hurt.

If you look at what we have done, in the immunization program, $65.6 million is assumed, $6 million above a freeze. That is $4.2 million above the baseline.

The amendment would bring the funding up to 90, and that, of course, would be well above the baseline in many of our programs.

If you look at the community health centers, $426 million is assumed. That is $30 million above a freeze and $8 million above the baseline.

If you look at the Maternal and Child Health Program, you see it is already funded at its current authorized level of $478 million.

So the budget resolution leaves more than enough room to make up the $20 million lost from the sequester cuts already in effect and then we fund this program up to its authorized level.

The WIC Program would also be funded—$1.612 billion being assumed, up to its authorized level. So in two of the four programs we are talking about, literally, the money cannot be spent because they are already up to the authorized level and there is nothing that we can do about this.

Argument has been made about immunization for rubella—measles. That is tremendously important. I think we ought to do everything in the world we can in that area. And I hope we will find some more money for that. But if you look at what we have been attempting to do in the resolution, we have tried to take special note of these programs. We want funds to provide for these programs without triggering sequester, and having a resolution that goes way beyond what we are able to pay for.

I hope the Senate will not adopt amendments that are going to break apart what we have attempted to do. I hope we will put together a balanced package which meets the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets, avoids sequester order, avoids the across-the-board-cut targets, and gets our House in order so that we may be able to start taking care of these programs in the way we should.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. CHILES. The time to be divided equally off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1800

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have received indication from the majority leader that he would like us to commence voting on the Moynihan amendment. It is my understanding that the amendment which is pending will be set aside until after the vote is disposed of on the underlying amendment, the Moynihan revenue-sharing amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the manager yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Surely, Mr. President.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am prepared if he is—immediately upon the completion of the vote on the Moynihan amendment, to proceed with a vote on my amendment. Would that meet with the Senator's approval?

Mr. DOMENICI. I think I had better just wait and see, Mr. President. We might even be able to announce it at the end of that vote, but let us proceed without it at this point.

Mr. President, I move to table the Moynihan amendment and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. DOMENICI. There is no time for debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his request for a second?

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not. I was going to yield for a question, but let me get my second first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York be granted 1 minute to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, is it the view of the Senator from New Mexico that we have to have a motion to table? There are those of us on both sides of the aisle who feel strongly about this issue and who also feel strongly about Senate decorum. We would like to vote up or down. Absent that, we could have 15 votes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to my friend from New York that I have to have the latitude on some to move to table, on others not. I would have moved to table yesterday, but the way the unanimous-consent request was phrased, I could not.

I assure the Senator I do not intend to have a number of votes. If tabling one shows a result, we will not do anything else.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Would the Senator hear my plea? I have very rarely asked this, but if we cannot be accommodated, there are Senators on both sides of the aisle on this legislation who would like to vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are going to vote, I say to my friend.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. A vote up or down, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment on the table. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] would vote "nay."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] is absent because of death in the family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So the motion to lay the amendment (No. 1800) on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] be added as an original cosponsor of the previous amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1801

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, Senator METZENBAUM has an amendment pending. There is time remaining in opposition. Shortly, I intend to yield back the time in opposition. I understand that he will yield back the remainder of his time.

He would add $200 million to various health programs and raise $200 million more in revenues. Our position is that in the bipartisan compromise, all the programs referred to have been increased over their current level of funding. Two of the programs have been authorized, and our bill funds them to the maximum level authorized. The amendment would fund them in excess of the authorized level.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise to support this amendment because it is a humanitarian measure, and because it is cost-effective.

The WIC Program has escaped the budget ax over the past years yet it still reaches only a minority of the low-income infants, young children, and pregnant and nursing women at nutritional risk who are eligible to receive WIC food supplements and nutrition counseling.

In spite of our support for this program, WIC is still underfunded and reaches only 3.2 million people, fewer than half of those who are eligible. Because WIC is not an entitlement program it can serve only as many poor women, infants, and children as we provide funds for. It is a fact that more than 100 counties in the United States have no WIC Program at all and many others are forced to turn away eligible mothers and babies.

Studies show that WIC and the other programs which this amendment speaks to, are cost-effective because they result in healthier children at birth.

The number of children living in poverty is on the increase, with one out of every five poor. These are very young children with nearly one out of every four children under the age of 6 living in poverty.

There are 13 million children in this country who are poor.

Poverty is costly. Children born into poverty receive less nutrition, less health care, less education, and fewer chances to succeed at becoming self sufficient.

The programs which will receive modest increases under this amendment have proven to be effective. We know that prenatal care and food supplements to pregnant women through WIC can save $3 for every $1 spent by reducing the incidents of high-risk births. Studies show that every dollar spent on a measles shot saves $7 in reduced illness and hospitalization costs.

Vermont's WIC Program provides an excellent example of the value of the program. Vermont has the highest participation rate of eligible WIC recipients in the Nation. About 45 percent of Vermont's 1981 births were to women who had participated in the WIC Program.

According to a report put out by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Vermont led the Nation in having the lowest number of infant deaths per 1,000 births for the period of 1981 through 1983. I think it is fair to suggest there is a correlation between the high WIC participation rate and the low infant mortality rate.

I have spoken for the most part about the WIC Program but the same conclusions can be made about the title V Maternal and Child Health Block Grant Program, the Community Health Centers, and the Childhood Immunization Program.

Anytime we help to improve the health and well-being of pregnant women and their unborn children, and help to keep children in good nutrition and health, we are saving untold dollars in later health costs, lost opportunities, and wasted human talent.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, let me explain this amendment very briefly. It is a child health initiative for women and infant children.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Ohio is entitled to be heard.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair, and I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, this amendment is very simple. It is $75 million for women and infant children over the next 3 years. It is $25 million over the next 3 years for immunization. It is $75 million for maternal child health care.

That would just bring it back to the 1981 level in real terms. The community health centers, $25 million over 3 years; $200 million over a period of 3 years.

If we believe that the future of our children and the health of our children is important, I do not think we can afford to turn down this amendment because, although we might prevail with respect to the amendment, the facts are that we will pay a price over future years, whether it has to do with children who have not been able to obtain immunization or whether it has to do with maternity and child health, whether it has to do with aid for women and infant children.

We cannot afford to say, "No."

We can close one loophole of a major defense contractor, not even require that defense contractor to pay any taxes but just to keep that defense contractor from getting any refund, and we would save $289 million which is $89 million more than this entire program and this entire amendment deals with.

I hope that my colleagues see fit to accept the amendment. I think that the country cannot afford not to do it.

Mr. President, I am prepared to go forward with the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I thought I made a 30-second remark. I think I deserve another half minute.

Let me repeat with numbers. The bipartisan substitute before us is already $74 million in budget authority above 1986; the Women's, Infant and Children Program is already $52 million above current level. We are currently at $73,323,000. The Senate Budget Committee bipartisan mark is $300 million for these 3 years and Medicaid spending.

I believe we have done justice to these programs. Many others have been cut. These have been given the appropriate preference of being increased rather than reduced.

I am pleased to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The $74 million that the Senator talks about as being over current level, that $74 million, as I understand it, is not alone for these four programs. It is for all of the programs out at the National Institutes of Health. It is a whole host of programs, and that $74 million would have to be distributed. In all likelihood these four programs would see but a pittance as compared to the total. It is not $74 million as against these four programs. It is $74 million across the board.

Some of these programs are below current levels as we now have it. So I do not think we ought to confuse the issue.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I respond by saying the increase that is provided is as specific and as vague as the Senator's proposal because nothing about his proposal requires that the approporiators spend the additional money where he says it all goes into health function and they will end up deciding where to spend it anyway.

This is just adding that much to the full account. No specificity can be provided for here. So, yes, ours is in the whole account. His will end up with just that much more in the whole account, no more or no less.

Mr. METZENBAUM. How much time remains for each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has 41 minutes and the Senator from New Mexico has 40 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I wonder if the Senator from New Mexico will be willing to agree to have an up-and-down vote and both yield back the time? If you have the votes, you have them.

Mr. DOMENICI. On this one, I really cannot do that. Members have asked me about it. I said the last vote was the motion to table.

The Senate does not have to go along. But I believe I will move to table.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I ask unainimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] to table the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], are necessary absent.

Mr. BUMPERS. Madam President, I will be rather brief about this because most of what I wanted to say about this I said on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio a few moments ago.

This amendment, very simply, is this: It adds $25 million to the immunization programs, which, incidentally, is $15 million less than we need to be absolutely certain that we can immu-nize all of our children next year. But I am told that if nothing untoward happens, an additional $25 million will be enough to get through fiscal year 1987.

I would like to advise my colleagues that this is not done whimsically or cavalierly, but it is done because the cost of some of the vaccines for preventive childhood diseases has gone up 1,000 percent in the past 5 years.

Everybody here understands the efficacy of preventive health, and especially the value in immunizing our children against the mumps, whooping cough, diphtheria, measles, and so on. Rather than to see somebody say, "I am voting against this because I do not want to raise taxes $25 million," or offset for this additional $25 million is a reduction in the foreign aid function.

I know that the Budget Committee has already cut about 11 percent from the current level of funding for international affairs. But I do not think there is any question but that they can find an additional $25 million out of the roughly $12 to $13 billion that remains in that function, especially if those funds will be used for as laudable a cause as the immunization program.

I do not mind saying, and I do not want to pursue this, as I look through the foreign aid bill I am absolutely appalled to find a foreign military credit to Korea of $232 million, a very viable, economic nation, who last year had a $4.8 billion trade deficit of the United States. Under the terms of that function, the United States, which is running $200 billion deficits, will go out and borrow money, $232 million, in order to loan to the Koreans at a heavily subsidized rate so that they can buy weapons from us.

You do not have to be a bleeding heart liberal or broke out with brilliance, either one, to understand that immunizing children of this country is considerably more important than a subsidized loan to Korea. I am not picking on Korea. Go down the list. There is a bunch of them that I would hardly approve of.

I am simply saying that when you look down the list, why, when we are running $200 billion deficits, are we borrowing money to loan money to one of the most viable economies in the world?

I can tell you, you can do it now or you can do it later, but if you do it later it may be too late, to provide funds to immunize our children.

Let me give you some ideas of what the immunization program does in this country.

The benefit-cost ratio, when rubella and measles vaccines are given together, the unit-cost ratio of those two shots in combination is $23 to $1. That just simply means that for every $1 we put into it we save $23.

How often do you get a chance to vote on the floor of the U.S. Senate for a program that even approaches that benefit-cost ratio? The answer is never.

On polio, the benefit-cost ratio is $10.30 for every $1 we spend.

So the savings of $1 billion a year for polio and $500 million for measles is $1.5 billion we save just on those two.

What are the "costs" we save? Frankly, they are health care costs, but let me tell you something else. The cost for mom and pop to stay home with a son or daughter who has measles should also be added to the actual outlays for health care for their children.

Let me give you another statistic. I say this because we are asking for $25 million out of the foreign aid bill for the most cost-effective program we will ever vote on.

Let me tell you what I am talking about in terms of dollars and human misery.

Eight percent of all the people who are institutionalized either in State hospitals or other long-term facilities in the United States are there as a result of a childhood disease—mumps, measles, or rubella.

Let me repeat what I said earlier about what we did in Arkansas when I was Governor. We immunized all the children in our State and the cost of it was less than the cost of institutionalizing one child for a lifetime.

Madam President, since 1963, 57 million cases of measles have been avoided because of the vaccine, and 19,100 cases of mental retardation have been averted. I do not see how you can ever find more persuasive, more compelling numbers than those.

So, Madam President, I am not going to belabor my point. To me the option is clear. It should not even be debatable. The managers of the bill ought to accept this. We will be certain that sometime down the road you will not again hear of the kinds of measles outbreaks we had this year at the University of Arkansas. Incidentally, that one measles outbreak cost more than half a million dollars. It was a limited outbreak. But any cases are too many. You have two choices: Either allow pools of susceptibles to develop across this country, and along with them the potential for outbreaks of measles, mumps, rubella, and polio; or appropriate the money.

Why wait until next year? Let us do it now.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Madam President, will the Senator from Arkansas join me for just a moment to discuss this? As I understand it, the Senator's amendment adds $25 million to function 550 and subtracts a like amount from function 150, international affairs.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For the record, could the Senator remind us how much is presently contained in function 550?

Madam President, the correct answer is $38 billion.

Mr. BUMPERS. Thirty-eight?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Thirty-eight billion dollars is the correct answer.

Mr. BUMPERS. Thirty-eight billion. Well, the Senator certainly ought not to object to $25 million for immunization.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For the edification of the RECORD, it is $38 billion in round figures, $37.8 billion or some such number as that. Also for the RECORD, does the Senator have in mind how much is contained in function 150 from which he is making a subtraction?

Mr. BUMPERS. I think $8,300,000,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Senator is correct.

Madam President, I yield the rest of the afternoon to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, I rise not only to oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas but to discuss its underlying premise. The Senator has made the point that only $25 million is involved. This is not a small amount, Madam President, but I think we all recognize this is only the first of several amendments that may be targeted at function 150, the international affairs account.

I wish the 150 function were not such an inviting target, but I would like to discuss the account so that Senators will have some criteria upon which to base votes as these amendments come along the trail.

As a general argument, Madam President, there are any number of important causes in this country which need $25 million, particularly if funds can be provided, all at the expense of persons in other countries. The amendment is presented as if this is simply a case of taking money from people who are in foreign lands and devoting it to our own interests.

Madam President, the foreign assistance accounts have been devised because they are important to the national security of our country. They are devised to assist allies, to try to provide support for people who are prepared to defend our interests as well as theirs, to try to bring about peace in this world and to maintain peace. Of course, a good case can be made for immunization but a very good case can also be made for peace. On almost any other occasion most Senators would be very concerned about the strength of our alliances, the strength of our ability to manage the Soviet relationship, to fight terrorism, to create conditions which would maintain peace and thus preserve American lives and American interests.

Now, I think it is instructive to start our review today of the 150 account by pointing out that the account has already been discussed to some length by the Budget Committee. I would just point out with regard to the foreign security aspects of that account that the Budget Committee recommendation already represents a cut of more than $5 billon from the administration's request to a point that we now are looking at $8.3 billion for the three major security assistance programs: the Economic Support Fund, Foreign Military Sales, and the Military Assistance Program.

Madam President, that is a very substantial change. The administration has made in my judgment a good case for its request. The Budget Committee has in fact presented in this budget we are now considering $8.3 billion for the major security programs. That $8.3 billion includes $5.2 billion for Israel and Egypt. If Senators want to offer amendments for specific sums of money, they might very well begin to specify which of these situations they want to address. If, in fact, we want to cut aid to Israel or Egypt, there is a good chunk of money available. If, on the other hand, we wish to fully fund Israel and Egypt we are left with $3.1 billion in security assistance funds and $2.3 billion of that, almost another 70 to 80 percent, is made up of our base rights agreements with Greece, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, and the Philippines—a total of $2.3 billion.

Now, I have no doubt that there will be a great deal of debate on this floor about our losing bases, about our losing influence abroad. Madam President, we have agreements with these five countries. Most Senators, I believe, would want to retain those bases and appreciate the obligations that we have. But I would simply point out that if Senators support funding Israel and Egypt and the five base rights countries, then all but $800 million of our major security programs will have been committed.

Now, with the $800 million left are we going to fund our obligation to Pakistan? There are many Senators who have stood on the floor and talked about the Afghan rebels and our ability to resist Soviet incursions, resist the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan. The Pakistan money is clearly an integral part of that resistance. Without that assistance there is not going to be much of a U.S. influence in that area. That is roughly another $600 million. That leaves $200 million for all our other worldwide commitments. For example, we in the Senate have already earmarked assistance for Cyprus. A good many people are interested in that situation. There have been long debates with regard to the Greek-Turkey situation, the southern flank of NATO, and our ability to be of assistance to Cyprus.

Ecuador, a remarkable friend of the United States, is a country that has done all of the things that we could ask of any fledgling democracy. Uruguay, having just turned over a dictatorship to come back to democracy, is an extremely promising situation. We had a long debate last year about our obligation to the Cambodian resistance fighters. Tunisia, likewise, is a very important recipient of assistance from the United States. Madam President, I have not even talked about our obligations in Central America. Can it be assumed that money surely will be found there for El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras? To the extent we get into economic aid to the Contras, somehow that must be found.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator yield for just one moment?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes; I will be happy to yield for a question.

Mr. BUMPERS. In regard to the last statement of the Senator as to how we were going to find money for the Contras, I understood that came out of the defense function.

Mr. LUGAR. The Senator is correct with regard to the last debate we had here in the Senate. But of course it is not really clear that the House will go along with our action. We may have to revisit that situation. Clearly, after we get through this particular budget phase, either humanitarian or other aid will continue to be an issue next year.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thought one of the arguments the President used in his speech to the Nation was it would not increase the deficit; it would simply come out of the appropriate function of the Defense Department. There may not be any impact if no money goes to Contras, obviously.

Mr. LUGAR. The Senator is correct, if the House were to adopt the sensible position the Senate took. Unhappily, the House has not yet taken that position, and it is not clear whether they will. I appreciate the point the Senator is making. So I would reiterate that we may be revisiting the Contra issue. We certainly will continue to face the promise made in the Jackson report that we must do something for the infrastructure of our neighbors to the south because our failure to address this issue is likely to bring considerable problems to our Southwestern States through immigration.

Let me just mention, Mr. President, this very afternoon we received a very important report from the President of the United States in regard to assistance for the Philippines. He apparently will ask for a number of ways in which the Philippines might be assisted but clearly some of them come from the 150 account. In our Committee on Foreign Relations we are already taking a look at a request for Irish aid. That question is being pushed very strongly by many Members of this body. It already has been pushed very strongly by Members of the House. There appears to be no money for Irish aid, at this moment in this budget.

Now let me comment as to whether there are other options other than those which I have described. Indeed the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has already mentioned the choice between assistance to South Korea or to our domestic immunization program.

He suggested the South Koreans are borrowing money at subsidized rates. I must point out to the Senator that in fact, if they borrow money, the South Koreans borrow it at market rates.

I might also mention that in the Budget Committee recommendation, the particular account from which countries may borrow at market rates—not at subsidized rates but market rates—was cut by $1 billion. Given that curtailment by the Budget Committee, it is now uncertain that the South Koreans could even borrow at market rates in fiscal year 1987.

As a matter of fact, the support for South Korea being allowed to borrow at market rate comes from our desire for our own security. The United States and this body, the Senate, have on many occasions said we ought to have a presence in South Korea. If so, we ought to be secure in that presence. There is still, as a matter of fact, an aggressive force in North Korea, very close at hand.

I simply say to the Senator that many of us are very pleased that the South Koreans are prepared to borrow money at market rates to provide for the defense of their own country and for the interest that we have in trying to hold back communism in that part of the world.

The Senator might also look at the 150 account and suggest that we are taking too big a step in relation to embassy security this year. That program comes within the 150 account. The Inman Commission has suggested, that $4 billion may be needed over the course of the next few years to strengthen our diplomatic missions in order to prevent the kind of disaster that occurred in Lebanon, to provide some security, at least, for the many personnel who are currently in unsafe circumstances. We shall be having additional hearings in the Foreign Relations Committee on this issue in the near future. We are trying to take a look at how that request can be shaped, at how the budget impact will be lessened.

In its recommendation the Budget Committee has already reduced very substantially whatever commitment might be possible for embassy security in fiscal year 1987. They did so because we are facing a tight year.

Having cut back the military programs, the Budget Committee has also cut the other security programs within the 150 account.

The additional personnel that were requested by the Department of State this year were all to address the enhanced security program. Those additional personnel might have been provided somewhere else. Conceivably, the Department of Defense or Treasury or the account of another agency might have provided these personnel. However, they are in the 150 account. The embassy security proposal is part of this picture.

It will be argued by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that after you put these figures together—either the original request or the truncated Budget Committee recommendation—the $25 million would hardly be missed. I make the point, Mr. President, that it would be missed. We do not have the money presently to meet the foreign policy obligations of the United States of America. If, in fact, our foreign policy were not working well, if in fact, we were not making some headway throughout the world, I suspect that Senators would say perhaps we ought to be doing more.

It is ironic, I would argue, that at a time when there are many U.S. foreign policy successes, Senators are prepared to cut out not only the 14 percent recommended by the Budget Committee but to nibble away at the funding which remains in the account.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the Senator from Indiana yield to me, Mr. President?

Mr. LUGAR. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me ask the Senator if he would mind watching the floor for me for about 10 or 15 minutes. I assume he wants to make some further comments anyway.

Mr. LUGAR. Yes, Mr. President, I shall be pleased to do that.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me state the problem with this amendment from the standpoint of Senator BUMPERS' belief that somehow or other what we do today on the floor will have some kind of impact on the immunization program. I want to be as fair as I can to this process and to what happens later, but let me see if I can convince the Senator from Arkansas that his amendment is not going to do anything for child immunization. Then we might figure out some way to tell the Senate that we want the appropriators to seriously consider immunization.

I am going to try to explain. Most Senators, when they come down here and talk about this budget resolution, do not understand. If they listen, they just say, "Well, that is going to happen some other time; I am not worried about it." But let me see if I can explain to my friend from Arkansas what is going to happen.

First, if he succeeds in taking $25 million in budget authority out of the foreign affairs function 150—if he succeeds—this resolution will be in all other respects the same. Otherwise, his amendment would not be in order. There will be the same total budget authority for the appropriators after his amendment as before. The total outlays that we are going to be permitted to appropriate out of discretionary accounts is going to be exactly the same. If that were not the case, you would have to ask for revenues, and you have not.

When we leave the floor of the Congress with a budget resolution, a very interesting event is going to occur. We pass ours and Senator BUMPERS has his $25 million switched. There would be nothing in this resolution about $25 million for child immunization; there will only be another $25 million in that big piece of Government that includes health care. That is the only change in this amendment. Then we are going to get the resolution conferred on in the House.

Finally, a resolution is going to go to the appropriators in the House and the appropriators in the Senate. That is where the Senator will get some additional immunization money or will not get it. It will have little or nothing to do with how we vote here this afternoon. The law we are now working under says the following: When that event occurs that I have just described, the appropriators in the U.S. Senate are now bound by statutory law to divvy up among the appropriating committees of the U.S. Senate that budget authority I just told my colleagues about, that big pot, and those outlays. Until they have assigned the budget authority in outlays to the appropriations subcommittees and published it—that is the new law—we cannot bring an appropriations bill to the floor.

Now, I say to my friend the chance of every one of these functions, including 150 and 550, the ones the Senator is concerned with, ending up in appropriations when they have assigned the money to the committees, the chance of it ending up exactly as it left here is—what would he guess? I would say 1,000 to 1. But there probably are some who would say there is no chance that they will end up the same way. They will decide whether there is more money needed for child immunization, with or without the amendment, than is prescribed for in that function.

Yes; they may have to go to the subcommittee of my good friend from Arizona and say, "We need some money from one of yours, and we are going to put it here."

Interestingly enough, the converse will happen, too. If the Senator succeeds tonight in doing this, again there will be nothing here about child immunization; but if the 150 foreign assistance function needs $25, $30, or $40 million more than we left in this function, they will, in that deliberation, move it from one to another.

I will admit that if you get up into the billions—education added $1 billion—it is pretty hard to say they are not going to leave some of that where we voted it. But $25 million is not going to end up where the Senator from Arkansas tonight expects it to.

Frankly, I urge that the Senator work with us. We will do what we can. Perhaps we can even draft some language and put it in the resolution, saying that we do not believe the current level of funding for child immunication is adequate, that we hope the appropriators will understand what the distinguished Senator understands, and that they will consider additional funding. There is no way we can bind them, I say to my friend from Arkansas; but neither is there any assurance that if this amendment is adopted, he will receive $25 million more in programmatic budget authority for child immunization.

We can carry this on. I want my friend from Indiana to know that there are at least three more amendments. Everybody thinks we ought to take from 150, put it in another one, and it is not going to be binding because the appropriators will have to allocate. But it is a very nice political plum, so long as they do not have the problem of foreign relations and foreign affairs for the United States. They can take $300, $400, or $500 billion out of it, spread it around—and I am not saying that the Senator from Arkansas is doing this—and make it appear that it is going somewhere else, but we are not the least bit sure it will.

The Senator from Florida and I will cooperate on some language that we hope immunization is funded more in the appropriations process than at present levels, and not have to vote up and down on this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRESSLER). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, first of all, I appreciate the eloquence and explanation of the Senator from New Mexico, the chairman of the Budget Committee.

What the Senator has just said applies not just to this amendment dealing with childhood immunization. It applies to virtually every amendment that will be offered here. If the amendment of the Senator from Ohio on maternal child care and WIC had been accepted, the Senate would have absolutely no assurance that the ap-propriators would allocate the money he is asking for.

I understand the way the process works.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. There was one other major difference. That amendment added $200 million in new taxes.

Mr. BUMPERS. I understood that, and that is the reason I did not do that.

Mr. DOMENICI. The other amendment says to the appropriators, there is $200 million more to spend. The Senator does not say that. The Senator says, "I do not want to spend more money. I am asking that you take it out of foreign affairs for the purpose of this first go-round and put it in the health care program." I think the appropriators will make the decision, especially when the amount is small.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Senator is correct.

I did not want to ask the Finance Committee to raise taxes to finance this amendment, so I went through the budget, and I looked every place I could to see what kind of offset I thought would be appropriate to fund $25 million.

However, before I get into that, let me also say that all we can ever do here on an amendment is simply send word to the appropriators. If the Senate speaks loud and clearly this afternoon that we believe funding the immunization program at $56 million or $57 million is not going to be enough in 1987, then we are saying to the appropriators, "When you get into funding discretionary health care programs, we want to make sure that you put in $81 million for the immunization program? We are saying that $56 million is not going to be enough next year.

If we do not do anything—if I pull my amendment down or if we insert some language in the RECORD—the chances are that it will be influential enough to get the job done. But it seems to me that everybody understands the meritorious nature of this amendment, and we ought to accept the amendment, so that the appropriators will have a message that they understand clearly. They will know the Senate has spoken on this issue. That is all we do in any amendment when we debate the budget. Nobody has any assurance here that because an amendment is adopted, that is going to be the way it winds up in appropriations.

Mr. President, when I first started debating this amendment, the Senator from Colorado was sitting in the manager's seat on the majority side. He made the point that there was about $37.9 billion in the Domenici-Chiles budget for function 550; and the implication was, "What on Earth is the Senator from Arkansas thinking about, asking for a paltry $25 million for childhood immunizations, when there is already $37.9 billion in that function?"

When you consider the funding for Medicaid and the other programs in this function, you will find that there is still, in the making up of this budget, only an anticipated $56 million for childhood immunizations. Those were the assumptions. The committee started out with a baseline of $38.4 million for current services. In other words, in order to maintain Medicaid and all the health programs in 550 in 1987, it would require $38.4 billion—$38.5 in outlays—and the committee recommend $37.9 billion, or $600 million less than that.

What does that mean? That means that next year we are going to be $600 million under the level of current services.

The committee said that under discretionary health programs, which is where immunizations are located, the mark assumes that most discretionary programs will be frozen for 3 years—frozen—when vaccines are going up as much as 100 percent a year.

It said some additional funding above the freeze level is assumed in order to provide the Appropriations Committee with additional flexibility to allow increases for high priority programs such as the National Institutes of Health research awards.

Do you know how much money we are anticipating putting into AIDS research next year? The level this year is about $192 million and I promise you it will go up $30 million to $100 million next year.

Where does that leave immunizations?

I can tell you this budget still assumes $56 million for immunizations, the same level as this year. We were scared to death this year that we were going to have to get a fast supplemental passed through here just to take care of two relatively minor outbreaks.

I must say I do not want to start a roll here of people hitting foreign aid and I recognize the position of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I respect it. He is doing an excellent job over there, and I understand his problem.

But I just say, on the floor, I am offended when I read Korea is asking for $232 million in concessionary sales which means we borrow money, $232 million, send it to them, and they do not pay a dime interest for 10 years. Yet we stand here quibbling about $25 million, which is just about what the interest would be on that loan to them the first 2 years.

I do not want to get into that offset contest because I believe in foreign aid. I think it is in our national security interest to provide foreign aid in some cases. But nothing is more important to our national security than our good health and the health of our children.

So I have not asked for a tax increase. I have simply asked for a shifting of priorities to make sure that this program which has the highest benefit to cost ratio of anything we ever vote on is not underfunded.

Mr. President, I am going to ask for a quorum call unless the Senator wishes to speak.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

I withdraw that request.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator EXON of Nebraska be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUGAR. Will the Senator from Arkansas withhold?

Mr. BUMPERS. I am happy to withhold.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for withholding that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, let me mention again that earlier in the debate I made the point that South Korea is not asking for concessional assistance. South Korea is prepared to borrow at market rates, which means they would pay back their loans at rates equal to what it costs us to borrow them. I appreciate that the Senator from Arkansas would be dismayed if the South Koreans were asking for concessional assistance. But they are not now, and they have not been doing so. As a point of fact I want to reiterate that point again.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has described this amendment as one that does not start a roll of amendments attempting to hit foreign aid. He has suggested that he has aimed at the 150 account instead of raising taxes.

Let me just say, Mr. President, whatever may be the problems in the 550 account, I have been describing the 150 account in which the Budget Committee has taken a hard look at our military security problems, the defense of our country, and has made some very tough judgments in this 150 account.

Let me point out once again for the record that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State have both commented on the needs of our country in terms of our defense in working with front-line countries. They have suggested security assistance of $11.5 billion this year. That is their request. The Budget Committee has reduced this to $9 billion, a $2.5 billion reduction, and I have already pointed out that the vast part of that is consumed by our obligations in the Middle East that come from the Camp David Accords.

Senators can argue whether we have that degree of interest in Israel, that degree of interest in peace in the Middle East. Senators can argue whether we ought to be worried about our military bases in the Philippines, Spain, Greece, Portugal, and Turkey. I can accept that as a legitimate argument.

As the distinguished Budget Committee chairman pointed out, there are at least four amendments that he has identified, all of which seek foreign aid as an easy target.

I fear, Mr. President, the supposition is that foreign assistance is seen by many Senators, many Americans as gifts to other people, as ways in which we help other economies when, in fact, the foreign assistance account is in a very straightforward, hardheaded program which enables us to help friendly countries be strong in their defense and strong in their democracies so that American troops do not have to be used in defending our security interests abroad.

It is in our interest that these countries remain free. It is in our interest that our alliances remain sound. This is the glue factor that helps hold the free world together.

The question should not be immunization or foreign aid. The question should be immunization and a peaceful world. That is the rationale behind foreign assistance. Using foreign assistance as an easy mark to find funds for other programs will not do, Mr. President.

There may have been a time when Senators, such as the Senator from Arkansas, took a look at the whole budget and miraculously came upon account 150 to find a source of funds for other programs.

I'm saying that 150 is not an easy mark. Senators who are looking at 150 are going to talk about Israel, the Philippines, Central America, Korea, and others. If Senators honestly want to come to the floor and suggest that we disrupt our alliances, that we renege on our obligations, that we do not want to defend the country while we are talking about immunization, then that's fair enough. That is the kind of argument that will have to be made and it is not an easy trick to simply come in and say $25 million for immunization or $50 million for some other worthy purpose. It will not do.

Mr. President, I want to continue this because I see no purpose in having one Senator after another survey the entire budget, and conclude that the 150 account is out there ready to be attacked, while our own children are not immunized. As the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee has pointed out, nothing in this amendment is going to guarantee the first shot of immunization. It is a bogus argument, and it sets the stage for a severe weakening of our national defense.

I am going to argue on each of these amendments so Senators better be prepared that if they are prepared to weaken our national defense, weaken our fight against terrorism, go head to head on aid to Israel or on the Philippines, then that's fair enough. But that should be the argument. The 150 account is not an easy mark any more and colleagues need to know that. If they deliberately want to invade that account with one amendment after another in a sort of a community chest effort, fair enough. But there will be consequences as Senators are asked to decide in terms of whether they want to weaken our embassy security or which country programs they want to reduce.

Now let me say, Mr. President, that I appreciate that foreign assistance may not be a program that Senators used to vote for, but last year 75 Senators supported foreign assistance—75, a strong bipartisan consensus.

Mr. BUMPERS. Senator, I was one of those Senators.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator for his support. And I would have anticipated the Senator would support that assistance because the Senator has been a farsighted person taking a look at our national goals and objectives. And I have no quarrel with the Senator's quest for immunization. As a matter of fact, as the Senator knows, I have supported, along with the distinguished member of the Foreign Relations Committee, a proposal to discuss at the summit with the Soviet Union the immunization of children throughout the world. My first emphasis obviously would be on children in this country. The distinguished ranking member, Senator PELL, is on the floor now and I applaud his leadership in that respect. We have an intense interest in that item.

But I wish that the Senator had not decided to frame an amendment that reduces the 150 account and, in my judgment, unravels what I think is very serious situation. As the Senator from New Mexico has pointed out, this amendment may be the forerunner of several others that we shall see.

Let me continue by mentioning that the Senator from Arkansas could have pointed out that the 150 account includes ways to bring information to people around the world. The 150 account includes more than military assistance to frontline allies. We also support USIA, Voice of America, and various other ways to get, some word behind the Iron Curtain to people who need information; These are debatable objectives, of course. Many have wondered how effective we are in spreading the word, how effective our books, our records, and our exchanges may be. Some have questioned, I am certain, whether we ought to have exchange programs, and whether that is a legitimate objective. I think that it is. That program is included here and already has been cut.

The broadcast functions were cut across the board. As a matter of fact, the administration requested nearly $1 billion. About $800 million was in fact recommended by the Budget Committee. How we will continue the level of services there is not clear.

As the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has pointed out, he was looking for a level of services continued in the immunization front. The same case, unhappily, has to be made with regard to information functions throughout the world, quite apart from our military security aspects that I have mentioned.

The Foreign Relations Committee has supported the President and our Secretary of State. We have visited with members of the Budget Committee about these vital objectives. That committee has taken a look at the overall 150 account and cut each of these categories rather sharply, by at least 11 percent overall.

I visited with our distinguished Secretary of State George Shultz yesterday and he said, "Try to bring some understanding to your colleagues that we have a lot going for us in the world right now. There are a lot of people deeply interested in our foreign policy. A lot of folks, as a matter of fact, a lot of Americans who would like to have a good bit more security in our embassies and the representation of Americans around the world."

I would just say to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that the Secretary of State is prepared to make the case for the full budget he requested. He and the President are deeply unhappy over the prospects of having to make so many choices against allies, with whom they are visiting as they head out to the summit conference in Tokyo. Nevertheless, the Budget Committee has suggested those levels. I would say to get into these kinds of arguments now in which we dismantle what is left of the 150 account seems to me not in the best interests of our country and our foreign relations.

I hope that the Senator would reconsider the particular course of action that he has adopted. I hope that he might work with the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee on some modus vivendi out of this situation.

But let me just say, if he does not take that course of action, I clearly hope that we would not start down the trail of cutting the 150 account for every one of several causes that the people may bring to mind.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I just want to take about 60 seconds to say that I apologize for concentrating all of my speech earlier about the 150 function on Korea. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has I think correctly made the point that the $163 million credit to South Korea last year was technically not a concessionary sale. Nevertheless, it was a sale that had a 10-year interest-free provision in it—same thing by a different name.

Second, I do not want to be accused of Korea bashing. I have made the point here.

But you know the President wants to abolish the Eximbank. And I do not know whether I am going to fully support him, but I certainly will support a very healthy cut of $500 million or so. There is $1.1 billion in here. The President and I agree this program either ought to be terminated or cut very substantially. Certainly we could find this $25 million in the Eximbank of $1.1 billion.

Mr. President, in order to send a message to the Appropriations Committee that we want to make sure childhood immunization programs are fully funded, we are saying let us transfer one-twelfth of 1 percent of function 150 over to function 550 to make sure that we do not get into a crisis situation like we did this year.

I am prepared to yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the balance of my time. In fact, I yield back the time in opposition.

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] to table the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS], the Senator for Florida [Mr. HAWKINS], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] is absent on official business.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBURG] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 46, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1802 was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I take the floor at this time to inquire of the distinguished assistant Republican leader as to what the schedule will be for the rest of the day, particularly with reference to rollcall votes, what will happen on tomorrow, and what the program——

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have quiet so the Senator may be heard?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

I also ask with reference to rollcall votes on Monday next and Tuesday, as far as he can see?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, in the absence of the majority leader, and in a rare burst of generosity, I think if I can propound this unanimous-consent request, I might be able to answer that question.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 10 a.m. on Monday, April 28, 1986.

I further ask unanimous consent that when the Senate resumes the unfinished business, Senate Concurrent Resolution 120 on Monday, 25 hours be considered the remaining time for debate on the resolution.

I further ask unanimous consent that any rollcall votes ordered in relation to amendments offered and debated, motions to recommit or reduce the time, and appeals on Monday be postponed to occur no earlier than Tuesday, April 29, at 11 a.m., with the exception of procedural questions such as a motion to instruct the Sergeant at Arms and a vote on adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The effort there, I share with the Democratic leader, is that there would be no more votes tonight. We would lay down the DeConcini amendment, I believe. There would be no session on Friday if we reach this agreement; then, convening under these terms and no votes taken on Monday, but we will be, of course, in session. If anyone is concerned about not having time to offer an amendment, I suggest that they make arrangements to offer their amendment on Monday, because time will be running on the resolution regardless of whether or not amendments are offered during the session on Monday.

I find one other item of language to be included in the unanimous-consent request regarding the Budget Act rules:

> And all provisions of the Budget Act regarding floor consideration of amendments shall remain in full force and effect.

With that, I share with the Democratic leader, it is the intention of the leadership to proceed on that basis if that is acceptable to all.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I see a note here which comes from Mr. MELCHER. He would like 30 minutes, equally divided, prior to any vote on his amendment on Tuesday. I think the managers could give time off the resolution and assure him of that.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not understand the request.

Mr. MELCHER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. MELCHER. I can see where we might be in a position where we would not complete all amendments. I do not want much time on the amendment and I am prepared to offer it early Monday morning, when we start. I only request before we have the final vote on the amendment, which would have to occur on Tuesday, some time to discuss what the amendment is about prior to voting on it.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to my good friend, he ought not to have any concern. We ought to be able to accommodate him. I am reluctant to have unanimous-consent requests of that order. I do not know the scope, but at this point, I see no way we could not accommodate him. He would have an hour on his amendment, an hour on opposition. We just would not use all the time when he brought it up and later in the day, we would accommodate him.

Mr. MELCHER. Reserving the right to object, that is my thought. No use in using the 2 hours.

Mr. CHILES. Reserving the right to object, I trust this means that time we are burning off would be equally divided.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is the intent.

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object, I have a question regarding what the chairman and the ranking member stated about consent agreements. As the floor manager knows, we have been here since 11:30 prepared to offer our Medicare amendment. I shall not object to this agreement, but what I would like to do is ask unanimous consent that we lay this down after the final vote on Tuesday morning that we will have as a result of consideration of the amendments on Monday.

I would be more than glad to enter into a half-hour time limitation. This is on the Medicare amendment. I have talked the amendment over with both the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the committee. I would like to be able to get those assurances.

Mr. HEFLIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, would the Senator from Wyoming tell us now, his unanimous-consent request means that starting on Monday or Tuesday, there would be 25 hours remaining. How many hours have we used up of the 50 now?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the Parliamentarian could share with us the amount of hours remaining at the present time. I inquire about the time unexpired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a total of 33 hours 46 minutes; 16 hours and 6 minutes for the majority; 17 hours and 40 minutes for the minority.

Mr. HEFLIN. Thirty-three hours of what is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-three hours and forty-six minutes total.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would have some hesitancy about giving up 8 hours—that is more than 8 hours—and to start on Monday. There have been some times on amendments that we have run out of time on these things.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama would yield, there is an alternative. That is to run that time tomorrow. The intent of the unanimous-consent request is that we would be out of session tomorrow and begin on Monday at 10 a.m. with 25 hours to be considered as remaining on the budget resolution. We can run it in the more formal fashion if that is the wish of the body. That would mean a session tomorrow.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the distinguished acting majority leader yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SIMPSON. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. I might say to my friend from Alabama, that this is the sixth time I have been through this as manager. If we start on Monday with 25 hours remaining, it will not be that 25 hours and the current state of things that will cause anybody to have any trouble with amendments. Nobody can promise what happens that last half-hour, but we do not have enough amendments that I know if, if we were to take them all, to use the 25 hours. I think there is more than adequate time.

Incidentally, to the Senator from Massachusetts, I want to agree with him shortly, as soon as this colloquy is over, that we can accommodate him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wonder if we might just settle on 26 hours.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. SIMPSON. The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Alabama be willing to accept the 25 hours that are in the request with the proviso that instead of coming in at 10 o'clock on Monday, we come in at 11? That is the same thing except we get to come in 1 hour later.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that is all right. I would be willing to accept that.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent request is amended accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, could I just get assurances from the leadership that after you dispose of the votes on Tuesday morning—as I understand it, you intend now to vote on Tuesday morning, when we come in, on the amendments that have been proposed on Monday—after those votes are concluded, we would be recognized to consider the Medicare amendment which I will offer with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ]. I indicate now I would be quite willing to engage in a time limitation of 40 minutes equally divided.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I yield to the floor manager for a response to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the senior Senator from Massachusetts, we will do that rather than to get a unanimous-consent request. The reason is there may be one of the amendments we plan to vote on that day that is finished but there may be one there is 15 minutes left on. I do not know whether the Senator would like us to then leave that alone and go to his. I think we could work that out. My purpose is as soon after the vote that is prescribed, which will at least be a vote on the DeConcini amendment, perhaps more, as soon after that as possible the Medicare amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be next.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator from New Mexico. With those assurances, I certainly will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREY). Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that the acting majority leader amended the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SIMPSON. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if I may ask another question of the distinguished assistant Republican leader, how late will the Senate be in this evening?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Mexico, the floor manager, for the response.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me respond as best I can to the distinguished minority leader. The amendment that will be called up next is the DeConcini-Abdnor amendment. I do not think they necessarily want their full hour, so I would think that we do not need over 15 or 20 minutes. After that I have nothing further on the pending resolution. It would be up to the leaders as to what transpires thereafter.

I would like to make this statement while I am on my feet. We have just approved a unanimous-consent request that says we go back on this bill at 11 o'clock on Monday. There are a number of amendments that are ready and a number of Senators who are ready to offer them. We are going to run the time as required under the Budget Act starting at that hour. If there are Senators in town who have amendments, we would like them to bring them up. We are not even going to insist that they use all their time that day. They may want to reserve a few moments. But if we could get the amendments up and start to stack them in an orderly manner, the chances of us running into the problem that the Senator from Alabama raised are certainly minimized. So we do not intend to do nothing on Monday. If no one proposes amendments, we will use up 6 or 8 hours of the remaining time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I thank very much the Democratic leader for his assistance in resolving this matter for purposes of our planning. For the information of Senators, as I say, time on the budget resolution will begin running at the appointed hour, and I certainly urge the presentation of amendments on Monday. I hope that might take place. Mr. President, I would think, depending on the disposition of the DeConcini amendment, that we would get out soon thereafter, with a wrap-up as soon as possible

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished acting leader.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I will announce that there will be no more rollcall votes this evening.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The Senate continued with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 1803

(Purpose: To increase budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 1987 for functional category 750 (Administration of Justice))

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator ABDNOR, Senator ZORINSKY, Senator BENTSEN, Senator WILSON, Senator MELCHER, and myself and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], for himself, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. Bentsen, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. MELCHER proposes an amendment numbered 1803.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, decrease the amount on line 19 by $63,000,000.

On page 5, decrease the amount on line 10 by $63,000,000.

On page 7, decrease the amount on line 12 by $163,000,000.

On page 7, decrease the amount on line 13 by $84,000,000.

On page 23, increase the amount on line 2 by $200,000,000.

On page 23, increase the amount on line 3 by $168,000,000.

On page 24, decrease the amount on line 3 by $84,000,000.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, we just had a vote on an amendment that would take some funds out of the foreign operations account. It was a very close vote. I want to begin debate on this amendment with the assurance to the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, that this is a very important subject to me as it is to him. I realize that he has a grave obligation which he certainly satisfies in defending foreign operations and foreign assistance. I, too, as with the Senator from Arkansas, have not willy-nilly just jumped on this account. It seems to me that we have some big problems in the United States to deal with terrorism, and indeed foreign operations has to play some role.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New Mexico for a moment?

Mr. DECONCINI. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I designate the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] to manage the bill in my stead until I return.

Let me say to my friend from Arizona, I am fully aware of the exceptional needs in the drug prevention areas that he alludes to. I wish I could support his amendment but, frankly, I do believe that we ought to find some place else to save the money. I am not inclined to support further reductions in international programs. The same arguments hold that held an hour ago when the Senate debated the Bumpers amendment.

I want to tell the Senator from Arizona in advance I support him on most of the areas. We are joining together in a task force. In fact, we have asked the President to see the border State Senators about this issue of increased drug traffic coming into our country and our border States from Mexico. I want to assure him I will continue working with him in all these areas.

Incidentally, the border facilities are a disgrace to the United States except for one new one which I believe is in the Senator from Arizona's State. Both of us have gone down to the border and have seen the deplorable conditions in which our customs officers and our immigration officers are working. There is one facility in El Paso, TX, that probably, if it was anything but a facility of the U.S. Government, would be condemned. If it was anything other than a Government facility, one of our laws on occupational safety would close it down. It has one restroom for 45 employees, including men and women.

We ought to fix these facilities. They are an embarrassment. Frankly, I do not believe we can do it in the way the Senator is suggesting tonight, and I want him to know that in advance.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico. I wish he was going to stay here, because I was going to say some nice things about his cooperative effort on the drug issue. I will say them anyway.

The Senator from New Mexico is correct. He has helped a great deal and has been a leader in law enforcement with respect to the drug traffic problem. My argument is not with the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Florida. But there comes a time when we have to stand up and take a stand.

Mr. President, while recent international events have turned the attention of most Americans to Libya, the Middle East, Frankfurt, Heathrow Airport in England, and other places, there has been a growing realization right here at home that this country is threatened by a national security problem at our own borders. I am talking, of course, about the narcotics trade that is becoming increasingly dangerous, particularly along the southwest border of the United States.

To a great extent, this problem exists in the Southeastern part of the United States; but a very aggressive, coordinated, funded effort—pushed by Congress, by the way and with the help of the military—has made some inroads in stopping the traffic of drugs into the Southeastern United States. By no means should we relent in that effort. At the same time, the southwest border has taken its licks in what is becoming the worst history of drug trafficking in the Southwest that I know of. The time has come to shift our eyes back home for a moment and focus on the growing drug trafficking threat to this country and how we can build our defenses against the drug menace.

Mr. President, the amendment that I am offering today with my good friend from South Dakota, Senator ABDNOR, would ensure that we have solid drug interdiction manpower levels in place in the Southwest and all along the southern tier, particularly in the U.S. Customs Service—our frontline drug interdiction agency. Our amendment would add $200 million to function 750: administration of justice, to provide additional resources for the U.S. Customs Service and other important law enforcement agencies that would be severely damaged if held to the budget resolution's post-Gramm-Rudman-Hollings freeze level for another year. Specifically, it is the intent of our amendment to restore $115 million to the U.S. Customs Service accounts; $45 million to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; $35 million to the U.S. Secret Service; and the balance of $5 million to other high-priority law enforcement initiatives in the other law enforcement agencies covered by function 750.

In order to make the amendment outlay neutral, we have offset the increased funding for function 750 by reducing function 150—International Affairs by $163 million in BA and $84 million in outlays; and by reducing function 800—General Government by $100 million in BA and $84 million in outlays. The outlay neutrality of our amendment has been confirmed by the Congressional Budget Office.

Mr. President, the primary intention of this amendment is to allow sufficient room within function 750 to accommodate an increase of approximately $115 million over current levels for the U.S. Customs Service. This would allow the agency to restore the cuts imposed both by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings March sequester and the President's fiscal year 1987 budget.

If we fail to grant Customs this increase and are forced to live with the budget resolution target, the agency will have to fire 1,800 personnel in fiscal 1987—the largest personnel reduction at Customs since President Reagan took office. This cut could not come at a worse time in our effort to combat drug smuggling along our borders, particularly the Southwest.

For example, Customs intelligence sources reveal that Mexico is rapidly becoming a major drug source and transshipment country for the trafficker looking for U.S. markets. Now over 33 percent of all heroin consumed in this country is grown in Mexico and over 30 percent of the cocaine is now being shipped through Mexico into the United States. Furthermore, Mexico is now in a "dead heat" with Colombia as the No. 1 supplier of marijuana to the United States. If the cuts imposed under this budget resolution are allowed to go forward, our defenses along the Southwest border to combat this growing threat will be drastically wounded.

In addition, we should not lose sight of the fact that the Customs Service is our second largest revenue agency, bringing in over $14 billion a year in revenue to the Treasury, with an estimated 20-to-1 ratio of revenues brought in to staff dollars spent—higher than the IRS. So, we need this amendment to give the Customs Service the tools it needs to fight drugs and to enforce our tariff and trade laws.

Mr. President, another agency that would be hard-hit by the provisions of the budget resolution would be the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms—an agency that is deeply involved in our antiterrorist effort here in the United States. This small but important agency has a solid track record of making good cases against major weapons and explosives traffickers here in the United States, and their contribution to our domestic antiterrorism effort is significant. If our amendment fails, this agency will suffer personnel cuts of 650 positions—a sharp blow to our law enforcement effort here at home.

Finally, the U.S. Secret Service has critical responsibilities both in its protective mission for the President and other top officials, and in law enforcement investigations that affect our antiterrorism campaign here in the United States. The Secret Service is a critical cog in our antiterrorism, antiweapons, and explosives law enforcement team and would lose at least 350 people if our amendment fails today. We need to bolster—not cut—this important law enforcement agency.

Mr. President, I do not take lightly the offsetting cuts in foreign aid and general government. All budget functions are in tough shape with respect to the moneys that are available for them. We have critical international obligations to Israel and Egypt—as the Senator from Indiana pointed out before the last amendment—as well as other allies who are our friends. This amendment would not cut aid to Israel or Egypt. Let me restate that. This amendment would not cut aid to Israel or Egypt. I want to make that very clear, as clear as I can.

In short, the amendment is very clear. The unequivocal intent of this amendment is to reduce the administration costs associated with State Department operations and other low priority activities in function 150 and that no reduction whatsoever shall be made in aid to Israel or Egypt. I trust that the legislative history on this amendment will reinforce the clear intent of no cut in aid to Israel or Egypt.

The small saving of $163 million in international affairs could be and should be absorbed in other low priority areas, such as State Department staffing and administrative costs for running our myraid of foreign aid programs. For example, the State Department wants to spend $421 million next year for "administrative and staff activities." This is not for security and antiterrorism. This is for administrative and staff activities. A rollback of that funding to fiscal year 1985 levels would save nearly $80 million—almost half of our reduction.

At the same time, the general government function includes Congress; the Office of Management and Budget; the General Services Administration; and other executive branch functions that could be trimmed by $100 million in fiscal year 1987. For example, an amendment that Senator HUMPHREY and I sponsored last year and which was signed into law April 7 by President Reagan in the omnibus reconciliation bill would save $50 million in 1 year in the operation and management of the Federal motor vehicle fleet—a fleet by the way that contains over 400,000 vehicles, automobiles, trucks, and limousines. By using the private sector and some creative thinking at the agencies, we could save more than half of the $100 million reduction in just this one management program in the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this is an amendment that adjusts priorities. Pure and simple it says we need to fight drugs here at our borders more than we need to spend these additional amounts on State Department bureaucracy or general government activities. It says that drug interdiction is really important, not the stepchild of law enforcement as some in the administration view it. It says that we are going to get together and get tough on domestic terrorism and set up our defenses against drugs and terrorism before the threat gets any worse and comes knocking right at our door, not after we suffer our first major tragedy here at home. It is a responsible amendment; it does not impact the deficit; and it should be approved by the Senate.

We have not asked for any new revenues. We are asking for a shift in funding priorities.

I hope that the Senate will vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment with my good friend, the Senator from Arizona. The Budget Committee has tackled a difficult task and has given us a resolution which freezes almost all domestic spending at the postsequester level.

I believe the Budget Committee has made a fine effort to meet a difficult target, however, a freeze will impose a hardship on three law enforcement agencies which my appropriation subcommittee funds. Senator DECONCINI and I have strived for the last 5 years to fund the U.S. Customs Service, the U.S. Secret Service, and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms at levels we felt necessary for these agencies to do their jobs. Quite frankly, I think we should have done more but we have done what we can to hold the budget line.

If the Senate insists on freezing these accounts, I believe we are making a mistake. The Customs Service is the front line in our fight against drugs. It makes more sense to me to try to stop it before it gets into the country rather than to spend money once it is on the street. Drugs are only one issue. Customs is charged with the day-to-day processing of passengers and cargo. Frankly, there probably is not a Member of this body who has not heard a complaint about how long it takes to get through an airport or how long it takes to get cargo processed. I can tell you that employees are a hard working group, but quite frankly there are not enough of them.

The Congress approved funding for almost 500 new positions in last year's appropriation. None of these positions plus approximately 250 other openings have been filled because of the sequester. If Customs is funded at the current level, its ranks will be reduced by at least 700 more positions in the next year. That means that processing will slow and quite possibly ports will be closed or at the very least see reduced hours. I know from my conversations with many Senators that they are opposed to that. I could go on, but I think you all see what I am talking about.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms is also going to suffer and it will impact on revenues. ATF is charged with collecting alcohol and tobacco excise taxes. We have continually given them more responsibility and have insisted that they do it with fewer personnel. ATF collects nearly $12 billion a year in taxes and there is more out there to collect. A freeze will continue at the very least; a hiring freeze, if not further staff reductions. As a result ATF will be strapped.

The Secret Service does not collect revenues or fight drugs, but it fulfills several functions important to the Nation. The obvious role the Secret Service fills is protection of dignitaries. The Service is also charged with protecting the Nation's currency and is very active in fraud dealings with credit cards, food stamps, and other schemes affecting the Treasury. Failure to fund the Service would slow investigations, cost the Treasury money and prevent the Service from its preparation for the upcoming Presidential campaign.

I have touched briefly on what impact the freeze would have on these agencies. I do not believe we want this to happen. To do this we are proposing to take $163 million in budget authority and $84 million in outlays from function 150, international affairs and $100 million in budget authority and $84 million in outlays from function 800, general government an increase function 750 administration of justice by $200 million in budget authority and $168 million in outlays. The Congressional Budget Office has reviewed this amendment and has indicated that this amendment will result in no outlay impact.

Specifically, this amendment will provide the Customs Service with $115 million in budget authority; the Secret Service $35 million in budget authority; and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms by $45 million to provide enhanced domestic law enforcement. We cannot afford large personnel cuts this freeze will cause.

I cannot think of a more necessary amendment to be offered to this budget resolution.

We all know the work that Customs; Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; and the Secret Service provide for this Nation. It is imperative that we keep them at a working level so they can do the job that we have assigned them.

Once again let me tell you that every year that goes by we are adding more duties, responsibilities, and requirements to each of these agencies. They are an important arm of Government.

In most cases they do a great job of collecting revenue. The more we cut them back, the less revenue will be coming into Government.

We certainly urge Senators' positive consideration of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from Arizona and South Dakota.

The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee has indicated in preliminary remarks on this amendment that the Senate has just considered a worthy amendment by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas asking for $25 million for additional immunization. The point that the Budget Committee makes is that offering that kind of amendment does not bring about one inoculation more than we now have. The effect is null because, we cannot provide, cannot authorize and appropriate in a budget resolution.

I think Members generally understand this fact, although I appreciate that many Senators coming to the well during the last debate felt that they were voting for immunization. Some may have felt that foreign aid was as good a target as any to hit for a worthy cause.

I tried to make the point in the debate on the last amendment that we have a series of worthy causes. Fighting drug abuse is certainly one of them. I do not know of a single Member in this body who does not want to fight drug abuse, does not want to fight drug peddlers and smugglers and the whole lot.

Indeed, I have no doubt money will be appropriated, substantial sums to fight these battles. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota is objecting that somehow the amount to fight drugs has simply been frozen at previous levels. In order to address that situation, the proponents of this amendment has decided to go after foreign assistance, the 150 account.

We have already substantiated, Mr. President, that the 150 account has not been frozen at last year's levels. Anybody generally interested in this account would appreciate that the President of the United States asked for $23.7 billion for the 150 function. The Budget Committee has provided after its deliberations $18.3 billion, a cut of $5.4 billion from the Presidential request.

Now, the President's request was not out of thin air. The President's request reflects obligations around the globe. We have to defend ourselves. We should be prepared to help others who want to help defend us. I think that is an important objective.

Let me just say, Mr. President, that I note that the proponents of this amendment have changed their tune from the time that they wrote to their colleagues with regard to this amendment. At that time, they suggested that the foreign assistance programs of the 150 account, might be reduced by $163 million. They suggest in the final paragraph of their "dear colleague" letter, dated April 22, 1986, these words:

> We cannot afford these drastic personnel cuts in our front-line enforcement agencies that play such a role in our antiterrorism, antidrug, anti-explosive and weapons programs here at home. On the other hand, the offsetting cuts to foreign aid and general Government can be accomplished without jeopardizing our important foreign assistance efforts or essential general governmental programs.

They stated categorically that we will not affect those important obligations at all in making these transfers.

As a matter of fact, after the distinguished proponents of the amendment heard the first debate today, they have decided that this amendment is vulnerable if it affects Israel and Egypt. They want to make sure now that the Israeli-Egyptian situation is clearly understood to be off limits. We are almost facing earmarking within earmarking.

It appears the distinguished Senators appreciate that taking after Israel is an interesting argument but not one they want to address today. It is conceivable they might not want to debate the base rights issue either. They might not want to debate embassy security. In fact, as they have listened to the debate on the first amendment, they have decided that the assistance programs in the 150 account may not be so easy a target after all. This country has foreign policy obligations. We have alliances. We prefer other people help us preserve our security. That is what our foreign assistance is all about.

So where do they land? Have they refocused their attention? On the State Department. They suggest, "There is your target, the State Department sitting overseas with diplomats, employees, persons just carrying on general functions of Government."

But those are the people that might be fired because of these cuts. There is just not that kind of money sitting in the State Department.

Mr. President, the request for the State Department for fiscal year 1987 including the enhancement of security for that Department—we are talking about our embassies abroad—was $3.8 billion. The Budget Committee cut that request by $1 billion.

Now, you cannot have it both ways. The proponents of this amendment have tried. As a matter of fact, if you want to cut the embassy security request, say it. That is what you are proposing. The billions supposedly to come out of the State Department budget have already been cut. Diplomats are being laid off. Senior diplomats are on the line and are being retired before they get to the age of 65. As a matter of fact, if they are passed over, they are out.

Now, Members may be beguiled into voting for an easy cut, but you really need to know that the argument is going to be made this time that you are going to be hurting America's security. I appreciate the need to fight drug abuses. I wish there was more funding available for that fight. But I also wish the Budget Committee had not reduced foreign assistance by over $5 billion, had not reduced the State Department by $1 billion. That was not just a freeze but a real hatchet job.

I am here not to argue against your trying to restore funds that I think legitimately could be restored. I am here with the finger in the dyke trying to stop people from running over our foreign assistance and what is left of the State Department budget at this point.

Now, it may have been good politics in the past to cut foreign assistance. I do not think that is true any more. That is why I am going to make this argument vigorously each time a Senator rises to offer what seems to be an appealing transfer amendment, whether it is relating to a health, education, welfare affair, drug abuse, or other programs.

But I would just say to my colleagues, if you have such an amendment, be prepared to discuss it in terms of America's security. Be prepared to describe why your cause has somehow fared worse than America's security has already fared, as exemplified in this particular 150 account.

I have gone through this litany before and I will not do it again but, as a matter of fact, when we come to foreign assistance we are really talking about Israel and Eygpt. We are talking about five bases overseas. We have got just $200 million left for everything else and we have not even touched the Philippines. We have not touched Irish aid. I frankly do not know whether Irish aid ought to fly or not. It has not yet come out of our committee. The Speaker of the House wanted it very badly. But I must tell the Senators, there is no money presently there for it.

There is no money for a lot of things. There is no funding to do the things we need to do for Pakistan, and for our obligations in Afghanistan, and for Cambodian freedom fighters, or for anything in Latin America, given this current budget.

I would advise the Senators that if there are emergencies in this world, we are going to have to come back for supplementals to try to address them. I would also suggest to Senators, since we have become very worried about terrorism around the world and the security of Americans abroad, there may be some sentiment on another day, another cause for funds for this cause. But I would ask Senators to forbear from offering one amendment after another hitting the 150 account. Although it used to be an easy mark, I do not think Americans are going to stand for that approach any more. Americans are going to want to know who it is that is attacking our security programs.

I would just say to Senators you may think it is good politics to offer these amendments, but I think there are consequences to doing that. I think it is irresponsible to come after the 150 account and then, having invaded the 150 account, to begin to alter your arguments looking for the easiest spot left in the 150 account. That approach has only run smack up against the issue of embassy security.

Now, if the proponents of this approach are seriously talking about taking $180 million out of what is left of the payroll of the State Department, fair enough. Detail how many people you want on the pavement. Make that argument, fair and square. But do not tell us in a dear colleague letter that our national security programs will not be touched.

I would just say, Mr. President, that if I take this amendment seriously—and I sound like I do—you are right. I suppose I had hoped that this amendment would not be offered after we made these arguments once before on a very appealing amendment, immunization for children. It is interesting that these amendments bring Senators to the well with the bogus argument that they are choosing immunization for children as opposed to foreign giveaways. But it is not so easy, Mr. President. At least 49 Senators said we are not going to buy that kind of argument anymore. You cannot just wreck our foreign policy by offering an appealing community funding argument, particularly when you offer it, and it will not really inoculate a single additional child.

Mr. President, I hope Members will reject this amendment. I hope they will reject each similar one that follows it. I hope that at least there will be something left of our foreign security programs after we have completed the budget process.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I support very strongly and heartily the eloquent words of our chairman, the Senator from Indiana. He has expressed the problem here clearly for us all. We should bear in mind that the 150 function of the budget has already taken an 11 percent cut below the sequestration levels mandated under Gramm-Rudman. These cuts as recommended by the Budget Committee are the sharpest of any function of the budget. In other words, it has already been cut not to the bone but to the marrow.

Last year the Foreign Relations Committee reported a foreign aid bill for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, the first time this has been done in 4 years. That bill passed the Senate on an overwhelming vote of 75 to 19, and subsequently became law.

Currently, the President is urging $4.4 billion for embassy security enhancement, a quarter of billion dollars for Irish aid, $100 million for the Contras, and just yesterday he submitted a supplemental request of $150 million for the Philippines. I do not see how such requests can be met in a sensible way while the 150 function, already 11 percent below a freeze bill, would be reduced another $163 million if this amendment is adopted.

As far as drug control goes, as the Senator from Arizona knows, I am very much interested in that. I was an original cosponsor of the Senate Drug Commission. I held a hearing in my own State of Rhode Island on the importation of drugs because they have now moved from the Southeastern portion of the United States up to, I regret to say, the Northeast.

I think the functions and responsibilities posed by the Senator from Arizona are important ones, and ones that should be carried out but not carried out at the expense of the State Department which really is our first line of defense. Our Foreign Service must bear the brunt of the battle overseas. They are the ones who actually bear the brunt of the dangers. They are the ones when it comes to hostile times who suffer the most.

I believe I am correct in saying that there were more Foreign Service officers and diplomats killed in the last 25 years than there were generals and admirals in two wars—Korea and Vietnam. These are the kinds of statistics we should bear in mind, especially as terrorism spreads across the globe.

I hope the 150 function will be left alone, and, if the programs advocated by the Senator from Arizona are to be supported let us find some other source of funds. Maybe it would be a good idea to offer an amendment suggesting that money be taken from the Defense Department.

So for all of these reasons I hope that my colleagues will support the tabling motion when it is offered, and I remind them of the overwhelming support that the basic foreign aid bill received only 1 year ago. I hope that sense rather than emotion will prevail in this important matter.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, these debates are really of interest to me. Certainly the Senator from Rhode Island, who has been here far longer than I have, and the Senator from Indiana has been here the same time know these issues. But all of a sudden foreign aid is national security. Now we have cloaked foreign operations and billions of dollars, some to friends, some to enemies, as "national security." In my opinion if it is national security you want to talk about—drug trafficking is a greater national security threat.

If you want to fight and take anything away from foreign aid, boy, you are hurting our national security.

I wonder how many people know that since 1980 to 1986 discretionary foreign operations spending has grown from $7.6 to $14.4 billion; an 89 percent increase.

Some say that is for foreign security, national defense. We know better. This Senator is prepared to stand with anybody on the necessity to influence a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. This Senator has stood firm with Israel and Egypt. This amendment does nothing to touch it. The Senator from Indiana knows that.

Our aid to Israel and to Egypt is $5.2 billion; $3.1 billion is for security assistance, including $2.1 billion for base rights items. That is an $8.3 billion subtotal, leaving $10 billion to absorb a cut of $163 million. You want to talk about national security. Where is it? It is on our U.S. borders today.

Sixty percent of the cocaine that is coming into this country is flying across our Southern borders, all the way from Florida to California. If we cannot find $163 million out of $10 billion left in to combat drug trafficking, then we are not serious about national security and national defense. When we have increased it 89 percent in the last 6 years, there is something wrong here. There is something wrong with your priorities.

Are we interested in our borders? Are we interested in stopping drugs? Hear is a chance, folks; here is a chance to do something about it.

Let me say that we did not take all of this out of the 150 international affairs function, realizing that there are needs there, and this Senator supports many of them, particularly Israel; Egypt; antiterrorism and security. The Senator from Indiana knows where this process is going to go after this budget is passed. It will go to his committee and to the Appropriations Committee. Senator ABDNOR, and myself, Senator ABDNOR being the chairman of the Treasury subcommittee that I am ranking member on, has the general government area of jurisdiction. We took $100 million out of there. So we are not picking on anyone. If we are, we are picking on ourselves, our own turf, so to speak.

We are prepared to do that because we think that the priority insists that we do something about this drug problem; that we do it this year; that we do not put it off; that we stand up, and that we not be afraid to do it.

The Appropriations Committee is going to make the decision of how many staffers the State Department really needs when it comes to appropriating some of that money. I think that is a proper place for that decision to be made.

I do not know about other Senators. But I think the State Department has ample staffing. They do a good job. I am not here to criticize them. I am here to say that we can save money in those administrative accounts.

Certainly it is hard to justify an 89 percent increase in foreign operations appropriations over the last 6 years. In the little bit of time that I have been in this body, if anybody had proposed a 12-percent increase in foreign aid as President Reagan's budget did when it was sent up here, there would be petitions to impeach any other President.

Here we have now decided that, well, it is national security. So anything goes under national security. Well, I am talking about real national security. I am talking about drugs on the streets of Phoenix, AZ. I am talking about the drugs on the streets of Indianapolis, IN, and I am talking about the drugs on the streets of any city in this country.

It comes from our south. That is our line of defense. Our security starts there or should be at least maximized there, and not just overseas.

The Senator from Arkansas points out so well that there is a $232 million market rate loan, or concessionary loan to South Korea. When are the people of this country going to get a chance to see that money. It is spent with an ally that is ripping us off because they are better at the international trade than we are. We have a horrendous deficit with them. If we cannot find 2 percent out of the $10 billion that is left in function 150, we are not very good at our jobs. I think we could do that.

National security is important. Foreign assistance has to play a role in it. Base rights are important, and what have you. But so is our national security at home. But those decisions of how you spend that money and allocate it are going to be made by the Appropriations Committee.

I can assure the Senator from Indiana when we get a chance to mark up those budgets, we are not going to jeopardize those functions he has talked about and those areas. He knows as well as I do of the commitment in this body. He knows better than I do in his own committee, yesterday turning down the sale of sophisticated weapons to Saudi Arabia. A lot of it had to do with our strong, firm commitment to the State of Israel and to the State of Egypt; the Camp David peace accord, and the failure of the Saudis to enter into such an agreement and be part of it.

Mr. President, the case, I think, is clear.

I will give one more quick example. The USIA has increased from $543 million in 1985 to $609 million now—an increase of 11 percent. We see the good work they do in the Voice of America and other functions they have been involved in. But we also see the $400 and $800 hotel bills in Paris, France, for their director and some of their employees, on the basis of, "Well, we have to do a good PR job for the United States."

Nonsense. The people of this country can sell themselves without blowing that kind of money in the foreign assistance accounts.

These are hard facts to face. Nobody likes to talk about foreign aid. We like to cover it any we we can. We want to be sure that it is OK now. They have had some healthy increases in the last few years including a 113-percent increase in outlays since 1980. And a lot of us have to cover for that. What do we do? Put on the cloak of national security. I submit to this body that national security starts right at home with our preparedness, our national defense, our military capability, and what are we going to do about our borders.

Again, this money is cut out of two accounts, not one. One is $163 million for international offers and the other is $100 million out of function 800. So we have not picked on account 150 as the Senator from Indiana wants to lead us to believe, and that we are just taking on an easy mark.

First of all, I wish it was an easy mark, but it is not. Thanks to the capable hands of my friend from Indiana, who is able to defend that mark. But I am tired of that mark being increased at the rates we have seen and the rate we see in budgets year after year.

Mr. ABDNOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I want to say that I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senator from Indiana presented some very eloquent remarks. I cannot say that I agree with or support those remarks, but they were well stated.

I must say, though, that my colleague, the Senator from Arizona, was much more specific on the issues we are talking about.

I am one of those who never thought of foreign aid as national security. I do believe in a strong defense and I have been a strong supporter of defense. I have not been as strong a supporter of foreign aid because I have oftentimes had many questions about it. I would say 90 percent of the people of South Dakota would agree with me when we get on the subject of foreign aid. It is not something they think of in terms of defense.

It made me think the other night about national security when Libya was bombed. Maybe that is national security for America. It was not done by the State Department. They did not take care of that situation. I am sure the State Department has a great part to play in the overall picture of foreign affairs, of course.

But I think the Senator from Arizona has pointed out the vast increase over the last 6 years in foreign aid.

Let us look at the function we are talking about here. We are trying to find some dollars for a problem that really is national security. I think everyone clearly knows the problem that the Defense Department has had with drugs. They are taking steps to try to do something about it. The easiest thing to do is to keep it out of this country entirely. Prevent drugs from coming in. We are doing that. We think we are making some progress. But wherever we try to set up a good defense, we find that the smugglers use new innovation and new equipment to bring drugs into America. It is a constant battle that goes on and on.

We are not trying to only hold the line in defending against smuggling, but we are trying to do it within budget restraints which would require 1,800 fewer personnel than we had a year ago.

I have been on this floor representing the subcommittee for 5 years. I wish you could hear all the requests we have from Members of this body to add additional personnel, additional manpower, to our Customs centers to keep drugs out of this country which are arriving in goods coming into the country. They are seeking hundreds and hundreds of people.

I thought it was very interesting, and I am sure the Senator from Arizona will agree with me, that in the reconciliation provision brought out last year, there was a call for additional IRS people because for every man we were putting on at IRS it would mean more dollars in Government collections, which we could spend on the different functions and responsibilities we have in Government.

Let me tell you one thing. The same thing is true with our Customs agents and with our ATF agents. One of the main purposes of these agencies is to collect revenue.

Everywhere I look we are adding more responsibilities to them. If you think smuggling in cigarettes and alcohol is not going to be good business now that we have greatly increased taxes on those items, forget it, because it is going to be. It is going to be doubly tough. The more we let get away, the fewer dollars we will have in the Treasury.

I can think of other responsibilities in this particular category that we try to deal with. We expect less manpower to deal with more responsibilities.

If I am correct, there is talk of the State Department transferring more responsibilities from the State Department to the Secret Service. I will bet in 1½ years they will have it. That is another little thing that we can slip off to one of our agencies and let them try to get by with what they have.

This sort of thing just is not going to do. As a percentage of function 150 we are talking about a drop in the bucket. If you compare that to what is being done in function 750 it makes a big difference not only in revenue we need to run Government, and everybody is looking for more, but also the important part played in the security of this Nation. I think these are important matters, priorities, each of us in the Senate will have to decide. It is either raise taxes or pick priorities of what we think are important.

If we carefully analyze the responsibilities of each of these functions we have been talking about, we would have to conclude that this amendment we are offering here today is of extreme importance to this country's security.

Mr. LUGAR. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, this amendment must be opposed. While the stated intention of the authors is to enhance efforts to "combat drug trafficking, terrorism and other crimes against the citizens of the United States," I argue that it will have exactly the opposite effect. Unfortunately, this is an example of good intentions gone awry.

What would be the effects of the adoption of this amendment?

American citizens who serve our Government and our institutions in foreign countries would be denied protection which they so clearly need and deserve. Once again, we would have failed to defend against terrorist attacks on U.S. installations and personnel. It is not a rhetorical device; it is not hyperbole to say that adoption of this amendment, with its inevitable reduciton in funds for security measures recommended by the Inman Commission, could result in the loss of life of not only State Department officials and military personnel, but also their children. We must recognize that the next time the terrorist strikes, his cowardly blow could be directed against the children of our Government servants abroad. I will not vote for this amendment.

Let us return to the original intention of the authors of this amendment as stated in their dear colleague letter.

They would take the funding from foreign aid. What would that mean? Funds for narcotics control assistance would be cut. Funds for antiterrorism assistance would be cut.

It strikes me as rather peculiar that the authors of this amendment would seek to curb crime and narcotics abuse and terrorism in the United States after the fact rather than seeking to stop it at its origin. The subcommittee on which the Senator from Arizona and I are privileged to serve has worked very hard over the past several years to improve the narcotics control programs and the antiterrorism program of our foreign assistance.

These programs are meant to meet the threat at the source—not to wait until it appears on the streets of America. You cannot cut foreign aid without cutting these programs. You cannot get something for nothing.

For purposes of argument, let us say that there is no reduction in State Department administrative expenses—which this year means security enhancements—and that the amendment does not touch narcotics control assistance or antiterrorism assistance contained within the foreign aid bill. Where would the reduction fall? The international affairs 150 function in the resolution before us is already $4 billion below the President's request. For foreign aid alone, the resolution assumes sharp reductions in the economic support fund, foreign military sales, and military assistance programs. If we fully fund requests for Israel and Egypt within the amounts allowed in the resolution for these security assistance programs, we would be left with $3.1 billion. If we then subtract funds for the base rights countries, according to agreements we have entered into with Greece, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, and the Philippines, we would be left with $800 million to meet our remaining worldwide commitments.

We now know that the administration will seek additional funding in fiscal year 1986 for the Philippines and its renascent democracy. It would be reasonable to assume that additional amounts will be required in fiscal year 1987. Furthermore, we know that our renewed commitment to Pakistan will call for substantial amounts of funding to preserve the security of this frontline state. What's left? Nothing. Nothing for the whole of Africa; nothing for Central America.

Mr. President, as I said at the beginning of this statement, the amendment is an example of good intentions gone awry. Will the renewed outbreak of conflict in the Middle East, the collapse of democracy in Central America, or an unfettered resurgence in the production and distribution of opium in the golden triangle of Southeast Asia or the poppyfields of Mexico enhance efforts to combat drug trafficking, terrorism, and other crimes against the citizens of the United States? I say no.

I say no to this amendment. I say no to the belief that we can continually raid the foreign assistance programs without paying a price.

That price, Mr. President, is chaos. It is a price we should not be asked to pay. I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment.

(Mr. WILSON assumed the chair.)

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, let me say in the gentlest way possible that I appreciate that Senators, from time to time, have found it difficult to vote for foreign assistance. Maybe they found it difficult to consider that foreign assistance is important to the security of the country. I think it is an argument that needs to be discussed more frequently to be understood more clearly.

Foreign assistance is not, as has been characterized on occasion, a giveaway of funds. We are talking about the very serious business of funding the security of allies so they can purchase military hardware, provide troop training, and provide forces that will make it less necessary for Americans to be in areas we think are in our vital security interests.

Let me mention, Mr. President, that this objective does not come cheaply. The distinguished Senator from Arizona has suggested that from fiscal year 1980 until the present, there may have been an increase of as much as 89 percent in the amounts of money in the 150 account which includes foreign assistance. We are not in a position here, on the floor, to detail the figures or to establish the baselines, but let me suggest this: there are some important changes that have occurred in the way we account for foreign assistance. Those are important to note.

I think it is honest bookkeeping to put the FMS—foreign military sales credits—up front and part of the budget. That is not the way they used to be accounted for when they were guaranteed and off-budget. Roughly $4 billion of the increase is accounted for in that way alone. It is not to give away money. This is security money any way you look at it. It is money that is there now in a way that more easily can be seen and known.

Let me indicate that about $2 billion of the difference has occurred because we are more aware of our needs in the Middle East. If one is to be honest about it, and the distinguished proponents of this bill have affirmed that they do not want to touch the Israeli situation, then let's point out that much of our recent increases have been because we have been more generous to Israel than we used to be. If one is looking at percentage terms, one can account for a good bit of the money in these ways.

We are also more generous to Pakistan. We have taken on a new obligation in Afghanistan, a substantial one. We talk about $600 million for Pakistan. That also is very different from what we used to do.

Maybe Senators will say we are not sure that this is military security or national security. The charge is made, in a way, by the distinguished Senator from Arizona that when we talk about foreign assistance as national security, we are cloaking—cloaking—giveaways in national security garb. I do not see any cloaking. I think it is time we understood what the national security interests of our country are and how they are provided for.

There is mention that it is not national security we are touching, but the State Department or general government operations, and the international broadcasting. I suppose the broadcasting aspect is arguable, and maybe Senators would feel that the extension of America's word behind the Iron Curtain has now been intensified. That is arguable. I feel we are doing a much better job in terms of freedom. That does have something to say about our national security. Our ability to manage the Soviet relationship is part of our national security.

Finally, Mr. President, I say whatever case may be made for our borders with regard to drug abuse and drug smuggling, all the opponents of this bill are saying is that those efforts have been frozen at those levels.

Some of us have tried to make the case that the 150 account has been cut very substantially, not only below what the President asks for, but what was appropriated last year, what was authorized last year, what the Budget Committee started with, and where they finished. It has been cut substantially. Every program in the 150 account has been cut.

I would just say that at some point, Senators have to understand what security is all about and what influences the way people perceive our country abroad.

I mention this thought. As the distinguished Senator from Hawaii pointed out, a good bit of work with regard to the drug problem occurs through the valued talents of Foreign Service officers and other personnel who operate abroad under funding provided in the 150 account.

I do appreciate the point made by the distinguished Senator from Arizona that he is worried about the streets of Phoenix and I am worried about the streets of Indianapolis. I once had some responsibility for assisting law enforcement in my city and at that time we did not look to the Federal Government for assistance. We might now if I was still in that capacity. We had to fight it with our own local taxes, with some benefits from the State of Indiana. We used to do it the old-fashioned way and we had to do it with very limited resources. We saw the national security situation handled by the Federal Government.

There are problems with regard to our borders, international problems. Everyone in this debate would like to do more with regard to that. But the proponents of this amendment did not ask for additional moneys or additional revenues that the taxpayers of this country might provide. Instead, they looked toward the 150 account. I think that was a mistake tactically. I hope it proves to be a mistake because I believe there are important goals being served by diminished sums of money available in the 150 account.

Mr. President, I know of no one on our side who wishes to debate further. As soon as the distinguished proponents of the bill are prepared to yield back their time, we are prepared to yield back our time. For the moment I yield the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Hawaii, who I have the greatest respect for and who serves as ranking member on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, talked about the International Narcotics Control Program in the State Department, which is a very important area and an important program. If I am not mistaken, that program is roughly at $65 million. That is $65 million out of a budget amount here of $18.3 billion.

Our cut in function 150 is a little less than 2 percent. Two percent off of $65 million or $1.3 million, and what do we get in exchange for that? We get $163 million for Customs to stop those airplanes that are coming from some of these countries—$1.3 million is a good tradeoff to get more drug interdiction at our borders.

So we are not going to cut and hurt the international narcotics effort in the State Department. What we are going to do is stop those narcotics at the border through our air interdiction program.

I have some interesting statistics just to wind this up for today. Budget outlays for foreign aid, since President Reagan took office, have grown 113 percent. Military assistance grants in the past 6 years have grown 580 percent. Foreign military sale credits since 1980 have grown 96 percent. Economic support fund assistance has grown 80 percent. And the USIA, with those big suites in Paris and expenditures by the director and some of his staff, has grown 87 percent. Nobody is against the Voice of America. We are talking about less than a 2-percent cut out of a USIA that has grown 87 percent. And the State Department operating expenses during that period of time have grown by about 80 percent.

Now, do not tell this Senator and do not tell the people of Arizona or any place else that less than a 2-percent cut in international affairs in order to give us the necessary resources to do something about drugs coming across our borders, cannot be absorbed in function 150. I submit that it can.

U.S. ANTITERRORIST CAPABILITIES

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from South Dakota and Arizona, and to speak on behalf of an interest all my fellow Senators share: The protection of American citizens from the scourge of terrorism.

Recent world events have demonstrated that we must maintain constant vigilance in the war against international terrorism. The threat of terrorism is not absent in this Nation, but has been so effectively blunted by our domestic law enforcement agencies that we sometimes forget that terrorists have struck domestic targets and will surely attempt to do so in the future. With the Libyan terrorist network aroused and seeking vengeance against an American target, now is hardly the time to grow lax in our war against domestic acts of fanatical violence.

The amendment under consideration would contribute greatly to prevention of terrorism on our shores, and I am proud to join Senators ABDNOR and DECONCINI in sponsoring this legislation. I am also convinced that adequate funding levels for domestic antiterrorism cannot wait until fiscal 1987 and that recent events require this body to immediately restore the funds eliminated by the March 1 sequestration order. To offset this reduction, I will be proposing an amendment to the 1986 supplemental appropriations bill, and have informed the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Subcommittee of my intention to do so.

My amendment would simply restore the funding to the FBI, BATF, INS, Customs Service, and Secret Service that was cut by the Gramm-Rudman law. Like the amendment under consideration, my amendment will have an offset to ensure that it is also deficit neutral. Specifically, I will be proposing that NATO funding is reduced by the amount required by my amendment.

Mr. President, we must stand firm in the face of international terrorism, and provide our domestic law enforcement agencies with the financial ability to maintain their vigilance. I urge my colleagues to support my amendment to give these agencies this ability in the present year, and to support my distinguished colleagues in preserving our antiterrorist capabilities in the coming year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I know of no further debate on this amendment. I yield to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, Senator RUDMAN will not be here until Tuesday, and because debate on this amendment will end Monday I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to speak for 5 minutes, if he so desires, before the vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, let me indicate to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, apparently the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee would not want me to yield back all time on this side. I understand that is probably true on both sides.

I have no idea as to what the order of business will be on Tuesday. I suppose we are coming up to votes at that point. We have no objection to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire having an opportunity to speak for 5 minutes on that day.

Mr. ABDNOR. We are not sure. He indicated that he would like to have 5 minutes before the vote on Tuesday so that he may speak at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I have sought the floor today to speak in dismay about the budget process. I cannot speak in support of the pending budget resolution, the so-called Domenici-Chiles package. I would begin my comments by repeating the advice an Irishman gave to a traveler seeking directions. He said, "If I was you, I wouldn't start from here." I would like to offer this same advice to my colleague from New Mexico, the chairman of the Budget Committee.

There have been a number of bizarre occurrences affecting the budget process of late. First, we have the perennial expectation that the Congress will not meet any of the timetables set for generating a budget resolution. This coupled with the certainly that we will have a reconciliation bill before us at some point during the year. The process has gotten so backed up that the reconciliation bill which we were working on last year was signed into law only a few weeks ago. I expect at some point in the not-too-distant future, we will have to simply skip an entire fiscal year because we have gotten so far behind in the budget process. This would not be too bad if we could also skip the Federal spending for that lost fiscal year as well. However, I doubt that we would ever fail to pass a continuing resolution, no matter how much it disarrays the budget process.

This year is proving to be no different than any recent year. The House of Representatives refuses to do anything to develop a budget resolution, with the exception of a gratuitous, partisan vote rejecting the President's proposed budget for this fiscal year. The Senate Budget Committee has forged ahead to produce the budget resolution now pending in the Senate. In light of what the committee has produced, it may have been preferable to adopt the House posture and do nothing.

The committee resolution is obnoxious for several reasons. In the first place, budget levels for defense are mischievous in that they create the illusion that we are meeting our rearmament goals. However, the Domenici-Chiles resolution is $25 billion below the President's budget request for fiscal year 1987 authority and $28 billion below the budget authority provided in the Senate's version of the budget resolution only last year. What may we ask, happens to the resolve of the Budget Committee in matters of national security? I will tell you what national survival is sacrificed on the altar of perceived political survival. Having talked so bravely about defense waste, they suddenly convinced themselves there was only waste and no need. While the final 1985 budget resolution had a lower defense number than the Senate version, it did provide for 3 percent real growth for fiscal year 1987.

The pending budget resolution does not provide the 3 percent growth. Defense spending is basically frozen. From a strategic perspective, this is a dangerous freeze. When President Reagan assumed office in 1981, he pledged to reverse the "decade of neglect" in defense spending. He also expressed his determination to respond to the burgeoning Soviet military menace. During the 10 years while we let our military forces slip in every regard, the Russians were relentlessly building their military forces. Since 1970, the Soviets have outspent the United States by $500 billion in expenditures on weapons, facilities, and research.

Since 1981, we have attempted to close this gap, to rebuild our Armed Forces. The first budget resolution under the Reagan administration set defense spending targets with this objective in mind. Despite the need to improve our military forces, defense outlays have been reduced, by the Congress, a total of $177 billion between fiscal years 1982 and 1986 below the target spending first outlined in 1981. Obviously, we have not gone on the proverbial drunken spree when it comes to defense spending during the 1980's. All we have done is try to reverse the de facto disarmament of the 1970's.

The resolution reported by the Budget Committee is a proposal based on compromise. Often, in politics, compromise is the necessary route to soothe passions and establish public policy. In this spirit of compromise, defense spending was sacrificed. This is compromise which does not work. It is doubtful that Libya will give up terrorism as an official state policy because the United States will spend less money on defense. The Soviet Union will not withdraw its army of occupation in Afghanistan because we are reducing military spending. And, Cuba will not forego its attempts to foster red colonialism in Central America if the Senate adopts this compromise defense budget. The real world can present a harsh face at times, and it does us little good to compromise in confronting this reality.

Another aspect of the budget which is utterly fraudulent is the requirement for a tax increase. Just at the moment when we have quenched the fires of inflation, when the economy has been set for a period of long-term growth, we are asked to crush the recovery. There is one incentive in public policy to spur real economic growth in the private sector. That incentive is stable taxes. But, now we are expected to pass a tax increase. This battle had been fought in 1984, and 49 States voted against a tax increase. President Reagan has adamantly opposed any new taxes.

Now, under the guise of balancing the budget, we are asked to provide a tax increase. However, even before the collapse of inflation in recent months, both OMB and CBO produced 5-year forecasts showing the deficit declining to less than 2 percent of GNP by 1990, without additional budget cuts or new taxes. But, we are being asked to increase taxes. We are falling on purpose into a trap. Since the deficits are already on a downward path, then the hidden purpose of a tax increase is evident. It is an excuse for a new outburst of Federal domestic spending. In 1984, we did pass a tax increase with the Deficit Reduction Act. We have yet to see 1 cent of this increase to go for deficit reduction. Instead, the revenue has gone for increased Federal spending. Some here in Congress have not learned the lessons of the 1960's and 1970's. They want an expanded Federal sector meddling in every aspect of our lives. While we thought Big Brother died in 1984, the Budget Committee seeks to resurrect him in 1986.

The tax reductions enacted in the early 1980's have been blamed for the current deficits—most vociferously by those seeking a tax increase. This is one of those inaccuracies which repeated often enough become part of the popular mythology. And, before we know it, taxes will be increased.

What really happened with taxes since 1981 is that the net effect of the cut in individual rates has merely protected the American worker from being pushed into higher tax brackets because of inflation. We have not cut taxes, we have simply neutralized the Tax Code for inflation. The cuts in corporate rates have restructured such taxes to eliminate disincentives to invest in productive plant and equipment. The cuts also removed some of the inflationary bias in corporate taxes.

In brief, defense spending over the past 5 years has focused on improved military preparedness to recover from past neglect. Tax reductions have kept taxes neutral for inflation. It is no secret that we are now faced with significant budget deficits—not as far in the future as we can see, but at least for the next 4 years. Taxes and defense are blamed, but the actual problem is continued domestic spending. Over the past 5 years, our so-called budget-slashing efforts have actually merely slowed the growth in domestic spending. It was not until last year that the deficit took a downward path, thanks only to cuts in defense spending rather than domestic spending.

The President has three budget goals: No tax increase; maintenance of defense spending; protection of Social Security. The only goal met by the budget resolution is the last one—it protects Social Security from budget cuts. By asking us to approve higher taxes and lower defense spending, we are left no choice but to reject this resolution. Rejecting this resolution does not mean we would not have a budget; it would not initiate the automatic budget cuts of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

We do have an alternative. We should revive the budget resolution passed by the Senate last year. This resolution would provide $81 billion in budget reductions over 3 years above what the Domenici-Chiles resolution provides. It does not increase taxes. It does provide for small real growth in defense spending. It is a resolution that would lead to a budget surplus by 1990 if current budget assumptions are adjusted to reflect the actual price of oil. This is a sensible alternative. I suggest that we reject the pending resolution and adopt the resolution put together by Chairman DOMENICI last year. By this single bold stroke, we would reject the popular myths that have grown up around, and disturbed, the budget process. Mythology usually requires a hero to triumph over some monstrous evil. It is time for the Senate to become the hero, slay the dragon of deficits, throw off the sequestering haircoat, and proudly wear the victory laurels of autumn.

ANDREWS/HOLLINGS EDUCATION AMENDMENT

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I strongly supported the amendment offered yesterday by Senators ANDREWS and HOLLINGS to the concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1987 to restore funding for function 500 by $1.2 billion for fiscal year 1987. The amendment restores funding for the basic education programs to current service levels plus inflation.

Although we are facing a deficit crisis, I voted for the Andrews-Hollings amendment because I happen to believe that education must remain a national priority. Adequate funding for education is essential for continued growth and development of our country. As a Member of Congress, I feel that it is my responsibility to ensure that the education of our children remains protected as insurance against a faulty future.

Although the cost of the amendment is offset through unspecified revenue increases, it is not my intent nor my desire that any of these funds come from an increase in personal income taxes.

Mr. President, there are approximately 25 million Americans who cannot read the front page of a newspaper and an additional 35 million who read below the level needed to function successfully in our society. These statistics are shocking and shameful and should be enough for us to realize that education has to be one of our national priorities. Report after report supports these embarrassing figures. Reducing our commitment to education can only exacerbate this already intolerable problem.

We do have many challenges facing us today and the budget deficit is at the top of the list. However, our jobs as elected officials are to establish priorities and to balance the budget. I am committed to both of these goals.

In an alert, prepared by the Committee for Education Funding, we are reminded by its member organizations that we cannot continue to mortgage our children's future in order to finance the budget deficit. We cannot deny educational opportunities and other vital services to children if we intend to remain a leader in the free world.

Mr. President, I wish to state once more I supported the Andrew-Hollings amendment because education is a priority. I want to reiterate, however, that the increased revenue necessary to fund the amendment should not and must not come from an increase in personal income taxes. There are numerous ways to obtain the necessary revenues to fund this modest increase for education. The most obvious example is a minimum corporate tax.

It is simply not right or equitable that profitable U.S. corporations, through skillful and legal manipulations of the Tax Code, avoid paying taxes. Let's look at the tax record of some of our largest corporations.

In 1983 General Dynamics received DOD contracts totaling $6.6 billion; they showed a profit that same year of $492.5 million but paid no dollars in corporate income tax to the Federal Government.

General Electric had $4.5 billion in DOD contracts in 1983; they had a profit of $2.4 billion, yet paid no dollars in corporate income tax.

Also, in 1983, the Boeing Corp. received $4.4 billion in DOD contracts; their annual statement showed a profit of $475 million; they, too, paid no tax.

If these corporations paid a minimum corporate tax, we could easily fund this education amendment and many other vital services. For these reasons and those raised by my colleagues, I supported the Andrews-Hollings education amendment and was pleased that it was adopted by such an overwhelming vote.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I know of no further debate on this amendment tonight. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 6:20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

KURT WALDHEIM

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise to address the matter of Kurt Waldheim. Last night marked the beginning of the Jewish festival of Passover. Our Jewish colleagues, friends, and fellow citizens gathered in their homes at their tables, in the peace and freedom of our beloved America, to participate in the first of two ritual Passover meals. These meals—memorializing ceremonies which once took place in the high temple in Jerusalem—celebrate two great events in history: The deliverance of the Jews from bondage and the threat of extermination; and the definitive appearance of the one God before a multitude of ordinary humanity—of whom He intended to create a nation that would bear his mark and hold his covenant. It is, arguably, a seminal religious event, since we may trace from it not only the lines that run to present day Judaism but to the worlds of Christianity and of Islam.

All those partaking of the Passover Seder are deeply aware that the exodus from Egypt was merely the first in a series of miraculous escapes from certain doom, across the millenna and right down to our own times, within the memory of the living. Indeed, it is our own epoch—the epoch of industrial technology, of science, of enlightenment—which will carry forever the blot of having produced the single most concerted and barbaric assault upon the continuity of the Jewish people, and, indeed as a member of other nations as well. The record of Nazi activities during the Holocaust staggers the mind, and defies any explanation that ignores the reality of Evil as a force at large in the world.

That is why for me it seems unusually appropriate to take up, on this day, the subject of Kurt Waldheim, former Secretary General of the United Nations and now candidate for the Presidency of the Republic of Austria.

Every man's reputation must be held sacred, and by none more than those of us who speak in this Chamber without fear of prosecution for libel. And so, I shall restrict myself to an accounting of what I have learned.

In memoirs and in biographical statements, Mr. Waldheim claims that he spent the wartime years of 1942 to 1944 recuperating from wounds received on the eastern front and studying for his law degree in Vienna. For 40 years, the world believed this. But Nazi war documents bearing Waldheim's own signature conclusively reveal that during those years he continued to serve in the Balkan countries, and that he was involved in atrocities the likes of which we have seen in the cases of Josef Mengele, Klaus Barbie, and Adolf Eichmann.

Waldheim's Nazi connections can be traced back earlier than 1942. According to documents found in the Austrian Archives, he joined the Nazi Student Union on April 1, 1938, 3 weeks after the incorporation of Austria into the Third Reich. Later that year, on November 18, he joined a mounted unit of the Sturmabteilung (S.A.), better known in this country as the Brownshirts. That same month, the Brownshirts were involved in a horrific night of violence and murder, the Kristallnacht, where they killed Jews, burned their homes and synagogues, looted their shops, and kidnaped and tortured the survivors in cities all over Germany and Austria.

When confronted by this evidence, Waldheim first denied it, then said that these organizations were only garden variety parts of the Nazi social structure, and finally claimed that his father—whom he previously said had nothing to do with the Nazis—had signed him up.

In 1939, Waldheim entered the military and in 1942, according to German military records, was assigned to the German Army command headquartered in Salonika, Greece. He served with rank of oberleutnant to Gen. Alexander von Lohr, under whose command numerous atrocities against Serbian, Croatian, and Greek civilians took place. Lohr was hanged as a Nazi war criminal in 1947.

The organizational chart of the German high command places Waldheim at the head of section 03, a division whose responsibilities included delivering intelligence briefings to the chief of staff; carrying out the zunder-auffgaffen—special tasks—such as deportations, assassinations, and mass terror; and interrogating prisoners, which sometimes required the torture of American, British, French, and Balkan citizens.

While General Lohr and his oberleutnant directed operations in the Balkans, the Ustasha—Croatian fascists—brought about the wholesale destruction of the Jews of Yugoslavia and Greece—with direct aid from their Nazi friends. The Kozara massacre, which is to Yugoslavians what Auschwitz is to Jews, was carried out under the orders of the German commander of the Southeast command. In June 1942, 45,000 troops were given the task of encircling and destroying all Serbian and Jewish partisan units in the Kozara and Posara mountains. All those captured were to be shot dead and the male population over the age of 14 was to be transported to concentration camps. By the end of July, German and Ustasha soldiers had combed the mountains, set fire to the villages, and killed 500 of the wounded partisans. Out of 70,000 villagers—mostly women, children, and old people, 25,000 were dead or left to die of starvation. Others were taken to the Ustasha camp, where only a few prisoners escaped.

On September 9, 1942, the Ustasha awarded Waldheim with the King Zvonimir medal for "merit under fire." Of the 45,000 troops, only 3 soldiers received this honor from fascists—one of them was Waldheim.

Six months later, Waldheim left Croatia for Greece, where the Germans began to deport Salonika's 46,000 Jews, 45,000 of them to Auschwitz and the rest to Bergen-Belsen. Waldheim claims that, living 4 miles outside of Salonika, he knew nothing of this mass deportation. He claims that he was only an interpreter, not mentioning that he would necessarily be privy to intelligence about such a major "special task." In his position as head of section 03, he would have been expected to help supervise the operation.

Another campaign in which Waldheim took part was the "Black Operation" of May 1943, where prisoners of the German and Italian commands in the area were shot en masse. Wednesday's Washington Post cites a Yugoslavian report stating that Waldheim took part in "murder" and "putting hostages to death" from April 1944 to May 1945.

This latest evidence was part of a U.N. War Crimes Commission file kept in U.N. vaults for the past 38 years. In 1948, the Commission assigned Waldheim's case its highest classification, one reserved for suspects like Mengele and Eichmann whom the Commission believed should merit prosecution. There is painful irony in the fact that during the decade while Waldheim was Secretary General of the United Nations, his war crimes file—with its summary of the evidence gathered against him—gathered dust in the U.N. basement.

Whether or not Kurt Waldheim is a war criminal is something that ought to have been established decades ago in a court of law. I believe the emerging facts may lead many people to firm conclusions, but we shall never have an ultimate test before the bar of justice. On the other hand, whether or not Kurt Waldheim is an honest man is, in my opinion, already known. His is a career built upon a foundation laid across a concealed and denied past, spent at the center of some of the most brutal events since the atrocities of Genghis Kahn. He is a man who acknowledges the truth about his past only insofar as others succeed in driving him from the safety of one lie to the next.

Mr. President, the people of Austria must soon judge the candidacy of Kurt Waldheim. Many in this country and abroad may believe that their decision ought not to be embarassed by accusations such as these. But there is no choice. What was hidden has found its voice. It is the voice of innocent people slaughtered by the millions, of whom the Jews were first in number though among a multitude of nationalities. No man whose life's path led him into the heart of that darkness was ever fit for public office. No man who built a life by denying such a past should ever hold high public trust again.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my statement there be printed in the RECORD the prepared statement of Eli Rosenbaum, general counsel of the World Jewish Congress, delivered before a committee of the other body 2 days ago.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ELI M. ROSENBAUM, GENERAL COUNSEL, WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to appear today to testify on behalf of the World Jewish Congress with respect to the WJC's ongoing investigation of the wartime activities of former United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

At the outset, I would like to stress that our investigation of this exceedingly complex case is still a very young one. Although we have learned and revealed to the world many previously concealed facts about Kurt Waldheim's past, we expect to unearth a great deal of additional information in the coming weeks, months and years. This information will, without exception, be made available to the public.

From the time that this investigation was authorized by our president, Edgar M. Bronfman, the WJC's goal has simply been to uncover the full unvarnished truth. Regrettably, this task has been complicated immeasurably by Dr. Waldheim's continued dissembling about his past. As a result, we are faced with one of the most complex Nazi investigations ever undertaken anywhere, one that will take a long time to complete. If I may be permitted to offer a comparison, it would be with the case of Klaus Barbie, the "Butcher of Lyons." Barbie's activities were largely confined to the area of Lyons, France. He has not yet come to trial, despite the fact that investigators gathered evidence about him for many years prior to his transfer from Bolivia to France in 1983, and have continued to do so during the nearly three years that he has been in French custody. Waldheim, by comparison, was active on the Russian Front and thereafter throughout the Balkans. He served on the staff of the High Command of an Army Group of some 400,000 men, which Command created hundreds of thousands—if not millions—of documents, which are now scattered among archives throughout the world.

We are keenly interested, as well, in determining how Kurt Waldheim was able to carry off this elaborate deception over a period of fully four decades. The WJC, which possesses official non-governmental organization (NGO) status at the United Nations, is profoundly saddened by the manner in which Waldheim was able to defile that important world body—an organization which, ironically, was formed in response to the horrors perpetrated by the Nazis and their acolytes.

The revelations concerning Kurt Waldheim's past have emanated principally from two sources. The facts of his prewar activities have come to light primarily as a result of the work of a number of Austrian journalists. The key disclosures pertaining to Waldheim's wartime whereabouts and activities have come from my organization. I would like, with the Chairman's permission, to review very briefly the most salient facts revealed to date, and then to present some information bearing upon Kurt Waldheim's credibility—or, more correctly, his obvious lack of same.

As a result of the investigative efforts of a small group of Austrian journalists, we now have documents showing irrefutably that Kurt Waldheim, who has long boasted of his purported anti-Nazi attitude before and during the war, actually belonged to at least three Nazi organizations. On April 1, 1938 only three weeks after Austria became part of the German Reich—he was enrolled as a member of the Nazi Student Union (NS-Studentenbund). Then, on November 18, 1938—less than two weeks after the infamous anti-Jewish rampage now known as "The Night of Broken Glass" (Kristallnacht)—Waldheim became a member of a mounted unit of the dreaded Sturmabteilung (SA)—Hitler's brownshirted stormtroopers. Finally, Waldheim also was enrolled as a member of the NS-Reiterkorps, a mounted affiliate of the Nazi Party.

Kurt Waldheim's military service during the Second World War began with his participation in the 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union while serving with the 45th Infantry Division of the Wehrmacht. On December 18 of that year, he was briefly hospitalized as a result of a minor wound which had become infected. In countless statements over the years made in books, articles, compaign literature and the like, Waldheim has falsely stated in the most deliberate and cunning fashion that his military service ended with this hospitalization. For example, in his 1977 book, "The Challenge of Peace," he writes as follows at page 24:

"The knowledge that I was serving in the German Army was hard to bear. Deliverance from my bitter situation finally came when our unit moved into active combat on the Eastern Front in 1941. I was wounded in the leg and medically discharged.

"By the time I was repatriated [to Vienna] in 1942, it had become impossible to leave the country. The borders had been closed and were being heavily patrolled. Everywhere the most ordinary movement was restricted, and the authorities dealt arbitrarily with anyone who did not conform to the regulations. I was permitted to resume my studies toward a Doctorate in Law, which I obtained some two years later."

In fact, records obtained by the WJC from archives in West Berlin state that Waldheim returned to active service after only two-and-one-half months convalescence and leave. As he now admits, he was assigned to the staff of Army High Command 12 (AOK 12) in the Balkans, arriving in Yugoslavia by April 1942 attached to the Command Staff of the "Combat Group West- Bosnia" (Kampfgruppe Westbosnien). Except for a few brief leaves, Waldheim would spend the rest of the war serving in the Balkans in the armed forces of Nazi Germany.

During the summer of 1942, the Kampfgruppe Westbosnien directed a notoriously brutal anti-partisan campaign in the area of the Kozara mountain range. Thousands of anti-Nazi resistance fighters and unarmed civilians were slaughtered and more than 60,000 persons—primarily women and children—were deported to concentration camps in what has come to be known as the Kozara Massacres. At the U.S. National Archives, we located last month a contemporaneous German account which candidly referred to the operation as a "final liquidation" of "Untermenschen" (subhumans) carried out "without pity or mercy," because only "a cold heart can command what needs to be commanded." This is language of a type ordinarily seen only in SS documents—not in Wehrmacht reports. The very first page appended to this report is a listing of 34 men singled out for meritorious service—just 34 men among the 15,000 to 25,000 Axis forces engaged in that operation. Lieutenant Waldheim is number 25 on the list. For his exemplary service, Waldheim also received a high award of the notorious Nazi puppet government of Coratia: the"King Zvonimir" medal, conferred in silver with oakleaves "for service under enemy fire." Documents obtained from archives in Yugoslavia show that Waldheim was recommended for this award by no less a personage than Generalmajor Friederich Stahl, the Wehrmacht officer who directed Mount Kozara operation. After the war, Stahl admitted to his Allied questioners that he had authorized "reprisal" executions of civilians, pursuant to which as many as 100 unarmed civilians would be murdered for every German solider killed by the resistance.

In December 1942, Waldheim was promoted to Oberleutnant (First Lieutenant). On or about March 31 of the following year, he arrived in Salonika, Greece, as a senior intelligence officer in Ic/AO (intelligence) group of the High Command of Army Group E (which had absorbed the former AOK 12 as of January 1943). His commander-in-chief was the notorious Wehrmacht General Alexander Loehr, who was hanged after the war as a Nazi war criminal.

In conjunction with the SS, Wehrmacht personnel serving under General Loehr directed the deportation of the Jewish community of Salonika to the Auschwitz death camp—where they were immediately killed in the gas chambers. These deportations began some two weeks before Waldheim's arrival and were largely completed by mid-May. During this two-month period, more than 40,000 Jews were transported to Poland. Nearly every day, 2,000 to 2,500 Jewish men, women and children were stuffed into Wehrmacht trains and hauled off to Auschwitz. Waldheim insists that he not only had nothing to do with this atrocity, but that he did not even notice that any Jews disappeared. One-fifth of the population vanished in just two months, and, incredibly, Kurt Waldheim saw and heard nothing of it. Last month, Col. Roman Loos, the former head of the German Geheimfeldpolizei (Secret Field Police) in the area was quoted by the Associated Press as exclaiming, "He didn't know about that? That was known to everybody."

Captured German documents housed at the U.S. National Archives shed considerable light on Waldheim's responsibilities while serving on the staff of the man whom historian Gerald Reitlinger characterized as "perhaps more implicated in Jewish deportations than any other Wehrmacht commander."

A December 1, 1943 organization chart for Army Group E (Microfilm Series T-311, Roll 181, Frame 0007) states that Waldheim was the chief "03" officer in Group Ic/AO. His listed responsibilities included: preparing and presenting morning and evening briefings for the General Staff, prisoner interrogations in Greece and adjacent areas, as well as unspecified "Sonderaufgaben"—"special tasks." Such terminology was of a type used by the Nazis to denote operations too distasteful to describe further—typically, secret measures of mass terror or torture, kidnapping and execution.

Waldheim's responsibility for prisoner interrogations extended through much of the Balkans, and included interrogations conducted inside and outside Army Group E's headquarters. Interrogation under the Germans often involved torture, and usually ended in execution. We have not yet located any survivors of such interrogations. It should be noted that the word "prisoners" is not necessarily limited to military POWs. In this theatre, it referred to partisans and civilians as well.

According to the aforementioned captured document, Waldheim was also responsible for personnel matters within the intelligence group. In intelligence, this was an especially sensitive area, particularly after the attempt on Hitler's life, when the "political reliability" of personnel achieved paramount importance.

On May 22, 1943, Waldheim took part in an important meeting at the airstrip in Podgorica, Yugoslavia. He appears in a now-famous photograph of that meeting released last month by the World Jewish Congress. Attended by Wehrmacht, Waffen-SS and Italian officers, the meeting soon degenerated into a heated quarrel over who was to direct the so-called "Black Operation" ("Unternehmen Schwarz"). That operation, one of the most brutal anti-partisan campaigns of the war, was already well under way at the time of the meeting at the airstrip. According to Professor Jozo Tomasevich, the shooting of partisan prisoners—long standard operating procedure for Axis forces in Europe—"reached its peak" during the Black Operation.

Dozens of intelligence reports signed by Waldheim have been found by World Jewish Congress researchers at the U.S. National Archives. Time after time, Waldheim reported on "Sauberung" ("cleansing" or "mopping up") operations—an expression often employed by the Germans as a euphemism for mass executions and/or deportations.

One secret report signed by Waldheim was actually used by U.S. prosecutors at Nuremberg as evidence of Nazi war crimes committed in Greece. The report, dated August 11, 1944, is part of Nuremberg document NOKW-935. Read in open court on August 18, 1947 at the Palace of Justice in Nuremberg, the document reports on mass shootings in Athens. Ominously, it also identifies the area south of Iraklion on the island of Crete as one of widespread partisan activity. Under orders issued by General Loehr a year earlier, such activity was to be responded to by "shooting or hanging of hostages, destruction of the surrounding localities, etc." (Nuremberg document NOKW-155). Indeed, document NOKW-935 reveals that two days after Waldheim's report, German forces launched a reprisal "cleansing operation" southwest of Iraklion, in which two villages were destroyed and twenty hostages were shot to death.

According to testimony given by former Wehrmacht colleagues of Waldheim to the Yugoslav War Crimes Commission, Waldheim was deeply involved in the planning of other brutal reprisal measures. These witnesses reportedly testified that Waldheim made recommendations for such reprisals, for approval by his immediate superior officer. One witness—Egbert Hilker—testified that Waldheim was specifically responsible for a reprisal committed in October 1944, when three villages between the towns of Kocani and Stip were burned. 114 people perished in this reprisal.

As a result of documentary and testimonial evidence gathered on Waldheim by the Yugoslav War Crimes Commission, it concluded in a December 18, 1947 decision that Waldheim was a fugitive Nazi war criminal whose extradition to Yugoslavia is "mandatory." Waldheim was subsequently listed as an accused Nazi criminal by the United Nations War Crimes Commission. Thus, during the ten years that Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim sat on the 38th floor of the United Nations building in New York, elsewhere in the U.N. complex there was to be found a U.N. War Crimes Commission file on Nazi war crimes suspect number 79/724—"Waldheim, Kurt."

Waldheim was also listed in 1948 on the final "Central Registry of War Criminals and Security Suspects" (CROWCASS) compiled by the United States Army. Under the heading "reason wanted," there is a one-word entry: "murder." The WJC is troubled by the fact that the Department of the Army, in responding to my February 10, 1986 Freedom of Information Act request for all pre-1950 documents referring or relating to Waldheim, supplied us with three innocuous documents, none of which related to Waldheim's military service. The Army insisted that these were the only locatable Army documents responsive to our request.

One can readily imagine our shock upon subsequently discovering Waldheim's name on a CROWCASS list at the National Archives. This episode is particularly distressing in light of my experience while serving from 1980 through 1983 as a trial attorney with the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations—the special unit of the Criminal Division responsible for investigating and prosecuting suspected Nazi war criminals residing in the United States. In each of OSI's more than one thousand investigations, a request for a background check has routinely been forwarded to the Department of the Army. Never in my experience was there an instance in which the fact that an individual was listed in the CROWCASS registry failed to emerge in the Army's response to an OSI request for information on that individual.

Unfortunately, time does not permit me to recite the full littany of Kurt Waldheim's misrepresentations concerning his past. A few examples my be instructive, however. Incredibly, Waldheim continues to deny membership in the SA, NS-Studentenbund, and NS-Reiterkorps. This denial, however, has been of an "on again, off again" variety. Since the controversy over his past erupted last month, Waldheim has, on a few occasions, actually admitted these memberships. He has offered a bizarre series of mutually exclusive "explanations" for these affilations, including: (1) he belonged to groups that were later "absorbed" by the Nazi organizations, (2) his father enrolled him without his knowledge, and (3) he joined in order to be able to continue his university studies.

An indication of Waldheim's lack of integrity in responding to the facts which have been discovered about his past may be found in a document which he has distributed in the United States through his son, Gerhard. The document purports to be a compilation of statements made by prominent invdividuals in support of the elder Waldheim. Among those said to support him are Javier Perez de Cuellar, the current U.N. Secretary-General, famed Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal, former Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, and Holocaust historian Professor Hagen Fleischer.

However, on April 18, Mr. Alvaro de Soto, Special Assistant to Secretary-General Perez de Cuellar, advised the WJC that the Secretary-General had never made any statement of support for Waldheim in connection with the inquiry into the latter's past.

The WJC has collected some of the statements made on the Waldheim affair by the other individuals just mentioned. These statements in fact are quite condemnatory of Waldheim. Thus, Simon Weisenthal has said, "I don't believe that he knew nothing about the deportations of the Jews during the time he was in Greece (Newsweek, April 7, 1986). Professor Fleischer has charged that Waldheim's claim not to have known about deportations from Salonika in 1943 is "not credible" and his claim of ignornance regarding the 1944 deportations of Jews from Crete, Rhodes and Corfu is "a provocation" (Reuters, April 13, 1986). Similarly, former Chancellor Kreisky angrily complained to U.S. News & World Report last week, "I was deceived. The curriculum vitae that Waldheim gave me so we would support him was a lie." (Issue of April 28, 1986)

Waldheim's deceit truly knows no bounds. Last Friday, we revealed that Waldheim's April 6 memorandum purporting to describe his military career was surreptitiously altered six days later. The April 6 version—which was provided by his son to the U.S. Department of Justice—says he returned to Salonika in April 1943. Although Waldheim has consistently admitted since March 2 of this year that he returned to the Salonika area in late March/early April 1943, during the height of the deportations of Jews there, his new memo says he returned to Salonika in July 1943. This quiet change was never brought to the attention of members of the press and others who received the new memo.

Permit me to conclude, Mr. Chairman, with a public challenge to Kurt Waldheim. Last week, during a meeting in New York between Gerhard Waldheim and WJC Executive Director Elan Steinberg, Mr. Waldheim stated that his father is in possession of a copy of the U.N. War Crimes Commission suspect file pertaining to this own case. The younger Mr. Waldheim agreed to provide the WJC with a copy of that file. We have, as yet, received nothing.

Gerhard Waldheim is here today and is scheduled to testify next. I have reason to believe that he may have a copy of the U.N. file with him now. If, as Kurt Waldheim asserts, he has nothing to hide, then let him make that file available to this subcommittee now or agree to provide it within 48 hours.

The world has been cruelly deceived by Kurt Waldheim. For ten years, the chief human rights officer of the planet was an accused war criminal. It is long past time for all the facts to come out. It is ludicrous for Waldheim to maintain that his fabrications were "unintentional." It is indecent of Waldheim to implore, as he did in an interview last week, "Forty-one years after the end of the war, there should be an end to this." (Der Speigel, April 14, 1986). And it is obsene for Gerhard Waldheim to come to our country and defend his father by comparing—as he did in the Washington Post on April 13—the experiences of the Nazi troops in the Balkans with those of American veterans of the Vietnam war.

That concludes my prepared text, and I would be happy to answer questions from the Committee. Thank you.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1986

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, after conferring with the Democratic leader on these matters, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday, April 28, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, no resolutions come over under the rule, the call of the calendar be dispensed with, and following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be special orders in favor of Senators HAWKINS, CRANSTON, and PROXMIRE, for not to exceed 5 minutes each, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each; and provided further that the morning hour be deemed to have expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I remove my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO HOLD H.R. 1116 AT THE DESK

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 1116, Garrison Diversion Unit Reformulation Act of 1986, just received from the House of Representatives, be held at the desk until the close of business on Monday, April 28, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it was the intention—and I share this with the Democratic leader—of the majority leader to pass H.R. 1116 today. It is my understanding now that the minority leader is not in a position to do that tonight, but will attempt to clear its passage between now and Monday.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the distinguished assistant Republican leader will yield, that is correct. We on this side have been working on clearing this measure for passage. I think we have made significant progress toward that end and I will continue.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Democratic leader for that helpful note.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am offering today H.R. 739, as reported by the Commerce Committee, making changes in laws administered by or affecting the Coast Guard and other Federal agencies with responsibilities for maritime programs.

H.R. 739 was received from the House and referred to the Commerce Committee on December 4, 1985. It waived the application of Jones Act restrictions, authorizing the Coast Guard to issue documentation for eight vessels.

The provisions of H.R. 739 were modified and included in an amendment of H.R. 2466 which was adopted by unanimous consent in the Senate on December 19, 1985, and in the House on January 29, 1986. H.R. 2466 was vetoed by the President on February 14, 1986.

H.R. 739 as reported by the committee contains those provisions of the previously adopted H.R. 2466 which were not identified as objectionable by the President in his veto message. They include: technical amendments to subtitle II of title 46; an extension of the exemption allowing continued operation of the Delta Queen paddlewheel riverboat; long-term leasing authority for the Coast Guard; declaration of two waterways as nonnavigable for purposes of bridge-permitting laws; authority for the Coast Guard to contract for electrical power on St. Paul Island, AK; Jones Act waivers; provisions to facilitate drug enforcement by the Coast Guard; authority for the Coast Guard to share costs of road improvements in Cape May, NJ; elimination of a loophole that allows foreign tugs to tow foreign-registry vessels in U.S. ports; clarification that chemical parcel-tankers are not "common carriers" under the Shipping Act and are, therefore, not exempt from the antitrust laws; and authority for vessles to be sold to foreign purchasers.

The provisions of the bill as reported are the result of extensive discussions with representatives of the affected public and are supported by them. The text of the amendment also has been discussed with members of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the administration to ensure that it will be welcomed and considered favorably and expeditiously.

Mr. President, the bill as reported reflects a consensus and I ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, there is one provision of this Senate amendment to H.R. 739 that is of particular value to South Carolina and other States ravaged by the influx of illegal drugs from abroad. This provision, section 7 of the amendment, addresses a question raised in the courts regarding the Coast Guard's law enforcement practices with respect to foreign-flag vessels suspected of drug trafficking.

Under international law, a foreign vessel operating outside the U.S. 12-mile contiguous zone and territorial sea is generally subject only to the jurisdiction of its flag country. However, U.S. law allows the Coast Guard to board and seize a suspicious foreign-flag vessel on the high seas if permitted to do so by treaty or other arrangement with the nation whose flag the vessel is flying.

The typical situation arises after the suspect vessel's master refuses a Coast Guard cutter's request to board. The captain of the cutter then must send his boarding request and supporting information up the chain of command to Coast Guard Headquarters and the State Department. This is usually done by telephone, followed by written message. The State Department in turn, through the affected American embassy, seeks the cooperation of the country whose registry is being claimed. The necessary special arrangement for boarding and possible seizure usually consists of oral communications by the flag nation, confirmed by subsequent messages or diplomatic notes. Some lower courts here in the United States have questioned the validity of these special arrangements, asserting that the underlying law calls for a more formal agreement.

The Justice Department, Coast Guard, and other Federal agencies involved in the fight against the illegal drug trade have urged statutory confirmation of the legality of the present practices. Even under the special arrangements procedure, U.S. law enforcement agencies have an awesome task. As is obvious from the description of this procedure, days can pass while the Coast Guard cutter awaits the flag-country's approval to board. In the meantime rapid weather changes can hamper the cutter's ability to keep in range of the suspect vessel. In addition, enough time may elapse to allow the suspect vessel to escape into a third country's waters, or to permit contraband drugs and other evidence to be disposed of over the side.

Section 7 makes it clear that boarding and seizure authority granted by an agreement via telephone, radio, or other similar means qualifies as a legitimate arrangement under U.S. law. This change will further strengthen Public Law 96-350, which has been very successful in facilitating the convictions of maritime drug smugglers. Prior to the 1980 enactment of that law, which I supported, only 64 percent of those arrested by the Coast Guard were accepted for prosecution, and then only 45 percent of those tried were convicted. In contrast, Coast Guard 7th District statistics for 1984 indicate that 76 percent of those arrested were accepted for prosecution, and of those cases 85 percent resulted in guilty verdicts in Federal court.

I urge approval of this and other provisions in the Senate amendment to H.R. 739.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 739), as amended, was read the third time, and passed. The title was amended so as to read "An Act to make miscellaneous changes in laws affecting the U.S. Coast Guard, and for other purposes".

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION FOR TESTIMONY OF A SENATE EMPLOYEE

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk in behalf of Senator DOLE, and Senator BYRD, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 389) to authorize testimony of a Senate employee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the U.S. attorney for the district of Maine has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of Gayle Cory, an employee in Senator MITCHELL's Washington office, at a criminal trial which began this week in the case of United States v. Robert Christopher Ingraham, (Cr. No. 85-00051-B (D. Maine)).

The defendant in that case is charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 875(c), which prohibits the interstate communication of threats to injure individuals. The indictment alleges that the defendant mailed to Senator MITCHELL's office a letter threatening a number of government officials, including Senator MITCHELL and the Governor of Maine.

This resolution would authorize Ms. Cory, who handled the letter for Senator MITCHELL when it was received in his office, to testify at this trial. This is in keeping with our practice of facilitating justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 389) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 389

Whereas, in the case of "United States v. Robert Christopher Ingraham," Criminal No. 85-00051-B, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Maine, the United States Attorney has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of M. Gayle Cory, an employee in Senator Mitchell's Washington office;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that the testimony of an employee of the Senate is needful for use in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That M. Gayle Cory is authorized to appear and to testify in the case of "United States v. Robert Christopher Ingraham," except concerning matters which may be privileged.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

"(2) An initiative that proposes a reduction of taxes shall also provide for an equivalent reduction of expenditures or an equivalent increase in revenues from other sources.

"(3) An initiative shall address one subject only and matters reasonably related to that subject.

"(4) The ballot question shall be in such form that a 'yes' vote is a vote in favor of the proposal and a 'no' vote is a vote against the proposal.

"(5) A copy of the proposed initiative petition, including a complete text of the proposed law and containing signatures equal to at least 1 percent of the voters of each legislative district or 4 percent of all voters of the Virgin Islands must be submitted to the Supervisor of Elections prior to circulation for ballot qualification. The voters shall have a clear alternative of rejecting either version or the entire proposition.

"(7) An initiative submitted to the voters shall take effect if the initiative is approved by a majority of persons voting and if a majority of the voters of the Virgin Islands vote on the initiative. An initiative may not be vetoed by the Governor, and when approved by the voters, may not be amended or repealed by the legislature during the 3-year period after its approval unless the legislature acts by a two-thirds majority.

"(8) The legislature may provide the manner in which petitions shall be circulated, filed, certified, and the ballot question shall be submitted to the voters.

"(4) A special recall election shall be held with respect to an elected public official not earlier than 30 days after a vote of the legislature under paragraph (2) or a determination of the board of elections under paragraph (3), as the case may be, and not later than 60 days after such vote or detemination.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, on December 3, of last year I chaired a hearing in the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on three legislative proposals regarding the territories. Since that time the committee has reported two of the measures unanimously, H.R. 2478 and Senate Joint Resolution 192, and they are now ready for consideration by the full Senate. I am pleased to be joined by my distinguished colleagues, the chairman and ranking member of the committee, Senators MCCLURE and JOHNSTON, in offering an amendment to one of these territorial measures, H.R. 2478. This amendment has five parts. First, it would replace the text of section 2 in order to clarify the use of economic development loan funds for capital improvement projects in the Northern Mariana Islands. Second, it would replace the text of section 4 to respond to a request from the College of the Virgin Islands that the authorization for the Eastern Caribbean Center be shifted from the Secretary of the Interior to the Agency for International Development. Third, the amendment would make a technical change in section 8. Fourth, the amendment adds a new section to the bill granting land grant status to the Northern Mariana College. This new section is a slight modification of one of the committee amendments reported with H.R. 2478 and which was considered and approved by the committee. Finally, the fifth purpose of this amendment is to add the provisions of Senate Joint Resolution 192, as amended, to the end of H.R. 2478 and thereby combine the two reported measures as one.

As combined with Senate Joint Resolution 192, H.R. 2478 will have 15 provisions regarding the territories. Some of these items, such as continuation of financial assistance to the Northern Mariana Islands, are of critical importance. Other provisions are less critical but are important for enacting several necessary authorizations, clarifying amendments and program modifications designed to meet the needs of the U.S. territories of Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, and the Virgin Islands.

I would like to acknowledge the efforts of the members and staff of several subcommittees for their cooperation and assistance in developing these provisions. These subcommittees are: the Subcommittee on Aviation, the Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy and the Subcommittee on Education, Arts and Humanities. I have prepared a section-by-section analysis of the 15 provisions, as amended. I urge my colleagues to join with us in adoption of this amendment and in passage of H.R. 2478.

I ask unanimous consent that the section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the section-by-section analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 would amend section 12 of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands to grant the people of the Virgin Islands the authority to make law by initiative and to recall elected officials. A similar provision had been included in the territorial constitution which was defeated in a local referendum (although the initiative and recall provisions were not controversial). Section 101 of Public Law 97-357 provided similar authority to the people of Guam.

Section 2 would authorize the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands (NMI) to expend unspent economic development loan funds for capital improvements projects. Section 702(c) of the Covenant between the United States and NMI, Public Law 94-241, provided a total of $23 million over 7 years for funding of economic development loans, an amount which NMI officials believe is greater than is needed. At the same time, there is an acute need for basic improvements to the islands' infrastructure. The provisions would permit the transfer of already appropriated funds to higher priority needs. It is intended that only funds which are not obligated for loans by the Fund managers shall be available to be transferred. Further, it is not intended for this authority to be open-ended; the language specifically limits the total of the funds which may be transferred to $4 million.

Section 3 would amend section 4(a) of Public Law 88-183 to grant the Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa full civil and criminal concurrent jurisdiction with the United States over Federal property in these territories to the extent that local laws do not conflict with Federal laws. Public Law 88-183 granted territorial governments concurrent jurisdiction over "parties found, acts performed and offenses committed" on Federal property. It was intended to be a general grant of concurrent jurisdiction. However, a Federal court in the Virgin Islands last year cast doubt on this by ruling that a local access law could not be enforced on Federally-owned Water Island (Water Isle Hotel and Beach Club Ltd. vs. Kon Tiki, St. Thomas, Inc. Civil No. 1983-284 Dist. Court V.I. March 27, 1984).

Section 4 would authorize $1.5 million in multi-year funding for the Eastern Caribbean Center which was proposed in the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative. The Center is to promote Caribbean regional development through cooperative technical assistance programs. The Center was established at the College of the Virgin Islands in 1985 under an authorization to the Secretary of the Interior. Since that time, the College of the Virgin Islands has requested that the authorization be shifted to the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). This section provides for a general authorization which does not specify the USIA. However, there is an informal agreement that the USIA is the appropriate agency to administer this authorization. It is anticipated that the House of Representatives will develop more specific language describing this authorization and will amend this section during House consideration.

Section 5 would amend section 29(b) of the Organic Act of Guam, which assigns the authority to organize the Guam education system, by replacing the word "Governor" with "Government of Guam". The Guam Board of Education and the Legislature of Guam have requested that this change be made. However, the Governor opposes the change which would allow for an increase in the number of Guam officials involved in education policy. It is the intention of the Committee that the Government of Guam, not the U.S. Congress, shall determine how to allocate the authority to organize the Guam education system. This provision does not preclude delegation of this authority to the Governor under local law nor does it require that there be any changes to the current organization of the education system.

Section 6 would direct the Secretary of the Interior to develop options for the future status of Water Island and report to Congress by the beginning of the 100th Congress. This 500 acre island in St. Thomas Harbor is owned by the Federal government and has been leased to a hotel operator since 1952. The lease expires in 1992. Two issues which are of particular concern and underscore the need for this report are: one, that the current lease requires full payment to the leaseholder for all improvements if the lease is not renewed; and two, Public Law 96-205 bars any change in the lease without Congressional approval. Options must be developed for Congressional consideration before the Secretary of the Interior can begin negotiations with the leaseholder on future status.

Section 7 would amend section 901 of the Justice Assistance Act, Public Law 98-473 to make American Samoa, Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands eligible to receive grants as a single state. Because of their relatively small size, Guam would be eligible for one-half of a state allocation, American Samoa a one-third share and NMI a one-sixth share. This assistance has been sought by the Pacific territories to help cope with growing crime problems.

Section 8 would make the territories eligible to participate in the Hunter Safety Program of the Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act of 1937. The provision would amend the law to allocate one-sixth of 1 percent of the program's funds to each of the four smaller territories. Puerto Rico is already eligible.

Section 9 extends program eligibility for the Land Grant College Program to the College of the Northern Mariana Islands. Because of the small size of the College of the Northern Mariana Islands, this provision does not authorize the college for the $3 million endowment which has usually been included in the extension of program eligibility. It is intended that the college be eligible for all program grants and benefits extended to other member colleges except for the endowment.

Section 10 would implement the agreement of the Special Representatives on the Future United States Financial Assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands which modifies the conditions for financial assistance to the islands. In 1976, Congress approved a Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) in Political Union with the United States (Public Law 94-241). Article VII of this Covenant pledges the full faith and credit of the United States to seven years of financial support to the CNMI for its operations and economic development.

Section 902 of the Covenant requires that special representatives of the United States and CNMI meet at least 1 year prior to the expiration of the period of financial assistance to consider and make recommendations regarding future multiyear financial assistance. Section 704(d) of the Covenant provides that the level of payments will continue until Congress appropriates a different amount or "otherwise provides by law." Having met, on July 10, 1985, the Special Representatives on Future United States Financial Assistance for the CNMI reached an agreement on funding for the next seven year period.

Upon enactment of Section 10, this agreement will provide the framework for the U.S. financial assistance to the CNMI for the second 7-year period, fiscal years 1986 through 1992. It would provide $228 million over the next 7-years for three general activities; $100.5 million for Government operations; $126 million for capital development, and $1.5 million for special programs.

Section 11 would amend title III of Public Law 96-193 to provide an exemption from aircraft noise standards for aircraft flying between Honolulu, Hawaii, or other nations, and the United States Pacific territories or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (or successor political entities). The section would further provide that the State of Hawaii shall be authorized to institute nighttime noise restrictions for Honolulu airport which would be no more restrictive than those which currently apply. The intent of this provision is to increase air service in these insular areas where it is essential for economic and social development. The current restrictions were developed in response to a noise problem which is minimal in the territories because aircraft operate over water. In addition, the region's two largest airports, in Guam and Honolulu, are also used by military aircraft which do not need to meet the noise restrictions. The high cost of compliance with the noise restrictions has resulted in more harm than benefit to these islands. The cost, generally over $2 million per aircraft, has discouraged operators from serving these markets or it has forced them to cease operations altogether. Although the exemption in Honolulu is more limited, to daytime flights, it is necessary to include Honolulu in order to assure that there is an opportunity for mail, freight and passenger service to the United States to develop adequately.

Section 12 would provide flexibility to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to modify certain water quality grant requirements and limitations which he may determine are not appropriate to conditions in the territories. For example, water and power service, on which water treatment facilities depend, are generally less developed and reliable in the territories than in mainland areas. As a result, the territories have lagged behind mainland areas in meeting eligibility requirements and in taking advantage of water quality grants. Because these grants are now being phased-out, the territories may lose the opportunity to take full advantage of the grants despite a significant threat to public health and water quality. It is intended that the Administrator of the EPA will use the flexibility granted by this provision to waive requirements, including time limitations on grants, to alleviate threats to the public health and quality, and to encourage the development of water treatment facilities. The provision would allow Federal funds to be used for the construction of sewage collection systems to receive sewage from household connections and transport it to interceptor or trunk sewers, provided the required findings related to threats to public health are made. The Clean Water Act does not permit use of Federal funds for the installation of house connector lines to sewage collection systems.

Section 13 would add a new paragraph (c) to section 29 of the Organic Act of Guam, authorizing the Government of Guam to establish independent offices for Prosecutor and Auditor. It is intended that the Government of Guam, not the U.S. Congress, shall determine how to allocate the authority to establish and organize each of these two separate offices. This provision does not preclude delegation of this authority to the Governor under local law nor does it require that there be any changes to the current organization of these offices.

Section 14 would amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to correct an inconsistency in the immigration law which allows alien crewmen on foreign vessels to enter Guam for shore leave while denying the same alien crewmen entry to Guam if they work on U.S.-registered vessels. This discriminatory treatment favoring foreign vessels has resulted in severe morale problems on U.S. vessels and, in one case, led to violence when immigration officers attempted to enforce the law. This section is intended to alleviate this problem. Aliens otherwise admissible as crewmen under Section 101(a)(15)(D) of the Act would be able to periodically come into Guam on the fishing vessel on which they are serving and be admissible as "D" crewmen, without the necessity of first entering a foreign country before returning to the United States.

Section 15 would amend subsection 212(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act which was enacted by Congress in 1984 (Public Law 98-454) to provide for a limited 15-day visa waiver for visitors to Guam. The unique conditions prevailing on Guam and its isolated location provide sufficient safeguards for the welfare, safety and security of the United States to justify a broad application of the visa waiver system. Guam's isolation as an island in the Pacific Ocean easily allows for the restriction of visa waiver recipients to the Territory thereby preventing them from traveling onward to Hawaii and the mainland. Guam's small area and its relatively small population ensure that any nonimmigrants who overstay the visa waiver period of fifteen days can be quickly located and removed. The waiver of remedies provision contained in this legislation also ensures that there will be little if any administrative cost attributable to appeals of entry denials to visa waiver applicants. Given the inherent protections which Guam offers the welfare, safety and security of the United States the visa waiver system should be liberally applied to a broad range of countries. In particular, the visa denial rates through 16% for the preceding calendar year, including but not limited to South Korea and Taiwan. It is intended that the visa waiver program should initially be given wide application. If threats to the welfare, safety or security of the United States develop those threats should be dealt with on a country by country basis.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1804) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 2478), as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Democratic leader if he is in a position to consider the nomination of Robert J. Bryan, of Washington, to be U.S. district judge for the western district of Washington.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, that nomination has been cleared on this side of the aisle. We are ready to proceed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider the nomination of Robert J. Bryan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE JUDICIARY

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert J. Bryan, of Washington, to be U.S. district judge for the western district of Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, Senator EVANS and I are delighted to have this nomination of Judge Bryan before the Senate for two reasons. The first is that this specific position in the western district of Washington was created because of an immense need for an additional judge, especially in the southern division of that district.

Even more important, however, is the fact that Senator EVANS and I have an immense delight in having had the President nominate a candidate of such impeccable qualifications.

Robert Bryan first became a member of the bench when he was appointed to the superior court for Kitsap County in 1967 by the then Governor of the State of Washington, who sits on the other side of Judge Bryan right now.

He served for 17 years until his retirement from that position in 1984. Lawyer evaluation polls in the State of Washington ranked him either at the top or right at the top of all of the superior court judges in the State almost from the beginning of his career on the bench.

He was overwhelmingly characterized as excellent in each area of review in the way judges are reviewed there—legal ability, judicial temperament, availability, integrity, hard work, and the like—precisely the kind of person we need in our courts.

For the last 2 years, he has had a refresher in what it is like in the private sector in one of the most distinguished law firms in Seattle. His personal credentials match those of his professional credentials. He has given freely of his time not only to the legal community in the State of Washington, but to many other worthy causes as well.

I may say in passing, Mr. President, that at his nomination hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, I commented on physical similarities between Judge Bryan and our distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY]. Judge Bryan was also at one time an outstanding basketball player.

Like our great colleague, he maybe cannot get quite so far off the floor now as he could at that time, but it is simply another illustration of his success and of a background which is so broad and includes so many important positions as to make him overwhelmingly qualified for this position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERMISSION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS TO INTRODUCE LEGISLATION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, under the jurisdiction of Senator GARN have 30 minutes after the Senate adjourns this evening in order to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STRUCTURE AND STRENGTH OF THE DEFENSE ESTABLISHMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 138

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

To the Congress of the United States:

On February 26, I spoke to the American people of my highest duty as President—to preserve peace and defend the United States. I outlined the objectives on which our defense program has rested. We have been firmly committed to rebuilding America's strength, to meeting new challenges to our security, and to reducing the danger of nuclear war. We have also been dedicated to pursuing and implementing defense reforms wherever necessary for greater efficiency or military effectiveness.

With these objectives in mind, I address the Congress on a subject of central importance to all Americans—the future structure and organization of our defense establishment.

Extensive study by the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives has produced numerous proposals for far-reaching changes in the structure of the Department of Defense, including the organization of our senior military leadership. These proposals, sponsored by members with wide knowledge and experience in defense matters, are now pending before the Congress.

In addition, a few weeks ago I endorsed the recommendations of the bipartisan President's Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management, chaired by David Packard, for improving overall defense management including the crucial areas of national security planning, organization, and command.

For more effective direction of our national security establishment and better coordination of our Armed Forces, I consider some of these proposals to be highly desirable, and I have recently taken the administrative steps necessary to implement these improvements. In this message, I wish to focus on the essential legislative steps that the Congress must take for these improvements to be fully implemented.

Together, the work of the Packard Commission and the Congress represents certainly the most comprehensive review of the Department of Defense in over a generation. Their work has been the focus of an historic effort to help chart the course we should follow now and into a new century. While we will continue to refine and improve our defense establishment in the future, it will be many years before changes of this scope are again considered. Given these unique circumstances, I concluded that my views as President and Commander in Chief should be laid before the Congress prior to the completion of legislative action.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE RESPONSIBILITIES

In forwarding this message, I am cognizant of the important role of the Congress in providing for our national defense. We must work together in this endeavor. However, any changes in statute must not infringe on the constitutionally protected responsibilities of the President as Commander in Chief. Any Legislation in which the issues of Legislative and Executive responsibilities are confused would be constitutionally suspect and would not meet with my approval.

My views concerning legislation on defense reorganization now pending in the House and Senate reflect a reasoned and open-minded approach to the issues, while maintaining a close watch on the constitutional responsibilities and prerogatives of the Presidency. While I had considered forwarding a separate bill to the Congress, I concluded that this was not necessary since many of the legislative recommendations of the Packard Commission are already pending in one or more bills. However, additional changes in law are also proposed in those other bills, and such changes must be carefully weighed.

Certain changes in the law are necessary to accomplish the objectives we seek. Among these are the designation of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff as the principal military adviser to the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the National Security Council, and the Chairman's exclusive control over the Joint Staff; the creation of a new Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and the creation of a new Level II position of Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

Other proposed changes in law are, in my judgment, not required. It is not necessary to place in law those aspects of defense organization that can be accomplished through executive action. Nevertheless, if such changes are recommended by the Congress, I will carefully consider them, provided they are consistent with current policy and practice and do not infringe upon the authority or reduce the flexibility of the President or the Secretary of Defense.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

The organization of our present-day defense establishment reflects a series of important reforms following World War II. These reforms were based upon the harsh lessons of global war and were hastened by the new military responsibilities and threats facing our Nation. They culminated in 1958 with the reorganization of the Department of Defense under President Eisenhower.

President Eisenhower's experience of high military command has few parallels among Presidents since George Washington. The basic structure for defense that he laid down in 1958 has served the Nation well for over 25 years. The principles that governed his reorganization proposals are few but fundamental. They are of undiminished importance today.

First, the proper functioning of our defense establishment depends upon civilian authority that is unimpaired and capable of strong executive action.

As civilian head of the Department, the Secretary of Defense must have the necessary latitude to shape operational commands, to establish clear command channels, to organize his Office and Department of Defense agencies, and to oversee the administrative, training, logistics, and other functions of the military departments.

Second, if our defense program is to achieve maximum effectiveness, it must be genuinely unified.

A basis theme of defense reorganization efforts since World War II has been to preserve the valuable aspects of our traditional service framework while nonetheless achieving the united effort that is indispensable for our national security. President Eisenhower counseled that separate "service responsibilities and activities must always be only the branches, not the central trunk of the national security tree."

Unified effort is not only a prerequisite for successful command of military operations during wartime, today, it is also indispensable for strategic planning and for the effective direction of our defense program in peacetime. The organization of our senior military leadership must facilitate this unified effort. The highest quality military advice must be available to the President and the Secretary of Defense on a continuing basis. This must include a clear, single, integrated military point of view. Yet, at the same time, it must not exclude well-reasoned alternatives.

Third, the character of our defenses must keep pace with rapid changes in the military challenges we face.

President Eisenhower observed a revolution taking place in the techniques of warfare. Advancing technology, and the need to maintain a vital deterrent, continually test our ability to introduce new weapons into our armed forces efficiently and economically. It is increasingly critical that our forces be able to respond in a timely way to a wide variety of potential situations. These range across a spectrum from full mobilization and deployment in case of general war, to the discriminating use of force in special operations. To respond successfully to these changing circumstances and requirements, our defense organization must be highly adaptable.

Where the roles and responsibilities of each component of our defense establishment are necessarily placed in law, they must be clear and unambiguous, but not so constrained or detailed as to impair operational flexibility or the common sense of those in positions of responsibility. Laws must not be written in response to the strengths and weaknesses of individuals who now serve. Instead, they should establish sound, fundamental relationships among and between civilian and military authorities, relationships that reflect the proper balance between our traditions and heritage and the practical considerations unique to military matters.

SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT AND CERTAIN SUBORDINATES

I noted earlier that President Eisenhower brought to his Presidency a unique perspective and unprecedented military experience. Few Presidents have come into this office as well prepared as he to assume the responsibilities of Commander in Chief. This fact places a heavy burden on our defense establishment and requires the continued development of key institutions and relationships that constitute the framework of our current organization.

It has been my experience that within this framework there is a special relationship between the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Combatant Commanders. In providing for the timely and effective use of the armed forces in support of our foreign policy, our entire defense establishment is focused on supporting this special relationship and making it as effective as possible. All other aspects of our defense organization must be subordinate to this purpose.

The Secretary of Defense. In particular, the law places broad authority and heavy responsibilities on the Secretary of Defense. The Secretary, in his responsibility as head of the defense establishment and in executing the directives of the Commander in Chief, embodies the concept of civilian control. No one but the President of the United States and the Secretary of Defense is empowered with command authority over the armed forces. In managing the Department of Defense the Secretary must retain the authority and flexibility necessary to fulfill these broad responsibilities.

Thus, where the Congress seeks statutory changes that would affect the Secretary of Defense, I will apply the following criteria:

—I will support efforts to strengthen the authority of the Secretary of Defense if there are areas in the law where his current authority is not sufficiently clear.

—The Secretary's authority should be delegated as he sees fit, and such delegation should never be mandated in the law apart from his concurrence and approval.

—The strengthening of other offices or components of the defense establishment should never be, nor appear to be, at the expense of the authority of the Secretary of Defense.

The Combatant Commanders. The Unified and Specified Commanders are the individuals in whom the American people and our defense establishment place warfighting responsibilities. The Secretary and I consult the Combatant Commanders for their joint and operational points of view in determining how our military forces should be used and in determining our military requirements for important geographic and functional areas. Their successes in any future conflict would depend in large measure on how well we plan for their needs in today's defense budgets.

With this in mind, the Secretary initiated regular meetings with the Combatant Commanders and has provided them greater access to the Department's internal budget process. In addition, I am implementing the recommendations of the Packard Commission to improve the channel of communications between the President, the Secretary, and the Combatant Commanders; to provide broader authority to those Commanders to structure their subordinate commands; to provide options in the organizational structure of Combatant Commands for the shortest possible chains of command consistent with proper supervision and support; and to provide for flexibility where issues or situations overlap the current geographical boundaries of the Combatant Commands.

These changes reflect an evolutionary and positive trend towards strengthening the role of the operational commanders within the defense establishment. While I hope and expect this trend will continue, it is not necessary that these efforts be mandated in the law. If the Congress wishes to elaborate on the current law, there are several important issues that should be considered:

—In organizing our forces to maximize their combat potential under a variety of circumstances, the President and Secretary of Defense must retain the authority for establishing Combatant Commands; for prescribing their force structure; and for oversight of the assignment of forces by the Military Departments. To be effective, this authority requires broad latitude and flexibility and calls for a minimum amount of statutory constraint. Restrictions in the law that prohibit the establishment of certain command arrangements should be repealed. My authority as Commander in Chief is sufficient to deal with any necessary command arrangements or adjustments in the assignment of forces that unforeseen circumstances could require.

—In moving to strengthen the role of the Combatant Commanders we must establish an appropriate balance between enhancing their influence in resource allocation and maintaining their focus on joint training and operational planning. The Combatant Commanders must have sufficient authority and influence to accomplish their mission, within the constraints necessarily established by the Secretary, without being burdened with administrative responsibilities that detract from their primary role as operational commanders.

—Finally, we must not legislate departmental procedures. The changes I have initiated concerning the defense planning and budgeting process provide for the further development of the role of the Combatant Commanders. It is neither necessary nor appropriate for the Department's internal resource allocation process to be defined in law. The establishment and evolution of such procedures must remain the prerogative of the Secretary of Defense.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. In the relationship between the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Combatant Commanders, there is a special role for the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Chairman ranks above all other officers and devotes all of his time to joint issues. I deal with him or his representative on a regular basis and he serves as the primary contact for the Secretary and me on operational military matters. As a matter of practice, the Chairman also functions within the chain of command by transmitting to the Combatant Commanders those orders I give to the Secretary. Under the directive I recently signed to implement the recommendations of the Packard Commission, this practice will be broadened and strengthened.

In this regard, I have concluded that the Chairman's unique position and responsibilities are important enough to be set apart and established in law, and that he should be supported by a military staff responsive to his own needs and those of the President and the Secretary of Defense. In reaching this judgment I have carefully weighed the view that concentration of additional responsibility in the Chairman could limit the range of advice provided to me and the Secretary, or somehow undermine the concept of civilian control. While this concern is understandable, it does not apply to the structural changes I would endorse. Since the Chairman and the Joint Chiefs of Staff will continue to function together as military advisers and the Secretary's military staff, and the Chairman will continue to report directly to the President and the Secretary of Defense, none of the new responsibilities of the Chairman that I propose would diminish the authority or control of the Secretary of Defense. Accordingly, I support legislation that will accomplish the following objectives:

—Designate the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff as the principal uniformed military adviser to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense;

—Place the Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Joint Staff under the exclusive direction of the Chairman, to perform such duties as he prescribes to support the Joint Chiefs of Staff and respond to the President and the Secretary of Defense; and —Create the new position of Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and make the Vice Chairman a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

While recognizing and providing for the special role of the Chairman in the law, the basic structure of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be retained. The advantages and disadvantages of the current system, in which the Chiefs of the Services provide advice concerning both their military Service and joint issues, have been debated for many years and are well known. I believe that certain disadvantages will be remedied by a stronger Chairman without sacrificing the advantages of the current system. I find that the Chiefs of the Services are highly knowledgeable regarding particular military capabilities. And, just as important, joint military perspectives on both resource allocation and operations, developed under the Chairman's leadership, must be upheld and supported at the highest levels of the Military Departments.

For these reasons, as we take the appropriate steps to strengthen the role of the Chairman, the law must ensure that:

—The Service Chiefs remain members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and that, in addition to the views of the Chairman, the President is also provided with the views of other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

—In addition, in creating the new position of Vice Chairman, the law must provide flexibility for the President and Secretary of Defense to determine who shall serve as Acting Chairman in the Chairman's absence.

In our efforts to strengthen the ability of the Chairman and the Joint Chiefs of Staff to be responsive to the civilian leadership, we must also make certain that the military establishment does not become embroiled in political matters. The role of the Chairman and other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is strictly advisory in nature and, with the armed forces as a whole, they serve the American people with great fidelity and dedication. In my view, changes in the tenure of the Chairman or other senior officers that are tied to the civilian electoral process would endanger this heritage. I oppose any bill whose provisions would have the effect of politicizing the military establishment.

ACQUISITION REFORM

The Packard Commission has pointed out what we all know to be true: that our historic ups and downs in defense spending have cost us dearly over the long term. For many years there has been chronic instability in both top-line funding and individual programs. This has eliminated key economies of scale, stretched out programs, and discouraged defense contractors from making the long-term investments required to improve productivity. To end this costly cycle, we must find ways to provide the stability that will allow the genius of American ingenuity and productivity to flourish.

We also know that Federal law governing procurement has become overwhelmingly complex. Each new statute adopted by the Congress has spawned more administrative regulation. As laws and regulations have proliferated, defense acquisition has become ever more bureaucratic and encumbered by overstaffed and unproductive layers of management. We must both add and subtract from the body of law that governs Federal procurement, cutting through red tape and replacing it with sound business practices, innovation, and plain common sense.

The procurement reforms I have begun within the Executive branch cannot reach their full potential without the support of the Congress. We must work together in this critical period, where so many agree that our approach to defense procurement in both the Executive and Legislative branches is in need of repair. However, in moving forward to implement needed reforms, I urge the Congress to show restraint in the use of more legislation as a solution to our current problems.

The Commission identified the need for a full-time defense acquisition executive with a solid industrial background. This executive would set overall policy for procurement and research and development, supervise the performance of the entire acquisition system, and establish policy for the oversight of defense contractors. I concur with this recommendation.

—The Congress should create by statute the new Level II position of Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition through the authorization of an additional Level II appointment in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Beyond this initiative, however, further change to the acquisition organization of the Department of Defense should be left to the Executive branch. The procurement reforms I have recently set in motion are fundamental and far-reaching and should be allowed to proceed without the burden of further piecemeal changes. I call on the Congress to demonstrate restraint in two particular areas:

—First, with the exception of changes to procurement of antifraud laws I have already endorsed, we should refrain from further action to add new procurement laws to our statutes pending the complete review of all Federal statutes governing procurement that I have recently directed. The vast body of procurement law that now exists must be simplified, consolidated, and made responsive to our national security needs.

—And second, we should take no further action to add new laws that would restrict the authority of the Secretary of Defense to hire and retain the high quality of personnel needed to administer the Department of Defense's acquisition program.

If citizens from the private sector who participate in the conduct of government are unfairly prohibited from returning to their livelihood, it will not be just their willingness to serve that will suffer. The Nation will suffer as well. I will later report to the Congress on steps I am taking or that I propose the Congress take in these areas. And I will also review and report on the accountability of the defense industry to the Department of Defense, and to the American people. This review will address the ethics of the industry, the Department of Defense's oversight responsibility, and the role of the Department's Inspector General. I urge the Congress not to act in these important areas until it has had an opportunity to review my report.

While the Department of Defense and Executive branch are focused on implementing the details of these reforms, I urge the Congress to focus its attention on the structural and procedural reforms that are also essential for the stability we seek.

Two-year defense budgets are an essential step toward stability. I urge the Congress to develop internal procedures for the authorization and appropriation of defense budgets on a biennial basis, beginning with the FY 1988 budget. My FY 1988 defense budget will be structured with this in mind.

The Congress should encourage the use of multiyear procurement where appropriate on a significantly broader scale. Multiyear procurement is a strong force for stability and efficiency. We have already saved billions of dollars through multiyear procurement and have never broken a contract or suffered a single loss to date. We want to continue and expand our efforts in this important area.

Milestone funding of research and development programs is also a form of multiyear contracting. I will work with the Congress to select appropriate programs to be base-lined in cost over a multiyear period so that these programs can be funded in an orderly and stable fashion. If we know what we want to accomplish, we can set a proper ceiling on costs and manage our program within those costs. I urge the Congress to support milestone funding and the base-lining concept of placing a ceiling on research and development costs.

Finally, there are some forty different committees or subcommittees that claim jurisdiction over some aspect of the defense program. This fragmented oversight process is a source of confusion, and it impedes the cooperation between the Congress and the Executive branch so necessary to effective defense management. I urge the Congress to return to a more orderly process involving only a few key committees to oversee the defense program. Only with such reform can we achieve the full benefits of those changes now underway within the Department of Defense.

Working together, we have accomplished a great deal over the past five years. Yet there is more to be done. This effort represents a new beginning for our defense establishment. When these reforms have been achieved we will have:

—Developed a rational process for the Congress and the President to reach enduring agreement on national military strategy, the forces to carry it out, and the stable levels of funding that should be provided for defense; —strengthened the ability of the military establishment to provide timely and integrated military advice to civilian leadership;

—improved the efficiency of the defense procurement system and made it more responsive to future threats and technological needs; and —reestablished the bipartisan consensus for a strong national defense.

The Packard Commission has charted a three-part course for improving our Nation's defense establishment. I have already directed implementation of its recommendations where that can be accomplished through Executive action. In this message, I ask that the Congress enact certain changes in law that will further improve the organization and operation of the Department of Defense. Now, the remaining requirement for reform lies within the Congress itself.

I began this message by emphasizing the important role of Congress in our defense establishment. In the organizational changes we now address, the Congress should be commended for fulfilling its broad responsibility to make laws to organize and govern the armed forces. However, with respect to the changes we must consider in the areas of budget, resource allocation, and procurement, the future is much less certain. To establish the stability essential for the successful and efficient management of our defense program, the Congress must be more firmly committed to its constitutional obligations to raise and support the armed forces.

Within the limits of my authority as President, I will continue to improve and refine the national security apparatus within the Executive branch. And I will support any further changes in procedures, regulations, or statutes, that would improve the long-term stability, effectiveness, and efficiency of our defense effort.

In having fully committed ourselves to implementing the Packard Commission's recommendations, this Administration has overcome the difficult bureaucratic terrain that has stood in the path of previous efforts. Now, we face a broad ocean of necessary congressional reforms in which the currents of politics and jurisdiction are equally treacherous. We must not stop at the water's edge.

Only meaningful congressional reform can complete our efforts to strengthen the defense establishment and develop a rational and stable budget process—a process that provides effectively and efficiently for America's security over the long haul.

With a spirit of cooperation and bipartisanship, confident that we can rise to this occasion, I stand ready to work with the Congress and meet the challenge ahead.

S. 2363. A bill to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to provide for rates of duty on imported speedometers used on exercise equipment consistent with those on bicycle speedometers; to the Committee on Finance.

RATES OF DUTY ON IMPORTED BICYCLE SPEEDOMETER

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today, Senator PAUL SIMON and I are introducing a bill which will address an inequity which has caused major harm to a company in Illinois—Stewart-Warner Corp.

Our bill would amend the tariff schedules so that the duty levied on certain bicycle speedometers imported for use on exercise equipment would be identical to that which is levied on all other imported bicycle speedometers.

The main use of speedometers, other than on motorized vehicles, are for bicycles or stationary exercise bicycles. The speedometers used on both are essentially identical.

The sole remaining domestic manufacturer of speedometers for bicycles is Stewart-Warner Corp. The speedometer it manufactures has been used on exercise equipment since 1935.

These speedometers have a commonality of major parts. The major cost of a bicycle speedometer is in the speedometer head, which is more than 60 percent of the total cost. That part is the same on all speedometers.

The cable, which is the next most expensive component of a bicycle speedometer, is also identical to that for an exercise bicycle. The only difference is in the length.

The most inexpensive component of a bicycle speedometer is the drive mechanism. There are four types, and all are essentially interchangeable for bicycles and exercycles.

Mr. President, we have a tariff law which currently charges two different rates for essentially the same part, depending on how it is used. That makes no sense at all. The difference is substantial—18.3 percent ad valorem for bicycle speedometers and 0.6 percent ad valorem for exerciser-type speedometers. This is a big disparity for an item which is essentially the same part used on related equipment.

In the past 3 years, Stewart-Warner's share of the bicycle-type speedometer market has declined from 40 percent to 20 percent, and its work force employed in the production of this product has declined by two-thirds.

I urge the Senate Finance Committee to rectify this inequity at its earliest opportunity.●

S. 2364. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that no foreign tax credit, and no deduction, shall be allowed for taxes paid or accrued to Libya during the period any declaration by the President of a national emergency is in effect with respect to Libya and to provide that the exclusion from gross income of earned income of U.S. citizens living abroad shall not apply to income attributable to Libya during such period; to the Committee on Finance.

LIMITING TAX BREAKS FOR U.S. CORPORATIONS OPERATING IN LIBYA

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the American taxpayers are subsidizing Muammar Qadhafi's terrorist regime.

Unbelievable, you say? How could we be subsidizing a regime that attacks U.S. citizens abroad, funds terrorist organizations around the world, and is considered a hostile foreign power? How could the White House, the Department of Defense, the Department of State allow our country to subsidize a country we just found it necessary to attack with military force?

Well, Mr. President, it is happening right now, today, as five American oil companies continue to operate in Libya alone with two American construction firms—all of them contributing to the Libyan economy by producing or selling oil or working on construction projects and in turn reaping huge tax benefits from our Treasury—benefits from the pockets of every tax paying American.

The five oil companies make large royalty tax payments to Qadhafi—up to 92 cents on the dollar. That means every time they pump a dollars' worth of oil, Colonel Qadhafi earns another 92 cents in income. And the U.S. corporation turns around and takes a tax credit on their income tax forms for operating abroad and it deducts as a business expense the taxes and royalties it pays to Qadhafi. In addition, Americans engaged in operating these oil firms in Libya can take an $80,000 exclusion on their income taxes.

While U.S. corporations are supposed to be out of Libya under the terms of the President's order, five oil companies sought and were granted an extension of time until June during which they could continue to operate, distribute, and sell oil from Libya while they are theoretically finding a way to sell their assets.

In order to resume oil activities in the aftermath of the President's order, these five oil companies paid, and let me emphasize this point, they paid Qadhafi $130 million in back taxes. $130 million to Qadhafi after the President told every American commercial venture in Libya to get out. But then the Treasury Department turned around and said to oil companies—"well it does not apply to you. You have an extension of time. You can continue to operate. You can continue to pay Qadhafi millions in taxes and royalties. You can continue to prop up his regime. You can continue to support him economically. And you can continue to charge the American taxpayer for these activities through the Tax Code."

No wonder, Mr. President, our European allies question our policies under these circumstances. How can we continue to criticize our European allies when United States firms are operating in Libya with the approval of our own Government?

Mr. President, this situation has to stop. Either we are serious about stopping Qadhafi or we are not. If those five oil companies leave Libya, it might cause a loss of assets and it may not mean a drop in oil production if Qadhafi can move in and run them efficiently. But it just as easily might mean disruptions in their oil operations. It might hurt.

Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation with three purposes: First, to deny tax credits to United States firms operating in Libya; second, to deny the taking of tax and royalties as a business deduction by United States firms operating in Libya; and third, to deny the $80,000 personal income tax exclusion for United States citizens working in Libya.

Great credit should be given to my Wisconsin congressional colleague [Mr. OBEY] for discovering this situation and moving legislatively to stop it. He has demonstrated great leadership on this matter and every taxpayer owes him a debt.

I urge my colleagues to examine this legislation and join with me in cosponsoring and voting for this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2364

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DENIAL OF FOREIGN TAX CREDIT, ETC. FOR TAXES PAID OR ACCRUED TO LIBYA WHILE DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY IS IN EFFECT.

"(i) DENIAL OF FOREIGN TAX CREDIT, ETC. FOR TAXES PAID OR ACCRUED TO LIBYA WHILE DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY IN EFFECT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this part—

"(A) no credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any income, war profits, or excess profits taxes paid or accrued (or deemed paid under section 902 or 960) to Libya during any period during which a declaration described in paragraph (3) is in effect with respect to Libya, and

"(B) income from sources within Libya which is attributable to such period shall not be taken into account as income from sources without the United States under section 904(a).

"(2) DENIAL OF DEDUCTION.—No deduction shall be allowed under this chapter for any taxes for which a credit is not allowable under paragraph (1)(A).

"(3) DECLARATION DESCRIBED.—A declaration is described in this paragraph if it is a declaration by the President of a national emergency under section 202 of the International Emergency Economics Powers Act after a finding that the policies and actions of Libya (or the government thereof) constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States."

SEC. 2. EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME OF EARNED INCOME OF U.S. CITIZENS LIVING ABROAD SHALL NOT APPLY TO INCOME ATTRIBUTABLE TO LIBYA WHILE DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY IS IN EFFECT.

Subsection (b) of section 911 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to citizens or residents of the United States living abroad) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) FOREIGN EARNED INCOME NOT TO INCLUDE INCOME ATTRIBUTABLE TO LIBYA WHILE DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY IS IN EFFECT.—The foreign earned income for an individual shall not include amounts attributable to sources within Libya during any period during which a declaration described in section 901(i)(3) is in effect with respect to Libya. For purposes of the preceding sentence, an amount shall be treated as attributable to a period if the services to which such amount is attributable are performed during such period."

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(b) SECTION 2.—The amendment made by section 2 shall apply to amounts received after December 31, 1985, in taxable years ending after such date.

By Mr. BURDICK:

S. 2365. A bill to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to improve procedures for the rotation of grain in the producer reserve program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

ROTATION OF GRAIN IN PRODUCER RESERVE PROGRAM

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill designed to help the farmer weather the credit crisis he currently faces. We all know of the terrible problems many farmers are having obtaining credit to put in their crops and continue their operations.

One-third of all farms with annual sales over $40,000 face financial difficulties. According to USDA:

This development is especially critical because commercial farms—those with sales between $50,000 and $500,000—although only 34 percent of all farms, account for 90 percent of all farm sales.

It can no longer be said that those farmers going out of business are primarily those who were poor managers or who failed to adapt to changing economic trends in agriculture. Low commodity prices and a continuing decline in farmland values are negatively affecting the viability of operations that have lower than a 40-percent debt-to-asset ratio, but that have a negative cash flow.

The vulnerability of farmers at higher debt-to-asset ratios is even greater: 11 percent of all commercial farmers are currently classified as technically insolvent—their debt is larger than the value of the assets they own; 12 percent are classified as very highly leveraged—debt-to-asset ratios between 70 and 100 percent; and 22 percent are classified as highly leveraged—debt-to-asset ratios between 40 and 70 percent. It is highly likely that producers in these three categories will continue to go out of business at a higher than normal rate.

I want my colleagues to keep in mind that the farm statistics are much worse for certain parts of the country than for others. In my State of North Dakota, farmers have the second highest debt level among farm operators in nine Midwestern States. In January 1986, North Dakota's debt-to-asset ratio was 35 percent—up from 33 percent 1 year earlier. Fifteen percent of North Dakota's farmers and ranchers had ratios of 70 percent or greater.

Our farmers reported that 17.4 percent were delinquent on payments reporting an average debt of $312,000, an increase of $44,100 over last year. On the average, debt of a delinquent operator equaled 67 percent of the operator's assets. This is up 11 percent from last year's level of 60 percent.

In view of these sobering statistics, it is no wonder that our farmers are having trouble getting credit at their local bank, the Farm Credit System, or the Farmers Home Administration.

I believe there is something we can do short of giving them a direct loan on which they must pay interest. And that is the purpose of the bill I am introducing today.

Currently, farmers who have grain in the farmer-owned reserve are allowed to rotate their grain stocks in order to keep them fresh. Thirty days prior to harvest, or in some cases 60 days, farmers can remove grain from their reserve bins, market it, and replace the grain after harvest. They are not allowed to have the money from the grain until after the stocks are replaced.

My bill would expand that period to 120 days prior to harvest. This legislation would also allow the farmers to use the money from the grain they market during that 120-day period. Under this change in the law, farmers would be able to obtain cash in the spring to help them service their machinery, buy their seed and fertilizer, and otherwise put in their crop. Then, when harvest is complete, farmers can replace into the reserve the grain that they had earlier taken out.

The effect of the bill is to make operating funds available to the farmers at no interest. Furthermore, there would be no additional cost to the Government.

A number of side benefits would also result. The availability of grain storage is a chronic problem for many farmers. At harvest time, the local elevator fills up, transportation is congested, farmers do not have additional room on their farms, and many end up dumping their grain on the ground. By allowing the early marketing of reserve grain, farmers could make room for their harvest. In addition, this grain would be made available to the market at a time of the year when transportation is not as congested as in the harvest season, which would be of tremendous help to country elevators as well as farmers.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, and I hope that we can act on it soon in order to benefit the farmers who are so in need of credit relief.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2365

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ROTATION OF GRAIN IN PRODUCER RESERVE PROGRAM.

Section 110(g) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445e(g)) is amended—

(1) by designating the first and second sentences as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively;

(2) by striking out "The" in paragraph (2) (as so designated) and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (4), the"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) A producer may rotate stocks of grain stored under the program authorized by this section at any time within 120 days after approval of the rotation is granted by the Secretary.

"(4) A producer may use funds made available from the rotation of such stocks, before replacement of such stocks, to defray agricultural operating expenses of the producer.".

S. 2367. A bill to provide for the duty-free entry of certain structures and parts for use in the W.M. Keck Observatory project, Mauna Kea, Hawaii; to the Committee on Finance.

DUTY-FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN STRUCTURES AND PARTS FOR THE W.M. KECK OBSERVATORY PROJECT

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am today introducing, along with my distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and equally distinguished colleagues from California [Mr. CRANSTON] and [Mr. WILSON] as cosponsors, a bill, S. 2367, which will provide for the duty-free entry of certain structures and parts to be used in the W.M. Keck Observatory project at Mauna Kea, HI.

Mr. President, this project of the California Association for Research in Astronomy [CARA] will be entirely financed with private funds contributed by the W.M. Keck Foundation and other supporters of astronomy at the California Institute of Technology and the University of California. Once the telescope is installed and the observatory completed in 1992, its operating costs will be assumed by the University of California system, and will be shared between scientists from Cal Tech, the University of California and the University of Hawaii, on whose land this project will be built. This new facility will be twice as large as the 200-inch Hale telescope on Mount Palomar and will enable scientists to peer 12 billion years into the past, three-quarters of the way to the origins of the universe. The telescope will be powerful enough to see a single candle on the Earth's moon or a black hole at the center of the galaxy. The W.M. Keck telescope, which will operate with optical and infrared capability, will assist American scientists in answering some of the most perplexing and difficult astronomical riddles.

Mr. President, the proposed legislation is necessary because the U.S. Customs Service of the Department of the Treasury has denied an application for duty-free entry of mirror blanks for the multiple mirror telescope being erected on Mauna Kea. The Customs Service determined that since the mirror blanks are components as defined by 15 CFR 301.2(k) of the regulations of the Departments of Commerce and Treasury, the imported components may not enter duty free under item 851.60 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States [TSUS]. However, the California Institute of Technology asserts that the mirror blanks are not components but would more aptly be described as instruments and thus eligible for exemption under item 851.60 TSUS.

The legislation which I am introducing today with my three cosponsors would provide that the mirror blanks, which must be imported for finishing from West Germany, and the dome, which must be imported from a specialty steel plant in Canada, shall not be subject to duties. Mr. President, as we have done in similar cases in the past, we should grant duty-free entry of the structures and parts for use in the proposed W.M. Keck Observatory in keeping with our commitment to scientific research and exploration. I urge expeditious and favorable consideration of the measure so that the construction of this extraordinary project may proceed without delay.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2367

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to admit free of duty the following articles for the use of the California Association for Research in Astronomy in the construction of the optical telescope for the W.M. Keck Observatory Project, Mauna Kea, Hawaii:

(1) The telescope structure.

(2) The observatory domes, produced by Brittain Steel, Ltd., of Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

(3) The primary mirror blanks, produced by the Schott Glassworks, Frankfurt, Federal Republic of Germany.

If the liquidation of the entry of any such article has become final, the entry shall be reliquidated and the appropriate refund of duty made.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 2368. A bill to amend part B of title XVIII to provide for improve procedures for payment for physicians' services under the Medicare Program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REFORM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues Senators DURENBERGER and BENTSEN in introducing a bill that reaffirms our intention to work toward needed reforms in the way we pay physicians in the Medicare Program. While all of us are aware that precipitous changes in this area will not work and could be detrimental to everyone concerned, let us recognize that the present system, referred to as customary, prevailing, and reasonable [CPR], is in terrible shape. Absolutely no one, not Medicare beneficiaries, physicians, the Medicare carriers, the Congress, nor the administration, believes that the current payment mechanism should be preserved. It is unfair, inflationary, and, perhaps worst of all, unintelligible.

For these reasons alone we must agree that the time is right to lay the foundation for alternative payment approaches. My colleagues and I propose to do just that—to begin to establish principles for payment reform. We welcome comments and suggestions on the bill we have introduced.

OBJECTIVES OF PAYMENT REFORM

Our efforts in the area of Medicare physician payment reform must be consistent with our objectives for the Medicare Program in general. It is our job to assure that Medicare beneficiaries continue to maintain access to quality medical services both now and in the future. Access to needed services as well as the quality of those services are certainly paramount concerns in any system reform we may envision. Yet we must not forget that we are also charged with a responsibility to future Medicare beneficiaries. Our information and experience tell us that the future is in jeopardy.

The 1986 annual report of the boad of trustees of the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance [SMI] Trust Fund has recommended that Congress take action to curtail the programs rapid growth. The Congressional Budget Office has warned us that, despite continuation of a freeze in physican payments throughout 1985, the growth rates for total reimbursements and for reimbursements per Medicare beneficiary doubled from 1984 to 1985 and the rate of growth in real reimbursements per enrollee quadrupled—from 2.7 percent in 1984 to 10.8 percent in 1985.

My colleagues and I believe that reforms in the way Medicare pays physicians will be critical to the continued stability and actuarial soundness of the SMI Trust Fund. And that's also our job—to fulfill our commitment to the future.

PERIOD OF REFORM

The distinguished Senators from Minnesota and Texas, Senators DURENBERGER and BENTSEN, as well as this Senator, would like nothing better than to offer an instant solution to our current dilemma. Let me warn that those who argue for a quick and simplistic solution are at risk of seriously endangering the Medicare Program and those individuals whose very lives may be at stake. Similarly, those who would do nothing fail to recognize the immediacy of the problem. We have an old system that is out of place in today's world. For more than a decade we have locked into place a payment mechanism that is, at best, inconsistent in taking into account legitimate variations in practice costs, that distorts physicians' choices in undesirable ways and fails to foster cost-conscious behavior.

We must move forward. While I agree that, in the short run, will be obliged to take immediate action on some glaring problems under the current customary, prevailing and reasonable system, we cannot stop there. We must continue our efforts to construct a relative value scale that will serve as a basis for construction of a new payment system. At this time I personally view a fee schedule as logical, necessary, and a more equitable basis of payment. Further, regardless of any ultimate goals for the future, a fee schedule will still be an asset. In fact, a well-constructed and well-maintained relative value scale will serve multiple aims, regardless of the future direction of physician payment, whether that future includes capitation, per case payments, or fee schedules. As we indicated in the Consolidated Budget Act of 1985, I expect that we will proceed as rapidly as possible toward that end.

Seminal research on the construction of a relative value scale is being conducted by Doctors William Hsiao and William Stason at Harvard. The results of that study should be available in approximately 2 years. I am looking forward to the results of that major undertaking and feel confident that the researchers and the medical profession will join together to accomplish what needs to be done.

DEVELOPMENT OF A FEE SCHEDULE

A relative value system does not, in and of itself, solve our physician payment problem. The results must be transferred into dollar values and a simple multiplier will not work. My colleagues and I are seeking the construction of a multiplier or adjuster that will take into account legitimate variations in physician practice costs and one that will put an end to unfair discrimination experienced by those practitioners who locate in areas where services have often been unfairly undervalued.

In particular, we have identified our commitment to develop a payment system that no longer overstates urban/rural differences in cost for physicians. Physicians who practice in rural areas should be fairly reimbursed for their services, as should their urban counterparts. The only way to accomplish equitable reimbursement reform is to eliminate historic imbalances and to be sure that adequate information systems are in place to keep the system current and responsible to regional and local needs.

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

Our bill consist of four major provisions:

First, we have established parameters for the use of so-called inherently reasonable determinations concerning physician payment. Specifically, we set forth a process that includes requiring public as well as professional review and comment of short-term revisions in the way Medicare pays physicians.

Second, in addition to restating our intent to support the construction of a relative value scale, we require the development of an index that is designed to more accurately account for legitimate variations in the cost of a physicians's practice. We seek to minimize the current wide disparity in payment rates particularly the urban/rural differential.

Third, the system used to classify physician services, called the Health Care Financing Administration's Common Procedural Codes [HCPCS], will remain the basis of payment. However, the payment categories, not the codes, shall be collapsed and restructured in order to limit incentives to provide greater volume and intensity of services.

Fourth, the current medical economic index, which has been reestimated to adjust for prior overstatement of the "housing" versus "rental" component of the index, shall be phased for over a 2-year period instead of the single adjustment proposal of the administration.

The Finance Committee will begin hearings on physician payment in the Medicare Program this week. I am looking forward to continuing our work on this important area and, again, I would like to encourage comments and suggestions from my colleagues as we proceed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2368

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Medicare Physician Payment Reform Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. PROCEDURES FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL LIMITS ON REASONABLE CHARGES.

(a) FACTORS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN DETERMINING INHERENT REASONABLENESS OF CHARGES.—Section 1842(b)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(8)), as added by section 9304(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as clauses (i) and (ii), respectively;

(2) by inserting "(A)" after "(8)"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B)(i) The factors pursuant to subparagraph (A)(1) with respect to payment for physicians' services may include, but shall not be limited to, the following:

"(I) prevailing charges for a service in a particular locality are significantly in excess of or below prevailing charges in other comparable localities;

"(II) the programs established under this title and title XIX are the sole or primary sources of payment for a service;

"(III) the marketplace for a service is not truly competitive because of a limited number of physicians who perform that service;

"(IV) there have been increases in charges for a service that cannot be explained by inflation or technology;

"(VI) the prevailing charges for a service under this part are substantially higher than the payments made for the service by other purchasers in the same locality.

"(ii) The factors considered under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall take into account regional differences in fees, unless there is substantial economic justification for a uniform fee or a uniform payment limit. Such substantial economic justification must be explained by the Secretary in the rulemaking process.".

(b) PROCEDURES.—Section 1842(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)), as amended by section 9304(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9)(A) In the case of any physicians' service with respect to which the Secretary—

"(i) determines that the application of this subsection results in the determination of a reasonable charge that, by reason of its grossly excessive or grossly deficient amount, is not inherently reasonable, and

"(ii) proposes to establish a reasonable charge that is realistic and equitable or a methodology for arriving at such a change, the Secretary shall publish notice of such proposal in the Federal Register.

"(B) A notice required by subparagraph (A) shall specify the charge or methodology proposed to be established with respect to a service and shall explain the factors and data that the Secretary took into account in determining the charge or methodology so specified.

"(C) After publication of the notice required by subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall allow not less than 60 days for public comment on the proposal.

"(D) In addition to carrying out its functions under section 1845, the Physician Payment Review Commission (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'Commission') shall comment on any such proposal within the period of comment allowed by the Secretary pursuant to subparagraph (C).

"(E)(i) Taking into consideration the comments made by the Commission and the public, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a final determination with respect to the reasonable charge or methodology to be established with respect to the service.

"(ii) A final determination published pursuant to clause (i) shall explain the factors and data that the Secretary took into consideration in making the final determination, and shall include and respond to the comments made by the Commission pursuant to subparagraph (D).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to regulations promulgated as final regulations after April 1, 1986.

SEC. 3. DEVELOPMENT OF FEE SCHEDULE FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES.

(a) RECOMMENDATION.—Section 1845(e) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 9305(b) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) In making recommendations with respect to the application of the relative value scale for purposes of establishing a fee schedule, the Secretary shall—

"(i) develop and assess an appropriate index to be used for making adjustments to reflect justifiable differences in the costs of practice based upon geographic location without exacerbating the geographic maldistribution of physicians, and

"(ii) assess the advisability and feasibility of developing an appropriate adjustment to assist in attracting and retaining physicians in medically underserved areas.

"(B) In carrying out the requirements of subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall take into consideration the recommendations made by the Physician Payment Review Commission.

"(C)(i) The Secretary shall develop an interim index under subparagraph (A)(i) prior to July 1, 1987, based upon the most accurate and recent data that is available with respect to the costs of practice.

"(ii) The Secretary shall collect data with respect to the costs of practice (including, but not limited to, data on nonphysician personnel costs, malpractice insurance costs, and commercial rents) for the purpose of refining the index under subparagraph (A)(i) prior to July 1, 1988, and periodically updating the index thereafter.

"(D) In conjunction with developing an index under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall conduct a study of the advisability of redefining the pay localities designated by carriers.".

(c) DUTIES OF PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REVIEW COMMISSION.—Section 1845(b)(3) of such Act is amended by inserting "and respecting the index and the adjustment described in subsection (e)(4)(A)" after "subsection (e)".

SEC. 4. DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF HCFA COMMON PROCEDURE CODING SYSTEM.

(a) DEVELOPMENT.—Not later than July 1, 1987, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall simplify the payment methodology under the HCFA Common Procedure Coding System to ensure that such methodology minimizes the possibility of overstating the intensity or volume of services provided.

(b) HOSPITALS.—Not later than July 1, 1987, each carrier with which the Secretary has entered into a contract under section 1842 of the Social Security Act, and each fiscal intermediary which processes claims under part B of title XVIII of such Act, shall require hospital providers of outpatient services to adopt and utilize the HCFA Common Procedure Coding System for purposes of such part.

(c) CARRIERS AND INTERMEDIARIES.—Not later than January 1, 1988, each carrier with which the Secretary has entered into a contract under section 1842 of the Social Security Act, and each fiscal intermediary which processes claims under part B of title XVIII of such Act, shall adopt and utilize the payment methodology based on the HCFA Common Procedure Coding System (as revised by the Secretary in accordance with subsection (a)) for purposes of such part.

SEC. 5. MEDICARE ECONOMIC INDEX FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES.

(a) IMPLEMENTATION OF CERTAIN ADJUSTMENT.—The adjustments to the medicare economic index for physicians' services proposed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") to take into account the retroactive revision of the data and statistics relating to office space on which earlier adjustments to the index required by section 1842(b)(3) of the Social Security Act were based shall be made in two stages, with one-half of such adjustment to be made to the index to become effective January 1, 1987, and one-half of such adjustment to be made to the index to become effective January 1, 1988.

(b) NOTIFICATION OF CHANGES.—The Secretary shall publish notice of any proposed change in the methodology, basis, or elements of the medicare economic index for physicians' services in the Federal Register and shall allow not less than 60 days for public comment on the proposal. Taking into consideration the comments made by the public, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a final determination with respect to such proposal.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am proud to introduce, along with my distinguished colleagues, Senators DOLE and BENTSEN, a bill which will reform the way in which Medicare pays physicians—by specifying Medicare policy guidelines for setting "inherently reasonable" physician fees and by laying out a roadmap for further reform of fee-for-service physician payment. The bill itself is short and simple—but the framework it lays out will guide far-reaching future changes in Medicare payments to physicians.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The Medicare Program is undergoing a process of fundamental reform that is far from over. The goal of that process is not budget cutting per se, it is health policy reform. We are changing the incentives that the program provides to hospitals, doctors, and elderly and disabled beneficiaries so that the Medicare Program contributes to a more efficient health care market—a health care system which provides real value for the dollars spent. And we are simplifying the program so that Medicare beneficiaries can know the dollar value of their coverage before they purchase a service and can use that knowledge to their advantage as wise health care consumers.

This Medicare reform is proceeding in several areas: Prospective payment for hospitalization per episode of illness has removed the inflationary incentives that were inherent in the old retrospective, cost-based reimbursement for hospital care. And Medicare beneficiaries now have the freedom to enroll in a HMO or prepaid plan and opt out of the traditional Medicare Program.

I have said repeatedly that beneficiary choice of health plans is the future of Medicare. In time I can foresee Medicare getting out of the insurance business and looking more like the Federal employee health benefits plans where Federal employees are given the choice between alternative coverage plans. Thus, Medicare would continue to pay for insurance coverage, but beneficiaries would get to choose the type of health insurance coverage they prefer.

The HMO option has already been chosen by more than 500,000 beneficiaries. In the future we will expand on the types of plans that are allowed to offer health care packages to Medicare beneficiaries. This process, however, will necessarily be gradual. A shift for the majority of those who participate in Medicare to competitive plans is years away, and will come about slowly as efficient, quality plans become more available and as tastes of Americans change.

Obviously, the process of reform can't wait for competitive health plans to one day spring up in full bloom all over the country. The competitive health care marketplace for plans is growing gradually—as it should. In the meantime, we must continue with prospective payment reform of the traditional Medicare Program. This reform will pay off by simplifying the Medicare Program for the beneficiaries and providing better incentives for high quality efficient delivery of services in the health care marketplace. Therefore, it is important to turn our Medicare reform effort to physician payment, just as the Congress has restructured payment for hospitalization.

When the per episode-of-illness payment scheme—payment by diagnosis related groups [DRG's]—was established in 1983, many of us in Congress envisioned that it would eventually be applied to all of the health care costs related to a given illness. I was an especially vocal adherent of that prospect at the time. I believed it would make the program simpler for beneficiaries, reduce the number of forms they had to contend with, and give all providers positive incentives to give cost effective as well as quality care. But we needed methodologies on how to construct DRG's which would apply to physicians' services and other noninpatient hospital services.

The research, mandated by the Social Security Amendments of 1983, was carried out and last fall, at a hearing of the Finance Committee's Health Subcommittee, I learned that there are many problems with applying DRG's to both hospitals and doctors for their services through one combined payment, and that the physician DRG for many services may be impractical.

So we must pursue other types of prospective payment reform for physicians—a type of reform that is less revolutionary perhaps but not less important. Therefore, rather than making a quantum leap to a brand new payment method for all physicians' services, we will address—one-by-one—the improper economic incentives which are currently built into Medicare and the complexity with which beneficiaries must struggle.

MEDICARE PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REFORM

Medicare beneficiaries, individual physicians, and organized medicine agree that the current "customary, prevailing, and reasonable" charge formula for physician reimbursement under Medicare is complex, unfair, inefficient, and must be changed.

For example, there are tremendous geographic variations in what Medicare considers a "reasonable charge" for a particular service. Some difference in fees across this vast Nation are to be expected, just as the cost of living differs across the country. But there is no reason that Medicare should pay twice as much for by-pass surgery in Manhattan as it pays for the same procedure in Minneapolis and St. Paul. Or that Medicare should pay anywhere from $30 to $103.15 for an initial comprehensive office visit. That isn't just variation—it's ludicrous.

Second, the Medicare reimbursement formula contains no procedure for modifying approved charges to reflect changes in medical practice over time. Physicians' allowed charges under Medicare are set high for new procedures. But when efficiency is gained through improvements in technology, or when formerly complicated or high risk procedures become relatively routine, the change is not reflected in lower fees. Cataract extractions are a prime example of this "downward stickiness" of the Medicare payment formula—the time it takes to perform the procedure has dropped by nearly 50 percent, along with the level of risk to the patient and the frequency with which hospitalization is necessary, yet the price for the physician's service keeps going up.

Third, there is also considerable variation between what Medicare pays general practitioners and what it pays specialists for the same service. Under the current system, Medicare's insurance carriers have the power to decide whether to pay a specialist a higher fee than a generalist. They often do recognize such a difference in fees, which then becomes built into Medicare's reimbursement formula and produces higher and higher payments to specialists in following years—all without a sufficient evaluation over time as to whether or not what a specialist provides is really a different service.

Fourth, Medicare's "reasonable charge" formula locks physicians who began practicing decades ago into their old low fees and allows only limited periodic increases, while new physicians just starting to practice can receive higher "allowed charges" from Medicare because they have no past to bind them. For example, most Blue Shield plans allow new doctors to set their fees at the 80th or 90th percentile of the established customary fees in their locality. This means that new doctors can often get from Medicare the same fees as the most expensive doctors are charging, while experienced doctors providing the same services find their fees controlled more tightly and held to a lower level.

Fifth, physicians performing procedures, such as tests or surgery, are reimbursed at rates that far exceed the approved charges for visits which consist of examining the patient, taking a medical history, or providing medical counsel. I met with a family physician the other day who received less for treating a patient's heart condition over a period of years—over 55 hours of service—than her surgeon received for performing a 4-hour procedure. So in terms of Medicare dollars for physicians, actions speak louder than words—and even louder than diagnosis and conservative medical practice. This is a powerful incentive which may lead some unscrupulous physicians to perform unnecessary tests in order to maximize their income. This unnecessary care represents an additional cost to patients and a risk to their health. And we all know it does occur.

Sixth, the formula for determining what Medicare will pay physicians is confusing, both to physicians and to beneficiaries. Medicare beneficiaries can't possibly know in advance how much the CPR formula will allow any particular doctor to be paid. Therefore, they can't know before they receive the service and file their claims with Medicare exactly how much of the charge they will be personally liable for. With this lack of information, they can't possibly be wise health care consumer or go shopping for a physician that they are able and willing to afford. They can look for participating physicians in the hope that those physicians will charge the lowest prices, but that ain't necessarily so.

In the current system, then, competition and consumer choice based on economy and quality is all but impossible. Without any advance information about what Medicare will pay, patients can't make independent choices among physicians; and without an informed, powerful consumer population, physicians do not have to compete on price or convenience or quality.

An article by two physician payment experts in HCFA's Office of Research appeared in the June 1985 New England Journal of Medicine and summed up the situation very well:

> . . . the payment system encourages physicians to specialize, to practice in urban and suburban areas, and to perform services in hospital settings—all in the face of stated national policies of encouraging primary care, rural practice, and out-of-hospital services.

Furthermore, the formula which determines how much Medicare will pay for a physician's service inevitably leads to increased charges. Medicare pays the lower of actual, customary, and prevailing charges. So physicians have an incentive to raise their charges to at least the level of prevailing charges in the community. The meaning of this to Medicare patients is even more profound than it is to the Medicare Program—to get a small increase in the amount Medicare will pay, doctors must make big increases in the amounts they ask patients to pay.

What can end this torturous spiral? In the past 2 years, freezes on actual fees have been used to control the growth in Medicare Program costs. But freezes are budget actions that make no health policy sense—they don't adequately differentiate between efficient and inefficient providers of health care. Freezes allow inefficient doctors with high approved charges under Medicare to continue to receive those high charges. And they force doctors who have held their charges down to continue to hold them down even though a new, young doctor down the street can receive 50 percent more for the same service while subject to the same freeze.

Clearly, freezes are inappropriate and unfair, and other avenues for controlling costs as well as reform must be taken.

COBRA

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 sketched out some general guidelines for the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] to pursue for continued refinement of Medicare physician payment. First, it established a Physician Payment Review Commission, comparable to the Prospective Payment Commission for Medicare, which would advise the HHS Secretary and Congress on future physician payment reform initiatives. Second, it instructed the Secretary, with the Commission's help, to come up with a relative value scale for physicians' services and with recommendations for using that RVS to establish a fee schedule to replace the CPR system for paying physicians. Third, it instructed the Secretary in the meantime to refine CPR by promulgating regulations to specify which fees are currently set so high or so low that they are inherently unreasonable and thus require revision immediately regardless of what the customary, prevailing, or actual billed charge is.

COBRA laid out a broad outline of future policy. It did not contain sufficient specifics regarding the policy concerns that need to be taken into account by the Department or procedural safeguards that should be followed to protect beneficiaries and physicians from the fallout of any fee revisions by the Secretary.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S FISCAL YEAR 1987 BUDGET

What has the administration proposed as "physician payment reform" for fiscal year 1987? Frankly, the administration's fiscal year 1987 Medicare budget basically tells Congress "Don't call us, we'll call you." The administration plans to wipe out a Medicare economic index adjustment to physician's fees that is 30 months overdue, to impose new utilization controls on physician practices, and to make the first nationwide reductions in fees that it considers inherently unreasonable—all without sufficient assessment of the ultimate impact on Medicare beneficiaries or a proper day in court for the physicians affected, and all by instructions to insurance carriers who pay the Medicare part B claims or small print notices in the Federal Register.

The bill we are introducing today makes clear that physician payment reform is an act of health policy which requires congressional direction and close public scrutiny—it is not a cover for covert budget savings.

COBRA established some guidelines for the future. It instructed the Secretary on a direction for physician payment reform. But, after seeing the administration's fiscal year 1987 budget for Medicare, it is clear that the Congress has to reiterate its message and be even more specific about its intent.

S. 2368 the bill has three major provisions.

First, it lays out the process which the HHS Secretary would have to follow in order to revise what Medicare will pay doctors when the statutory "CPR" formula produces an inherently unreasonable fee. And it stresses Congress' concern about physicians who are actually underpaid for their services.

Second, it spells out specific factors that Congress would like the Secretary and the Physician Payment Review Commission to consider when developing a relative value scale upon which a fee schedule could be based.

This will make sure that the fee schedule that is developed does not exacerbate the current problem of geographic maldistribution of physicians, and does not hamper access for Medicare beneficiaries by allowing fees which don't recognize local costs of practice and therefore drive physicians away from Medicare patients.

Finally, the bill softens the budget-motivated blow that the administration plans to deal to doctors regarding the Medicare Economic Index—or MEI.

The administration has proposed keeping the MEI so low that there would be almost no increase in prevailing charges. The administration claims this is necessary because the increase that was allowed in the past was based on the wrong statistics: The office space component of the MEI, which reflects the cost to a physician of maintaining an office, has been based in the past on the housing cost component of the Consumer Price Index. Last year, the Bureau of Labor Statistics decided to use rental costs rather than mortgage costs as the measure of housing costs for the CPI.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics intends to use these new components from now on. But the administration intends to go back to the first year that the MEI existed, figure out what it would have been had the different component been used, and then subtract from physicians' payments this year the amount that would not have been paid to physicians in the past if the different MEI had been used.

This bill recognizes that it is not fair to repossess 13 years of mistaken payments from doctors all in 1 year. The same kind of statistical adjustment was made to Social Security payments recently but no one suggested that we ask Social Security recipients to give the program any refunds. Nothing in the Medicare law requires that we hit doctors with this all in 1 year either.

Medicare will be called on to contribute to deficit reduction, but this bill would phase in the adjustment so that doctors won't be hit so hard, and won't have as great an incentive to refuse assignment.

More work will need to be done in the future. Beneficiaries still face inappropriate deductibles and copayments. I believe this can be best addressed through restructuring of the Medicare benefit to fit the needs of today's seniors. Our work on catastrophic coverage should provide a means for this restructuring. And I hope the Private/Public Sector Advisory Committee on Catastrophic Health upon which I sit will take a broad view of restructuring. It is needed.

Also, S. 2368, and the direction it sets, focus on fairness of fees, not volume of services. Even a refined Medicare payment scheme still provides incentives to do more, and to upcode. Further work will have to be done to promote quality at a reasonable price. In the long run, capitation—prepaid health care in its various forms—may be the only means to encourage the provision of all the care beneficiaries need rather than all the care for which they and Medicare can be billed.

In the meantime, I am pleased to join my colleagues today to introduce S. 2368. By promoting greater fairness between physician specialties, greater fairness between new and experienced physicians, greater fairness regarding geographic disparity in charges, and greater flexibility in adjusting to change in technology, we can create a physician payment system which will not influence physicians to consider anything but their best medical judgment in delivering services to Medicare patients.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues from Kansas and Minnesota in introducing S. 2368, the Medicare Physician Payment Reform Act of 1986.

As many of our colleagues are aware, the President's budget proposal for fiscal year 1987 includes numerous provisions designed to save approximately $1.3 billion in physician reimbursement over the next 3 years. The savings are contingent on the use of an inherent reasonableness standard to implement regulatory changes in the reimbursement rates for certain services and procedures, and on modification of the Medical Economic Index [MEI] by which fee schedules are adjusted.

To carry out these proposals, the administration plans to reduce reimbursement rates for three procedures—coronary bypasses, cataract removal, and implantation of pacemakers—by approximately 10 percent. In addition, the Health Care Financing Administration recommends significant curtailment or elimination or reimbursement for assistants at surgery and standby anesthesia. Finally, the MEI would be rebased retroactively to 1973 to account for a change in the housing component of the index. The net effect of the MEI recalculation would be a drop from 2.8 to 0.8 percent in the fee schedule update for 1987, at a cost of $750 million over 3 years to physicians.

The Medicare Payment Reform Act of 1986 is an effort to revise the administration's recommendations to ensure that, where financing reform could impact the way in which medicine is practiced, physicians are an integral part of the decisionmaking process.

Specifically, S. 2368 requires that, in defining inherent reasonableness, the administration consult with the Physician Payment Assessment Commission to ensure that increases or decreases in the pricing of services are undertaken only after the potential effect on the quality of care is evaluated. To preclude hasty adoption of changes in reimbursement policy, the Secretary of HHS would be required to follow formal rulemaking procedures, including a 60-day public comment interval.

For, while it makes little sense for Medicare to pay vastly different rates for the same procedure performed on similar patients in a given geographic area, there are legitimate circumstances under which physicians may feel it is in the patient's best interest to have present an assistant at surgery or an anesthesiologist on standby status. The professional judgment of physicians is critical to the success of reimbursement policy reform that is in the best interest of Medicare beneficiaries.

With respect to recalibration of the MEI, I believe it is fair to say that the authors of this bill are unanimous in our view that a 0.8 percent increase in the fee screen is tantamount to an extension of the fee freeze for a third year. Though we concur that the Bureau of Labor Statistics methodological argument in favor of a new housing factor is compelling, we believe that rebasing should be phased in over at least 2 years—if not three—in order to permit physicians a reasonable increase in their fees. I should like to stress that we are not alone in our view, and that the American Association of Retired Persons has repeatedly warned that failure to mitigate the effects of these proposals will ultimately result in significant cost shifting to the elderly because fewer and fewer physicians will agree to take claims on assignment.

Finally, Mr. President, S. 2368 calls for a series of changes in the data base used to determine the costs of physician services. The intent of these provisions is to create a uniform standard of information that will be useful to providers and policy makers in future years. Today, it is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to make accurate comparative judgments about the relative costs of health care in different areas of the country. If we are to be prepared to make the best use of the results of the relative value scale study currently underway at Harvard, then it is imperative that we begin to collect and maintain data in a systematic and comparable format. This bill instructs the Secretary of HHS to develop and implement such an information base.

While S. 2368 represents, in my judgment, a significant improvement over the administration's budget recommendations, it is by no means etched in concrete. It is my hope that on April 25, when the Finance Committee's Subcommittee on Health holds its physician reimbursement hearing, interested individuals and groups will take the opportunity to suggest improvements in the legislative language we offer today. In particular, I invite providers familiar with records keeping systems used by small hospitals, to review section 4 of the bill. Although we have tried to ease the transition onto the common coding procedure by postponing the effective date to January 1, 1988, I am concerned that smaller hospitals with limited personnel and financial resources not be unduly penalized by an unrealistic timetable for implementing this change.

We invite our colleagues to join with us in pursuit of a reasonable physician reimbursement reform measure. Enactment of these or similar provisions should generate immediate savings in the Medicare Program and, perhaps more importantly, will establish a systematic process for periodic review of reimbursement rates and policies.

By Mr. FORD:

S. 2369. A bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust rail rates to reflect cost decreases due to deflations; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

DEFLATION AND RAIL RATES

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, during the 98th Congress, I introduced a bill, S. 1081, relating to rail rates and cost decreases. Recent events at the Interstate Commerce Commission have suggested it is time to take a second look at this issue.

On April 11, 1986, the ICC approved the second quarter 1986 Rail Cost Adjustment Factor [RCAF] submitted by the Association of American Railroads. The second quarter RCAF is 1.023 down from 4.3 percent from the first quarter figure of 1.069. The ICC stated that virtually all of the decline is due to a decrease in the price paid by the railroads for diesel fuel. If there is a big decrease in the cost of providing the transportation service, then the shipper should benefit. The ICC made no comment on the petition filed on March 12, 1986, by the National Industrial Transportation League to recover the costs of substantially declining fuel prices for the first quarter RCAF.

When the Congress passed the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, Congress sought to help the railroads recover their inflationary costs with minimal regulatory intervention. Automatic increases in the Staggers Act replaced the time-consuming general rate increase proceedings which were characteristic prior to 1980. Section 203 of the act, 49 U.S.C. 10707(a) states that the ICC shall publish a rail cost adjustment factor at least quarterly as a basis for a zone of rail rate flexibility for individual carrier rate changes.

At no time during the drafting of the Staggers Act did the sponsors ever envision a situation where the cost-of-living rate would decrease instead of increase, since the act was drafted during an economic period when inflation was rising steadily. Therefore, section 203 is silent on the issue of rate decreases when there is a reduction in inflationary costs from the previously published rail cost adjustment factor. Today, due to various causes, some railroad costs are actually decreasing.

Pursuant to the mandate of section 203 of the Staggers Act, the Commission adopted a cost recovery index which measures the changes in the average price of goods and services purchased by the railroads in providing transportation services. Ex Parte No. 290 (Sub-No. 2), Railroad Cost Recovery Procedures, 364 I.C.C. 841 (1981). Thereafter, the Commission published an index of costs by which railroads may multiply their rates on a quarterly basis. Rates increased by the cost index are immune from challenge on reasonableness grounds.

The Commission's decision in Ex Parte No. 290 (Sub-No. 2), supra, was affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on May 4, 1982. On April 19, 1982, the Commission ordered the proceeding reopened.

In that April 19, 1982, decision, the Commission denied a petition for a declaratory order on decreases in the index. This request was filed by the National Industrial Traffic League. The Commission stated that section 203 of the Staggers Act did not appear to contemplate reductions, nor did the Commission's Ex Parte No. 290 (Sub-No. 2) rules.

When the ICC made the announcement for the second quarter RCAF, it also decided to reconsider its cost escalation factor. The ICC will publish a proposed rulemaking that will propose changing the RCAF rules to require that rates increased through the RCAF be reduced when the RCAF declines. I take no position on whether the 1982 ruling on this matter is correct. I do believe that passage of this legislation will solve the dilemma once and for all. Should the ICC change the procedure administratively it is certain that the railroads will seek to overturn the rule. Since the ICC said 4 years ago that they cannot do what they are seeking to do now, the issue is certain to end up in the courts.

It is time for Congress to correct this oversight in the Staggers Act. Shippers and eventually consumers should benefit from the reduction of costs to the railroads due to deflation.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S. 2370. A bill to allow the Francis Scott Key Park Foundation, Inc., to erect a memorial in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY MEMORIAL

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, it is a pleasure for me to introduce today a bill authorizing establishment of a memorial to honor Francis Scott Key.

Generations of Americans have expressed their deepest partriotism while singing the moving verses of our national anthem, but few know much about the man who penned these important words. Key composed this patriotic song during the War of 1812 while on a mission to free an aging physician captured by the British. Even though he succeeded, Key himself was arrested because he knew of the imminent British plans to attack Baltimore. While under guard, he witnessed "the bombs bursting in air" over Fort McHenry. "By the dawn's early light" he saw that "our flag was still there," signaling defeat of the British. The immortal words of our national anthem, written 172 years ago, continue to capture the spirit of our great Nation. The "Star Spangled Banner" is our patriotic hymn, an affirmation of the love of country, and pride in our Nation which all Americans hold for the "land of the free and home of the brave."

To help ensure the significance of his legacy and those fateful early years of our Nation's history, the Francis Scott Key Foundation was formed in 1983 to achieve the goal of building a park in honor of the father of our national anthem. The foundation has embarked on a campaign to raise funds necessary to build the park, and over $130,000 has been donated to date. The funds have been contributed from individuals, corporations, and foundations. The bill I am introducing today will take advantage of these efforts and will authorize the construction of a memorial to Francis Scott Key at no expense to the taxpayer.

It is only fitting that we memorialize Francis Scott Key, the author of the "Star Spangled Banner." His life provides an inspiration to Americans by symbolizing the potential in each of us to make voluntary and extraordinary contributions to our country. We want to be reminded of his joy and, through it, our unique national heritage of freedom, human rights, and a free government. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to act favorably upon this legislation.●

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 2371. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to make administrative improvements in the programs of aid to families with dependent children and child support programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE AND CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATIVE IMPROVEMENTS ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, Daniel Webster, while standing on this floor some 140 years ago, said that labor is one of the great elements of society, one that upholds the great fabric of the State. And I can think of no better way than to quote Senator Webster to introduce the Family Assistance and Child Support Enforcement Administrative Improvements Act of 1986.

This legislation accompanies S. 1081, the Social Welfare Amendments of 1985, and in partnership will realize President Reagan's 1987 budget recommendations for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the Child Support Enforcement Programs.

As this distinguished body well knows, there is cause for concern about our country's social programs. Financially, the rapid growth in programs such as AFDC and Child Support Enforcement are making it difficult for us to see ourselves out of a deficit-ridden future. Of course, I understand the need for, and I support, strong, well-administered, and productive social services. I understand that we can't do everything for everyone everywhere, but I believe we can do something for someone somewhere. And I believe we must.

With this in mind, I see as our task to turn the support we offer into opportunity—opportunity both for the States with whom we share social responsibility and for the recipients of our services.

Currently, there is a serious discrepancy between various States and their expenditures for AFDC administration. And as current law mandates that the Federal Government match these administrative costs dollar for dollar it's unfair for the taxpayer and unfair for the well-managed, financially responsible States that those with excessive administrative costs are making more money for their inefficiency.

Therefore, I'm introducing this bill to bring equity to the process by reducing AFDC reimbursement for particularly high administrative costs. Under this Family Assistance and Child Support Enforcement Administrative Improvements Act of 1986, State administrative expenditures—based on a per recipient scale—that exceed 175 percent of the median for all States, will be matched by Federal dollars at a lower percentage. Instead of the standard 50 percent, the matching rate will be decreased to 25 percent for costs which exceed the 175 percent threshold.

This strategy was first recommended by the Grace Commission, and I believe it will serve as an effective alternative to the cap on Federal matching that is currently contained in S. 1081.

But this is not all the bill will do. This Administrative Improvements Act will also make the matching rate for statewide development of automatic data processing systems consistent with that of the Food Stamp Program by reducing the AFDC rate from 90 to 75 percent in 1987. There will also be a reduced match for automated data processing in the Child Support Enforcement Program. After giving States 3 years to complete their statewide systems development, the Federal matching will be reduced to the regular 50-percent rate for administrative costs. Additionally, the bill will accelerate the schedule provided for under current law to reduce the matching rate for child support enforcement program administrative costs by 4 percent.

These proposals are part of a broad effort to bring greater consistency in the level of Federal matching for entitlement program data systems development and to hold down administrative costs in a time of tight resources without limiting benefits to the poor. These proposals will result in a net savings of $56 million.

At this time, Mr. President, I want to urge my colleagues to support the remaining administration proposals contained in S. 1081. The provision I've introduced today only replaces the proposed cap on Federal matching. The bill will still contain the cornerstone of the administration's AFDC reform proposals—the new work programs.

Through its enactment, there will be an expansion in the opportunities for welfare recipients to get involved in work and labor-related activities. The bill will require all employable AFDC applicants and recipients to participate in some degree of activity as a condition of eligibility. Of course, States will design their appropriate work programs with a choice of several optional activities including the Community Work Experience Programs (Workfare), job search, grant diversion, and training under the Job Training Partnership Act.

In keeping with the State-Federal partnership which the AFDC program represents, all administrative costs associated with implementing and running work programs will be matched at an open-ended 50-percent rate, and work-related expenses will not be subject to the rules governing AFDC administrative costs.

It's clear that work programs for welfare recipients are effective. They offer, for the first time, a positive solution to the problem of long-term welfare dependency. They give welfare recipients the tools and motivation needed to become self-sufficient, and they bolster morale and self-esteem. And the community benefits.

S. 1081 will also benefit the community, the taxpayer, and the recipient by targeting benefits more carefully. First, to give caretakers of older children the incentive to be employed, it's proposed that AFDC benefits be eliminated when the youngest child reaches age 16. Second, in an effort to encourage parental responsibility for AFDC recipients who are still minors, the legislation also requires that minor caretaker relatives live with their parents—with certain exceptions—in order to receive AFDC assistance.

Mr. President, I strongly urge this body to enact the proposals that are contained in S. 1081, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. GARN (by request):

S. 2372. A bill to preserve the authority of the Federal banking supervisory agencies to arrange interstate acquisitions and mergers for failed and failing banks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS EMERGENCY ACQUISITIONS AMENDMENTS

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, today I am introducting by request amendments to title I of the Garn-St Germain Act. The amendments provide increased flexibility for the Federal bank regulators in minimizing the adverse effects of failing banks. In essence, the bill would lower the threshold size from $500 million to $250 million for an institution which could be sold across State lines, expands the approval of interstate acquisition from closed banks only to banks which the regulators believe are in danger of failing, and gives the Federal bank regulators authority to resolve problems with regard to chains of banks in multibank holding company States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, a letter from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and a section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2372

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Financial Institutions Emergency Acquisitions Amendments of 1986."

ASSISTED EXTRAORDINARY ACQUISITIONS

SEC. 2. Section 13(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1823(f)) is amended—

"(1)(A) Whenever the appropriate Federal banking agency is informed that an out-of-State bank or holding company is considering acquiring, directly, or indirectly, an insured bank with total assets of $250,000,000 or more that is in danger of closing, such agency shall (A) notify the Corporation of such, (B) consult with the Corporation before taking any action with respect to any such acquisition, and (C) provide the Corporation with notice of any final action taken.

"(B) Except as provided in paragraph (9), the provisions of this subsection shall be used exclusively in connection with any acquisition by or merger with an out-of-State bank or holding company with respect to which the Corporation provides assistance under its powers in subsection (c) and shall not be applicable if the Corporation does not provide such assistance. Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to limit the Corporation's powers in subsection (c) to assist a transaction."

(2) by striking out "$500,000,000" in subparagraph (2)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000,000".

(3) by amending subparagraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3)(A)(i) Whenever the appropriate Federal or State chartering authority has certified in writing that an insured bank with total assets of $250,000,000 or more (as determined from its most recent report of condition) is in danger of closing, the insured bank may merge with or its assets may be purchased by and its liabilities assumed by another depository institution, including an insured depository institution located in the State where the insured bank is chartered but established by an out-of-State bank or holding company, or its shares may be acquired by an out-of-State bank or holding company.

"(ii) Whenever the appropriate Federal or State chartering authority has certified in writing that one or more insured bank subsidiaries of a holding company are in danger of closing and such bank or banks hold aggregate assets equal to $250,000,000 or more (as determined from their most recent reports of condition) and such bank or banks represent 33 percent or more of the total assets of all insured bank subsidiaries (as determined from their most recent reports of condition) of such holding company, an out-of-State bank or holding company may (a) purchase the shares of or otherwise acquire the holding company that controls such bank or banks and all of such holding company's subsidiary banks or (b) purchase the shares or otherwise acquire any such bank or banks in danger of closing and/or establish one or more newly chartered banks located in the State where such banks in danger of closing are chartered for the purpose of merging with or purchasing the assets and assuming the liabilities of such banks, provided the aggregate total assets of such banks that are acquired equal $250,000,000 or more. Any out-of-State bank or holding company which, pursuant to clause (b), purchases shares of, or establishes a newly chartered bank for the purpose of merging with or acquiring the assets and assuming the liabilities of, such bank or banks in danger of closing may purchase the shares of or otherwise acquire any bank which is affiliated with such bank or banks.

"(iii) The Corporation may assist a merger or acquisition permitted under subparagraph (A) only where the board of directors or trustees of the insured bank has requested in writing that the Corporation assist a merger or a purchase.

If, at the time such assistance was granted to an insured bank or to affiliated insured banks, such bank's or banks' parent holding company or other affiliated banks were eligible also to be acquired by an out-of-State bank or holding company, pursuant to subparagraph (a)(ii), they shall remain eligible for such acquisition to the same extent as they were when the assistance was granted, so long as such assistance remains outstanding.

"(C) Where otherwise lawfully required, a transaction under this paragraph (3) must be approved by the primary Federal or State supervisor of all parties thereto.

"(D)(i) Before assisting a merger or acquisition permitted under subparagraph (A) or taking final action under subparagraph (B), the Corporation shall consult the State bank supervisor of the State in which the bank in danger of closing is chartered.

"(ii) The State bank supervisor shall be given a reasonable opportunity, and in no event less than forty-eight hours, to object to the use of the provisions of this paragraph.

"(iii) If the State supervisor objects during such period, the Corporation may use the authority of this paragraph only by a unanimous vote of the Board of Directors. The Board of Directors shall provide to the State supervisor, as soon as practicable, a written certification of its determination."

(4) by redesignating subparagraphs (i) through (iii) of paragraph (4) as subparagraphs (A) through (C), respectively.

(5) by amending newly redsignated subparagraph (4)(A) to read as follows:

"(A) Neither section 3(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, section 408(e)(3) of the National Housing Act, any provision of State law, nor the constitution of any State, shall bar approval, consummation or retention of an acquisition authorized under paragraph (2) or (3) except that an out-of-State bank may make such an acquisition only if such ownership is otherwise specifically authorized."

(6) by adding new subparagraphs (D) and (E) to paragraph (4) as follows:

"(D) An out-of-State bank holding company that acquires, directly or indirectly, a bank under paragraph (2) or (3) shall thereafter be entitled to acquire additional banks located in the three largest metropolitan or consolidated metropolitan statistical areas or cities in any State in which the acquired bank is located to the same extent as a bank holding company that is principally located (as such term is defined in section 3(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956) in such State.

"(E) A holding company which, directly or indirectly, acquires control of one or more banks or a holding company under paragraph (2) or (3) shall not, by reason of such acquisition or expansion, be required as the result of the law of any State to divest any other bank or banks or be prevented from acquiring, directly or indirectly, any other banks or holding company."

(7) by striking "to permit" in paragraph (5).

(8) by striking out "closed" the second time it appears and "bank" the sixth time it appears in subparagraph (6)(A).

(9) by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) in paragraph (8) as subparagraphs (D) and (E), respectively, and by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) a bank is 'in danger of closing' if:

"(i) the bank is not likely to be able to meet the demands of its depositors or pay its obligations in the normal course and there is no reasonable prospect for it to do so without federal assistance; or

"(ii) the bank has incurred or is likely to incur losses that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital and there is no reasonable prospect for replenishment of the bank's capital without federal assistance; or

"(iii) other grounds exist or are likely to exist under applicable State law for closing the bank; and

"(C) banks are 'affiliated' if each is a subsidiary (as defined in section 2(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956) of the same holding company; and"

(10) by adding a new paragraph (9) to read as follows:

"(9) Nothing in this subsection shall prevent the Corporation, in its sole discretion, from assisting, directly or indirectly, the acquisition of an open or closed insured bank by an out-of-State bank or holding company where such an acquisition is otherwise authorized under applicable State law."

(11) by adding a new paragraph (10) to read as follows:

"(10) In any transaction authorized under this subsection, no assistance by the Corporation shall be provided to a subsidiary of a holding company that is not an insured bank."

UNASSISTED EXTRAORDINARY ACQUISITIONS

SEC. 3. Section 3(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 U.S.C. 1842(d)) is amended by designating the first paragraph thereof as paragraph (1) and inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection or any provision of state law or the constitution of any state.

"(B) a bank holding company that acquires a bank or banks in danger of closing under subparagraph (A) may acquire a bank holding company that controls such bank or banks and/or may acquire the assets or shares of any bank affiliated with such bank or banks, provided in either case that the total assets of such bank or banks in danger of closing represent at least 33 percent of the total assets of all affiliated banks;

"(C) A bank holding company that acquires the assets or shares of a bank in danger of closing under subparagraph (A) or (B) may acquire additional banks located in the three largest metropolitan or consolidated metropolitan statistical areas or cities in any state in which a bank acquired pursuant to this paragraph is located to the same extent as a bank holding company that is principally located (as defined in paragraph (1) hereof) in such state;

"(D) A bank holding company that acquires and retains control of one or more banks pursuant to this paragraph shall not, by reason of such acquisition or retention, be required to divest any other bank or banks or be prevented from acquiring any other banks.

"(3) A bank holding company may not acquire the shares or assets of a bank or bank holding company under paragraph (2) (A) or (B) unless the acquisition has been approved by the board of directors of such bank or of a bank holding company that controls such bank.

"(4)(A) A bank is in danger of closing if the appropriate federal or state chartering authority certifies in writing that:

"(i) the bank is not likely to be able to meet the demands of its depositors or pay its obligations in the normal course and there is no reasonable prospect for it to do so without federal assistance; or

"(ii) the bank has incurred or is likely to incur losses that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital and there is no reasonable prospect for replenishment of the bank's capital without federal assistance; or

"(iii) other grounds exist or are likely to exist under applicable State law for closing the bank.

"(B) A bank is affiliated with another bank if each is a subsidiary of the same bank holding company.

"(C) The assets of a bank shall be determined on the basis of its most recent report of condition.

"(5)(A) No bank in danger of closing or bank holding company that controls such bank shall enter into any discussions relating to the acquisition of such bank under paragraph (2) unless—

"(i) the State bank supervisor for each state in which such bank or its affiliated banks is located has been notified of such proposed discussions, and

"(ii) such bank or bank holding company has attempted to arrange an acquisition that does not require assistance under section 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act or use of the interstate provisions of paragraph (2). An application submitted under paragraph (2) (A) or (B) must describe efforts made by such bank or bank holding company to satisfy this requirement and the reasons for the rejection of any proposals submitted.

"(B) Before approving an application pursuant to paragraph (2) involving a bank in danger of closing or its affiliated banks, the Board shall consult the State bank supervisor of the State or States in which the bank or banks are located.

"(C) The State bank supervisor or supervisors shall be given a reasonable opportunity, and in no event less than forty-eight hours, to object to approval of the application.

"(D) Except as provided in subparagraph (E), the Board shall not approve the application if, during the notice period provided in subparagraph (C), such State bank supervisor certifies to the Board that—

"(i) a person or persons have, prior to the notice period in subparagraph (C), offered or attempted to offer to acquire each of the banks in danger of closing in a transaction that does not require assistance under section 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act or use of the interstate provisions of paragraph (2), and

"(ii) such person or persons, in the judgment of such State bank supervisor, are likely to be able to secure all regulatory approvals necessary to consummate such acquisition promptly, and to comply with all applicable financial and managerial and other regulatory requirements, including recapitalizing all such banks in danger of closing without impairing the financial resources of the acquiring person or persons.

"(E) The Board may approve the application if the Board determines that the person or persons certified by the State bank supervisor under subparagraph (D) do not have the financial resources necessary to obtain regulatory approval to acquire such bank, including the resources to recapitalize all such banks in danger of closing without impairing the financial resources of the acquiring person or persons, or that such person or persons do not meet other applicable regulatory requirements.

"(6) If the Board has received a certification from the appropriate federal or state chartering authority pursuant to paragraph (2) or section 13(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act that a bank is in danger of closing, the Board may dispense with the notice and hearing requirements of section 3(b) of this Act with respect to any application received to acquire such bank or its affiliated banks and may reduce the post-approval waiting period of section 11 of this Act to five days or, if the Board finds that immediate action is necessary to prevent the probable failure of any such banks, eliminate such period."

WAIVER OF NOTICE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 4. Section 4(c)(8) of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)(8)) is amended by adding a new sentence to the end thereof to read as follows:

"In the event an application is filed under this paragraph in connection with an application by a bank holding company to acquire control of a bank in danger of closing or its affiliated banks pursuant to section 3(d)(2) of this Act or section 13(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the Board may dispense with the notice and hearing requirement of this paragraph and the Board may approve or deny the application under this paragraph without notice or hearing."

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION, BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
April 23, 1986.

Hon. JAKE GARN,
Chairman, Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN GARN: By letter of April 8, we, together with the Comptroller of the Currency, wrote to you asking that Congress extend and liberalize the emergency acquisition provisions of the Garn-St Germain Depository Institutions Deregulation Act of 1982. Congress has now passed a 90-day extension of that Act.

With respect to liberalizing the emergency acquisition provisions, in that letter we recommended a number of changes designed to strengthen the ability of the regulators to deal with problem situations including authority to permit the out-of-state acquisition of failing banks and the out-of-state acquisition of a bank holding company when the failing bank exceeds the statutory size threshold and represents a sizable part of the holding company system. We also recommended that the asset size of banks eligible to be acquired be reduced from $500 million to $250 million.

We are forwarding to you at this time proposed legislation to implement these recommendations. The Comptroller of the Currency has initiated the Administration's formal review of this bill. It is our hope that Congress will be able to consider these matters at the earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,

L. WILLIAM SEIDMAN.
PAUL A. VOLCKER.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE PROPOSED ASSISTED AND UNASSISTED EXTRAORDINARY ACQUISITION AMENDMENTS

Section 1. This section defines the Act as the "Financial Institutions Emergency Acquisition Amendments of 1986."

Sec. 2. Subsection 13(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which was enacted as part of Title I of the Garn-St Germain Act, currently permits interstate acquisitions for banks with assets of $500 million or more—but only under limited conditions. Stock institutions, including all eligible commercial banks, may be acquired only if they are closed. An eligible mutual savings bank may be acquired prior to closing—but only if its board of trustees and chartering authority specify in writing that it is in danger of closing and request the FDIC to assist an acquisition or merger. If a bank is acquired by an out-of-state bank holding company the bank may branch throughout the State to the same extent as an in-State national bank. Absent specific State authorizing legislation, however, bank holding companies may not be acquired by out-of-State holding companies and an out-of-State holding company that acquires a bank under subsection 13(f) may not expand in the State other than by branching of the newly acquired bank. This means in unit banking States, the out-of-State bank holding company's entry is limited to the existing office site of the bank it acquires.

The amendments to subsection 13(f) will change existing legislation in four crucial areas. First, the amendments will permit qualified stock institutions, as well as mutual savings banks, to be acquired by out-of-State holding companies before they fail. Second, they lower the threshold measurement for eligibility for both closed and failing banks from $500,000,000 to $250,000,000. Third, the amendments permit a holding company to be sold, in whole or in part, to an out-of-State holding company if the in-State holding company has a bank subsidiary or subsidiaries with aggregate banking assets of $250,000,000 or more in danger of closing and such bank or banks represent 33% or more of the holding company's banking assets. Finally, they allow an acquiring out-of-State bank holding company limited expansion rights in the State of acquisition through the bank holding company structure.

Paragraph (1).—New subparagraph (A) provides for notice and consultation between the appropriate Federal banking agency (if not the FDIC) and the FDIC when such banking agency is informed that an out-of-State bank or holding company is considering acquiring an insured bank with total assets of $250 million or more that is in danger of closing. This is intended to provide the FDIC with early notice of any possible transactions involving large banks in danger of closing, even if it appears that FDIC assistance will not be required, in the event that FDIC assistance becomes necessary and the FDIC must utilize the procedures of subsection 13(f).

Subparagraph (B) provides that if the FDIC grants assistance pursuant to its powers under subsection 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the procedures contained in subsection 13(f) shall be followed in any eligible merger or acquisition transaction involving an out-of-State bank or holding company. The FDIC, however, may, in its sole discretion, choose to follow applicable State law rather than the procedures of subsection 13(f) (see paragraph 9). These procedures, including notice to and an opportunity for objection by the state bank supervisor and re-bidding procedures under certain circumstances, are contained in the current law. If the FDIC does not provide assistance under subsection 13(c), subsection 13(f) is not applicable and any eligible transaction will be subject only to the normal approval requirements under State or Federal law.

Paragraph (2).—This paragraph is amended to reduce the $500 million asset minimum for interstate acquisitions of closed banks to $250 million. This change is in response to the significant increase in the number of bank failures and the FDIC's increased difficulty in finding in-State purchasers for banks, especially banks whose assets are $250 million or more. It thereby reduces the demand upon the FDIC's resources and affords banks with assets of $250 million or more equal treatment with larger banks.

The remainder of paragraph 2 is unchanged. It provides, among other things, that in any interstate transaction involving a closed bank meeting the size requirement: (i) all other applicable approvals must be obtained; (ii) there shall be notice and an opportunity for objection by the State bank supervisor (whether the closed bank has a State or Federal charter); and (iii) if the State bank supervisor objects, the FDIC's Board of Directors may exercise its authority only by unanimous vote.

Paragraph (3).—Subparagraph (A)(i) extends the emergency interstate acquisition provisions to banks with assets of $250 million or more that, although not closed, have been determined by their Federal or State chartering authority to be in danger of closing. The subsection parallels subparagraph (2)(A), by allowing out-of-State banks and holding companies to establish a new bank to acquire the bank in danger of closing. It also allows an acquisition to be done directly.

The current law contains a comparable provision for mutual savings banks, but not for other FDIC-insured banks. Experience has demonstrated that by the time a bank has actually been closed, the value of its franchise may have been dissipated if not eliminated. In addition, the process of decline into insolvency can create an adverse effect in the financial community. By permitting an interstate acquisition of a commercial bank in danger of closing, but before it is actually closed, the potential for finding a private solution with a lesser commitment of FDIC funds is substantially improved. Such a process also would help maintain the stability of and confidence in the banking system as a whole.

Subparagraph 3(A)(ii) extends the emergency interstate acquisition provisions to holding companies that have a subsidiary bank or banks with aggregate assets of $250 million or more in danger of closing and such bank or banks represent 33 percent or more of the total assets of the holding company's banking subsidiaries. If the Federal or State chartering authority has determined that such a bank or banks are in danger of closing, an out-of-State bank or holding company may (a) purchase the stock of or otherwise acquire the holding company that controls such bank(s) as well as all of such holding company's other subsidiary banks or (b) acquire the bank or banks in danger of closing. Before the FDIC can assist a merger or acquisition, the board of directors of the bank in danger of closing must request in writing that FDIC assist a merger or purchase.

An out-of-State bank or holding company that purchases from another holding company a bank or banks in danger of failing with aggregate assets of $250 million or more under clause (b) would be permitted to acquire other bank subsidiaries of the holding company. Under this subparagraph, more than one out-of-State holding company may acquire portions of a single holding company, providing that each of the out-of-State holding companies purchases a bank or set of banks, each of which is in danger of closing, that has total assets of $250 million or more, and provided that all subsidiary banks that are in danger of closing account for at least 33% of the assets of all banks subsidiaries of the holding company.

There is no comparable provision in the present law. This provision is, however, essential if the Garn-St Germain extraordinary acquisition provisions are to be effective in States which permit multi-bank holding companies, but do not permit statewide banking. A number of States presently have such a banking structure.

The current Garn-St Germain provisions do not work effectively in such States, particularly where it is the lead bank in the holding company system that is in danger of closing. Potential bidders are deterred because they are limited to a single location and the most troubled part of the banking organization. Even if a bidder can be found for the lead bank, the continued viability of the other banks in the holding company system may be threatened by the loss of the lead bank. This is particularly the case where there are substantial financial relationships between the lead bank and the other banks in the holding company system. Thus, the adoption of this provision could substantially reduce the financial demands on the FDIC, as well as the adverse effects on the communities served.

Subparagraph (B) provides that if a bank or holding company is eligible to be acquired by an out-of-State bank or holding company under subparagraph (A), but the FDIC provides financial assistance to prevent the closing, so long as FDIC assistance remains outstanding, the bank, its holding company, and its bank affiliates can be sold to an out-of-State bank or holding company to the same extent it could have been when assistance was given. This subparagraph applies only when assistance was granted after April 15, 1986.

Subparagraphs (C) and (D) are essentially unchanged from current law.

Paragraph (4).—Subparagraph (A) has been changed to confirm that a multiple savings and loan holding company can acquire an FDIC-insured Federal savings bank across state lines. Subparagraphs (B) and (C) are unchanged.

New subparagraph (D) provides that an out-of-State holding company that acquires a bank or holding company under subsection 13(f) may, at any time, acquire additional banks located in the three largest metropolitan or consolidated metropolitan statistical areas or cities in each state in which a bank acquired under subsection 13(f) is located to the same extent that a holding company located in each of those states may expand. This amendment complements the flexibility provided under subparagraph 3(A) and is supported by the same policy considerations. It is particularly essential in unit banking States where bidders for troubled institutions are deterred by the lack of further expansion possibilities.

Subparagraph (E) provides that an out-of-State bank or holding company that acquires and retains control, directly or indirectly, of a bank under this subsection shall not be required under State law, as a result of such acquisition, to divest any other bank or be prevented from acquiring any other bank in a different State. This paragraph does not prevent the requirement of divestiture to comply with competitive, antitrust and similar standards imposed under Federal law.

This provision, which is not contained in the current law, is in response to State law developments after passage of Garn-St Germain, and is necessary to enable a number of banks to make acquisitions under Garn-St Germain. The regional interstate banking bills of several States require that all of a bank holding company's subsidiary banks be located within a defined region. Accordingly, an out-of-State holding company which has acquired a bank in such a State would be required to divest that bank if it made an acquisition under Garn-St Germain outside the region. This provision would pre-empt such State laws only with respect to Garn-St Germain acquisitions.

Paragraphs (5), (6), and (7).—These paragraphs contain provisions relating to the solicitation of offers by the FDIC, resolicitation of bids under certain circumstances, and applicable antitrust standards. They are essentially unchanged from current law.

Paragraph (8).—New subparagraph (B) prescribes when a bank is "in danger of closing" and new subparagraph (C) defines when banks are affiliated for purposes of holding company acquisition under subparagraph (3).

Paragraph (9).—This paragraph permits the FDIC, in its sole discretion, to assist an interstate transaction under the authority of state law rather than under this subsection. This provision affords the FDIC additional flexibility where a state has enacted its own interstate acquisition authority, but does not in any way limit the FDIC's authority under subsection 13(f).

Paragraph (10).—This paragraph confirms that FDIC assistance in a transaction authorized under subsection 13(f) shall not be provided to any subsidiary of a holding company which is not an insured bank. This paragraph, however, is not intended to prevent an intermediate holding company from being a conduit for FDIC assistance ultimately intended for an insured bank.

SEC. 3. The Douglas Amendment to the Bank Holding Company Act provides that a bank holding company may not acquire a bank in another State unless that State has specifically authorized the acquisition by statute. This section would amend the Douglas Amendment to permit bank holding companies, under certain circumstances, to acquire banks located in another state where the banks are in danger of closing. This provision would only permit acquisitions of troubled banks that do not involve financial assistance from the FDIC. Acquisitions of troubled banks that involve financial assistance from the FDIC are governed by the preceding sections of this bill. Permitting the Federal Reserve Board to approve acquisitions of banks in danger of closing where the proposed acquisition does not require financial assistance from the FDIC will permit resolution of problems involving banks in serious and identifiable financial difficulties before those problems reach the stage when they require federal financial assistance, thus reducing potential demand on the FDIC's resources.

Subparagraph (2)(A).—This subparagraph would amend the Douglas Amendment to allow a bank holding company to acquire a bank in another State when the bank is in danger of closing and has total assets of at least $250 million. This paragraph would also permit an out-of-State bank holding company to acquire a group of smaller banks that are subsidiaries of the same bank holding company if (1) each of the banks is in danger of closing, (2) the combined assets of group of banks to be acquired is at least $250 million, and (3) the banks in danger of closing are owned by a bank holding company and represent at least 33 percent of the total assets of all bank subsidiaries of that holding company.

Subparagraph (2)(B).—This subparagraph provides that a bank holding company that acquires a failing bank under this section may, as part of the transaction in which it acquires the failing bank, also acquire the parent holding company of the failing bank as well as any of the holding company's other subsidiary banks. Wherever located, provided that the banks in danger of closing represent at least 33 percent of the total assets of all of the parent holding company's subsidiary banks. In this regard, the legislation would allow more than one out-of-State bank holding company to acquire portions of a single bank holding company, including healthy bank subsidiaries of the holding company, provided that each of the out-of-State bank holding companies purchases a bank or set of banks, each of which is in danger of closing, that has total assets of $250 million or more and provided that all subsidiary banks that are in danger of closing together account for at least 33 percent of the assets of all bank subsidiaries of the bank holding company. An out-of-State bank holding company may not acquire a healthy bank or a bank holding company under this provision unless the out-of-State bank holding company simultaneously acquires an affiliated bank or group of banks in danger of closing.

Subparagraph (2)(C).—This subparagraph provides that an out-of-State bank holding company that acquires a failing bank under this legislation may, at any time, acquire additional banks located in the three largest metropolitan or consolidated metropolitan statistical areas or cities in each state in which a bank acquired under this section is located to the same extent that a bank holding company located in each of those states may expand. This places the out-of-State bank holding company on an equal footing with in-State bank holding companies in the three largest metropolitan areas in the state.

Subparagraph (2)(D).—This subparagraph provides that an out-of-State bank holding company that acquires a failing bank under this legislation could not be required under State law to divest other banks that it owns, as may be required under certain of the regional interstate banking compacts in existence today. This subparagraph does not prevent any divestiture that may be required to comply with competitive, antitrust, and similar standards imposed under federal law.

Paragraph (3).—This paragraph provides that out-of-State bank holding companies may make an acquisition under this provision only if the acquisition is approved by the board of directors of each bank to be acquired or by the board of directors of the parent bank holding company of such banks.

Subparagraph (4)(A).—This subparagraph provides that, before the Federal Reserve Board may approve an acquisition under this section, the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks and the State bank supervisor in the case of State banks must certify to the Board that the bank to be acquired is in danger of closing. The bill defines a bank in danger of closing in the same manner as defined above in connection with acquisitions that involve federal financial assistance.

Subparagraph (4)(B).—This subparagraph defines affiliated banks as banks that are subsidiaries of the same bank holding company, as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act.

Subparagraph (5)(A).—This subparagraph requires that, before a bank in danger of closing or the parent bank holding company of such a bank enters into any discussions with an out-of-State bank holding company relating to the possible interstate acquisition of the bank without federal assistance under the provisions of this bill, the bank or its parent bank holding company must notify the State bank supervisor in each State in which the bank or any of its affiliated banks are located. This provision would permit the State bank supervisor an opportunity to ascertain whether an acceptable in-State or in-region solution exists for the troubled bank that does not require FDIC assistance. The bank in danger of closing or parent bank holding company must also attempt to arrange for an acquisition of the bank in danger of closing by an in-State or in-region bank holding company, an individual, or any other party that does not require use of the provisions of this section in a transaction that does not require federal assistance. Subparagraph (5)(A)(ii) provides that any application submitted by an out-of-State bank holding company to acquire a bank or bank holding company under this provision must describe efforts by the bank in danger of closing or its parent bank holding company to arrange an in-State or in-region acquisition and the reasons for rejection of any proposals submitted.

Subparagraphs (5) (B) and (C).—These subparagraphs require, in addition, that the Federal Reserve Board consult with the State supervisor of the State or States in which each of the banks to be acquired under this section is located, and provides the appropriate State supervisors at least 48 hours to comment on the acquisition. As noted, the State supervisor will have been notified under the preceding subparagraph before the bank or holding company opened discussions with an out-of-State or out-of-region banking holding company.

Subparagraph (5)(D).—This subparagraph prohibits the Federal Reserve Board from approving an interstate acquisition under this paragraph over the objection of the appropriate State supervisor, if the State supervisor certifies that a person or group of persons (1) stands ready to acquire each of the banks in danger of closing without use of the interstate acquisition provisions of this bill and without federal assistance; (2) offered, or attempted to offer, to purchase the banks in danger of closing prior to the time that the out-of-State bank holding company submitted its application under this provision to the Board; and (3) has the financial and managerial resources necessary to receive all required regulatory approvals promptly and to recapitalize all of the banks in danger of closing without impairing the financial resources of the acquiring parties and without federal assistance. This provision permits the relevant State supervisor to exercise a preference for individuals or for bank holding companies located within the State in which the bank in danger of closing is located or in a State from which an interstate acquisition is permitted under state law enacted pursuant to the Douglas Amendment (for example, a bank holding company located in a State that has entered into a regional compact or other interstate arrangement with the State in which the failing bank is located).

Subparagraph (5)(E).—This subparagraph permits the Federal Reserve Board to approve an acquisition by an out-of-state bank holding company in the event that a person or group of persons certified by the State supervisor does not receive all necessary regulatory approvals, or the Federal Reserve Board determines that the person or group of persons does not have the financial or managerial resources necessary to recapitalize the failing banks and, thereafter, to continue to meet all applicable regulatory requirements. Under this provision, the in-state or in-region offer certified by the supervisor does not have to match or exceed the offer by an out-of-state bank holding company. The only limitation on the in-State or in-region offer is that it must result in acquisition of all of the banks in danger of closing without any financial assistance from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Paragraph (6).—This paragraph authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to waive the requirements of notice to the appropriate chartering authority and opportunity for hearing ordinarily applicable to the acquisition by a bank holding company of a bank under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act for any acquisition authorized under this section or under the emergency provisions of section 13(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. This would enable the Board to waive the notice and hearing requirements of the Act in the event an out-of-State bank holding company was acquiring not only the failing bank but also the parent holding company and its other subsidiary banks. As described above, this section provides that the chartering authority be given notice of a proposed acquisition under this section and provides a mechanism for the State supervisor to object to the proposed acquisition.

This paragraph also authorizes the Board to shorten the post-approval waiting period required under section 11 of the Bank Holding Company Act for an acquisition approved under this paragraph, and to waive this period entirely to permit immediate acquisition of any or all of the banks to be acquired where the Board finds that immediate action is necessary to prevent probably failure of any of the banks acquired under this section.

Sec. 4. This section permits the Federal Reserve Board to waive the provisions of section 4(c)(8) of the BHC Act that require notice and opportunity for hearing prior to the acquisition by a bank holding company of a nonbanking company where the proposed acquisition is in connection with an application by a bank holding company to acquire a bank in danger of closing under the provisions of this legislation.

Sec. 5. This section extends for five years the sunset of the emergency provision of Title I of the Garn-St Germain Act and sunsets the provision added by this Act as well in five years.

By Mr. HELMS:

S.J. Res. 331. Joint resolution prohibiting the proposed sale of integrated avionics system kits to the People's Republic of China; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROHIBITING SALE OF ADVANCED AVIONICS KITS TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, one of the most perilous issues hanging in the balance is the impending sale of $550 million of advanced fighter aircraft technology to Communist China.

None of our Asian friends supports this sale. Our major allies in East Asia, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, South Korea, Japan, and especially Taiwan all oppose arms sales to the People's Republic of China.

In addition to the lack of support by our Asian friends, the purpose of this sale is misguided. The F-8 was designed 20 years ago to counter a high-flying, subsonic Soviet bomber threat. Now, however, with an abundance of SS-20's and Backfire bombers in the region, the Soviet Union is not likely to send slow, high altitude bombers over China. This means that the deterrent capability of the enhanced F-8 is of marginal utility against the Soviet Union, but the improved F-8 can make a big difference in regional conflicts between China and her smaller non-Communist neighbors, such as Taiwan.

It is being said that the avionics package is an end-item sale, and does not involve the transfer of design or production technologies. The most important aspect of this sale to the PRC may not be just the avionics packages, but the technology within the packages and the possibility of integrating that technology with other systems. This sale should be viewed as a building block to substantial improvement in China's air force.

Another adverse effect of the sale would be upsetting of the balance of power in the Taiwan Strait. The Taiwanese fighters—aging F-5E's and F-104's which will soon be obsolete—are already outnumbered 16 to 1 by the PRC. The upgrading of the PRC's F-8 would transfer air superiority to the PRC.

Mr. President, for all of the abovementioned reasons, I am introducing a joint resolution prohibiting the proposed sale of integrated avionics systems kits to the People's Republic of China. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 331

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the issuance of a letter of offer with respect to the proposed sale to the People's Republic of China of integrated avionics system kits (and related defense articles and defense services) described in the certification transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act on April 8, 1986 (Transmittal Numbered 86-27) is hereby prohibited.

SENATE RESOLUTION 388—RELATING TO THE PROVISION OF UPDATED BASELINE AND CURRENT SERVICE ESTIMATES FOR FISCAL YEARS 1987 THROUGH 1991

Mr. ROTH (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred jointly pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on International Affairs:

S. RES. 388

Whereas the rate of interest in the CPI has fallen, suggesting the likelihood of cost of living and other outlay savings;

Whereas economic conditions have significantly changed since the current services and baseline budget estimates were prepared;

Whereas long-term interest rates are now approximately 1.5 percentage points lower than forecast by CBO, implying substantial net interest savings;

Whereas oil prices are approximately $10 per barrel below the level forecast by CBO, directly and indirectly lowering outlays and raising economic growth;

Whereas Congress has enacted the reconciliation and other legislation which further reduces the fiscal 1987 deficit;

Whereas under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings statute, the Congress requires the most accurate data available pursuant to enactment of a budget that avoids a sequester order: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That—

(1) the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, in conjunction with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall report to the Congress as soon as possible but no later than May 16th, his revised estimates of total revenues, budget authority, outlays and the deficit for fiscal years 1987–1991; and

(2) that, the report shall contain any additional views or analyses as either director deems necessary.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, it's been said that ignorance never settles a question. Plato insisted that before one begins a debate, one best define his terms and check his facts.

I realize these axioms are old, and perhaps a bit banal, but I believe they're most appropriate to keep in mind as we embark on establishing the budget resolution and set the course for our Nation's economic policy over the next 3 years.

Presently, we are preparing to move ahead and base our entire fiscal policy on what many economists believe are outdated assumptions. And I'm concerned about the consequences, I'm concerned that this Congress—and even the White House—cannot get together on the Congressional Budget Office's baseline and current service estimates for fiscal 1987 through 1991.

I believe everyone in Congress would agree that since the Congressional Budget Office made its fiscal projections in February, America's economic condition has dramatically changed. Fortunately, these changes have been beneficial, not only to our constituents, but to the financial foundation of our Government.

As we meet today, oil prices are down 50 percent since the Congressional Budget Office produced its budget baseline only 3 months ago. Interest rates are down 1½ percentage points for long-term Treasury debt, and the projection for our gross national product in the first quarter of this year shows an increase of 3.2 percent without any increase in inflation.

Unfortunately, as we are dashing to meet the demands of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, we appear unwilling to consider the full impact of these new facts. And while we still cannot be certain that this economic turnaround will have a significant impact on our meeting the $154 billion Gramm-Rudman target, we are quickly dismissing it before we understand how it affects the bottom line.

And frankly, while I commend my colleagues who have designed respective proposals to help us meet the target, I am concerned by murmurings of a 3-year tax increase, especially when we do not have all the facts—when we do not even know if it is necessary.

And the subject of tax increase brings us another important point. Meeting Gramm-Rudman is not the only factor involved in the budgetary equation. Today we are witnessing one of the greatest economic comebacks since the post-Depression years. Wall Street, this past week, racked up over 60 points, and the analysts are calling the market and the economy Congress-proof. The word is that Washington can do nothing to stifle the present growth, to dramatically increase either inflation or the interest rates—that is we can do nothing except raise taxes. This alone will kill our progress.

Fortunately, Mr. President, the people of America are not crying out for a tax increase. Therefore, it would appear that our duty is easy: Stay the course and do exactly what President Reagan has suggested—allow the improving economy, along with well-directed cuts in Government spending, to take care of the deficit. To do otherwise would be foolish, especially if the deficit is lower than we think.

And frankly, I am encouraged by the overwhelming possibilities once we know where we are. I believe the deficit can eventually be beat without an enormous tax increase—especially if we do what is necessary to promote the present recovery into the future.

But decisions must be made quickly. And we need correct information. Therefore, today I am submitting, together with Senator DOLE, a resolution that calls upon the Congressional Budget Office in conjunction with the Office of Management and Budget to issue revised estimates on the current status of our deficit, unless our decisions are to be made out of ignorance. And frankly, there is nothing more terrible than to see ignorance in action.

SENATE RESOLUTION 389—AUTHORIZING TESTIMONY BY A SENATE EMPLOYEE

Mr. SIMPSON (for Mr. DOLE, for himself and Mr. BYRD) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 389

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Robert Christopher Ingraham, Criminal No. 85-00051-B, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Maine, the United States Attorney has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of M. Gayle Cory, an employee in Senator Mitchell's Washington office;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that the testimony of an employee of the Senate is needful for use in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That M. Gayle Cory is authorized to appear and to testify in the case of United States v. Robert Christoper Ingraham, except concerning matters which may be privileged.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, within a relatively short time, the Senate will be taking up the matter of reorganization of the Department of Defense, which the Armed Services Committee has been studying and working on for over 3 years.

Many comments about this reorganization and the need for it have come from military people of all ranks. I treasure and look forward to the observations, whether they be critical or supportive, of these men in uniform.

Gen. William C. Westmoreland, who commanded our forces in Vietnam has written a very thoughtful article on the need for changes in the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Although I may not agree with all of General Westmoreland's recommendations, I do think that he has made a valuable contribution to the debate on defense reorganization.

So many people seem to be afraid that any changes in the Joint Chiefs would result in the so-called Prussian Military System. This is absolutely untrue. The Prussian System would never work in America. If Germany, which worked under the Prussian System in World Wars I and II, had any competence or intelligence at the leadership level, those Wars could have well been another story.

As General Westmoreland points out, planning is really the secret of success in battle. The Joint Chiefs should have a better opportunity and the greatest spectrum of experience available to provide the finest planning possible.

Mr. President, I ask that this article be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

OVERHAULING THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

(By Gen. William C. Westmoreland)

There has been considerable interest recently in proposals for the restructuring of the U.S. military decision-making apparatus and the organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in particular. Sens. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) and Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) have supported some specific proposals for such modifications. While change may be necessary, it needs to be approached with due regard and understanding of the complex factors involved in decision-making at the national security level.

In examining the modus operandi for decision-making on national defense matters, it is helpful to outline the responsibilities of the organization as it now stands, detail the problems that would invite a change and then make suggestions for change.

The essential functions involving military readiness are planning, force development and operations/execution. These three apparently simple functions become complex because so many organizations have an input in the military decision of the nation: the military of the Pentagon, civilians in the Department of Defense, the White House, the State Department, the Central Intelligence Agency and congress. While the checks and balances created by this multiple input are essential in an open society and to a democracy, care must be taken that the checks and balances do not bind the system to the point that it cannot effectively function. There have been times when that situation seemed imminent.

In my years working in the Department of Defense, I have never seen a decision made in anything but good faith. It is the mechanisms themselves that can breed less than optimum results. One of the areas in which change could bring improvement is the structure of the congressional committees.

REFORM ON THE HILL

Among the mechanisms that are addressed by the proposals of Sens. Goldwater and Nunn suggesting a retooling of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is the role of the congressional committees. At present, two committees—the Armed Services Committee and the Appropriations Committee—exist in each house of congress. Numbers of defense officials and their staffs spend an inordinate amount of time preparing documents and testifying before these four committees. The function of these committees is important, but it is well within reason to streamline the process.

Based on my experience, the problems connected with the congressional committees are these: 1) the committees are not well coordinated among themselves, 2) the committees are too large, 3) they tend to deal too much in politics, 4) a number of members do not do their homework and therefore are not well informed and 5) some members often cannot "see the forest for the trees"—sometimes they seem to concentrate on political nitpicking rather than heeding the reasons for the committees' existence.

To help eliminate the sluggishness of these committees, they should be trimmed down to size, with a membership that is more carefully selected. All members of these committees should take the time to become experts on defense (although many already are) rather than having to depend on the recommendations of their relatively junior staffs whose knowledge based on research is no substitute for mature experience.

To alleviate the redundancies of time-consuming committee hearings, joint committees or joint committee hearings can be very useful, with the Armed Services and Defense Appropriations committees meeting together on occasion. The people who deal with acquisition approval and those who approve the money for the systems could question the same witnesses at the same time, avoiding the necessity of witnesses repeating the same information to separate groups. In addition, joint Senate-House committee sessions might save time and effort. The chairmanship of each of these committees is a powerful position in both the House and Senate, and this proposal would not diminish those positions, but it could encourage a more timely accommodation in views between the two.

PLANNING, AN ESSENTIAL FUNCTION

There is a great need to devleop an integrated plan addressing and spelling out a feasible strategy compatible with government objectives. Developing objectives and potential military actions is an ongoing task that should be the focus of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. This work has been frustrated because of a far too weak interface among the multiple agencies of government involved, particularly since frequently that interface is confrontational rather than cooperative.

To develop military forces that are consistent with the national objectives is also the responsibility of the JCS. The Joint Staff must develop the requirement for operational forces based on joint operational planning, more specifically, the number of ground divisions, air wings and naval battle groups required by the operational commands. Then the staff must perform the most difficult task of tailoring the force to conform to budgetary constraints and make an assessment of attendant risks.

The armed services must continue to organize, train and equip the basic fighting elements of the force. This is essential since the tactical elements are designed in careful consideration of combat doctrine, the development of which can only be a function of the individual armed forces, of course, in coordination with the other services as appropriate. Worthy fighting "teams" involve the integration of material tactics, technology and highly trained tactical commanders and men. It requires close and continous interaction between the armed services and defense industry. It requires schools, training grounds and experienced and demanding supervisors. Only the individual armed services can accomplish this function, and in such capacity they must be permitted to deal with congress.

As acquisition and the procurement of materiel and supplies takes place, parochial interests can become a frustrating factor. In the congressional context, procurement involves a relationship between private business and congress. Business interests represent a constituency of individual congressional members, and their success has an impact on the economic life of a member's district.

The military is responsible for making sure that procurement is compatible with force development. This complex function needs greater attention. Under the present system, there is a vagueness as to who is responsible for what functions and why.

The service secretaries are the primary officials to support the details of service procurement before congress and must deal directly with the congressional committees.

OPERATIONS AND EXECUTION

Once plans are in place and force development designed to support those objectives is on track, attention turns to preparation for execution of those "blueprints." Under the JCS are the unified commanders. In each geographical region, these work with "service component commanders." It is important that the authority of the unified commanders be increased.

For administrative and logistical purposes, the service component commanders must be able to "ride herd" on their functions. But the unified commander must have the ability to override their decisions. On a practical level, this already exists. The unified commander is not only the responsible leader but has the support of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. However, there will always be ambiguities from time to time in territorial responsibilities and conflicts in service doctrine. The Joint Staff must be alert to these and have them settled promptly by the chairman or the secretary of defense. There were unnecessary delays in deciding such matters in Vietnam. In Vietnam, there was a joint command under a unified commander. Such an arrangement will be required in future situations.

THE JCS

The organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is the mechanism to implement the three functional areas of planning, force development and operations/execution. It would be a terrible mistake to break up the Joint Chiefs of Staff and put authority for these decisions into a committee of officers who do not have firsthand information and do not bear the responsibility for their respective services. Nothing is quite as sobering, nothing creates such objectivity, as responsibility and knowledge. A remoteness between the facts and a perception of the facts can be dangerous.

The chairman deserves greater authority and operational responsibility. He should have the authority to override the views of a service chief of staff with the proviso that when he takes his recommendations to the secretary of defense, or the president, the dissenting service chief would not only be allowed, but required, to accompany the chairman and present his opposing views. Thus, both authorities will then have the benefit of the minority view.

Rather than having a deputy chairman, the chairman should have, in effect, his own chief of staff—a three-or four-star officer. I agree with the policy of recent chairman Gen. John W. Vessey that the most practical and healthy arrangement is for each service chief to rotate into the position of acting vice chairman for a four-month period each year, rather than have a full-time vice chairman. This rotation would keep the service chiefs more abreast of joint events, as well as provide for a sudden loss of the chairman. In an emergency, a full-time vice chairman would probably be needed and could be appointed.

COMMAND AUTHORITY

Once a decision has been made in accordance with the Constitution and by the congress to go to war, the command structure should be streamlined.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should have command authority to execute approved plans through the unified commanders. During time of war, the conduct of the war should be in the hands of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, operating on behalf of the commander in chief, the president.

The secretary of defense should be cut out of the tactical operational chain in time of war, as was done in World War II. The secretary should concentrate on procurement, logistics and administrative functions, while the president and an appointed military chief of staff to the president (as Adm. Leahy in World War II) should deal with the JCS chairman, who would be responsible for the execution of plans. The National Security Council would, of course, continue on as advisers to the president.

During the war in Vietnam, the president had to contend with multiple advisory voices. One problem then was that the Joint Staff did not have the influence that it deserved, primarily because it did not have visibility and recognized competence. This problem needs to be addressed and resolved.

THE JOINT STAFF

The time has arrived to have a highly professional, recognized and dedicated Joint Staff. the Joint Staff would consist of about 500 officers who volunteer for such an assignment after 15 years of active service. These officers would have graduated from a senior military service school and be recommended by the college commandant as officers especially qualified and fit for this type of service. They would have already made their mark in their respective services and be considered of exceptional ability. The policy of limiting the tour of an officer serving on the Joint Staff reduces the professionalism and expertise of that important body. The flashback to the German Imperial General Staff as a reason for opposing a stronger and more efficient Joint Staff in the context of the U.S. Constitution is illogical.

The Joint Staff would contain appropriate specialists in appropriate areas and functions. Systems analysts and historians would be included; such specialists can alert planners to pitfalls and imbue decisions with a sense of reality. A highly professional Joint Staff will be sensitive to probable enemy reactions. All factors must be analyzed and presented to civilian authority. Civilian officials, despite their education and brilliance, cannot be expected at the staff level to grapple with the unique problems associated with the commitment of U.S. forces. A highly select, dedicated, competent, professional Joint Staff can and must. An image of competence, thoroughness born of performance, is important for the Joint Staff and would be in the national interest. That image does not now exist.

Officers selected to serve on the Joint Staff would in most cases be stationed with their families in the Washington, D.C., area. This becomes an attractive emolument since most would have children in their teens—when frequent movement of the family tends to become a hardship. The officer would not be denied advancement since all general-officer positions on the Joint Staff—and there would be a number—would be promoted from within the Joint Staff.

The impetus for service on this staff for the remainder of one's military career should come from a combination of motivation and expertise. These officers would be paid through their respective services but professionally divorced from them. They would don another uniform—civilian clothes. This group would be the staff for the chairman and the military staff for the Defense Department and the president. A number could be authorized on a tour basis for service with a unified commander either in the United States or at overseas posts and as faculty members at the senior service schools of the armed forces.

Officers of the Joint Staff dealing with operational planning would be constantly making trips to troop units and ships to keep abreast of operational capabilities. Building on the experience of their years in the service, these officers will stay current on what is going on at the troop and ship level.

To perform effectively, the chief of each armed service would, of course, retain his own staff commensurate with his function and in consideration of the expanded role of the Joint Staff. Through the chief of the service and by bilateral contact between his staff and members of the Joint Staff, cross-fertilization by the sharing of knowledge and experience would be accomplished. Liaison officers would be exchanged from time to time to facilitate integrated planning and coordination of operations.

To help resolve the problem of insufficient interface between the military and the other segments of the bureaucracy, I would like to see the Joint Staff encourage and institutionalize integrated strategy planning. A team from the State Department, the CIA and other appropriate agencies in residence with strategic planners of the Joint Staff would help realize that goal. This liaison would keep appropriate parties informed during all phases of the development of plans and foster a strategy on an integrated basis in contrast to a unilateral or confrontational development, which frequently occurs.

The lack of an integrated development of strategic plans has been a serious weakness. A strong, professional Joint Staff, with recognized and appreciated expertise, can do a great deal in improving the quality and timeliness of plans and hence should expedite sound decisions at the senior level of government. This would also help eliminate the need for many of the ad hoc task forces that are floating around now. Many of them are formed on the basis of expediency rather than expertise. Often they are created to buy time or for political purposes.

This is not to say that there is no place for additional committees. The JCS has more flexibility than many people realize. If they wanted to, the Joint Chiefs could set up a temporary or permanent advisory board consisting of retired senior officers or even perhaps highly respected senior officers on active duty. This board could be focused on a particular course of action or any measure or project the JCS has in mind.

Strangely, the proposal now before congress will not improve the professionalism of the Joint Staff. It may actually reduce it by institutionalizing the turnover of personnel and by not providing incentives to develop important expertise.

There is initiative in the congress for change. The time is ripe to develop a stronger Joint Staff mechanism that is effective and sustainable. The three necessary steps to a better and more efficient national security are a strategy compatible with the objective of the nation; development of the forces within budgetary constraints to support the strategy, and detailed plans to execute the necessary operational measures. A group of professionally oriented, specially selected officers, part of an organization dedicated to U.S. national security, would be the best method of developing such a sound and viable program. These officers cannot do it alone. They must have guidance as to the objectives of their country. They must have the cooperation of the State Department and the benefit of intelligence developed by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency. They need the civilian secretaries to deal with procurement of materiel and manpower and to provide a strong interface with congress. But at the heart of the modus operandi is a professional Joint Staff.●

U.S. TRADE DEFICIT

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, on September 24 of last year I read in an article in the business section of the Washington Post, and I quote, "that a realistic figure on the impact of unfair Japanese trade practices on the United States trade deficit is in the $6 to $8 billion range, and that much of this is offset by United States restrictions on steel, textiles, food and other imports." The article contends that last year's $50 billion United States merchandise trade deficit with Japan was caused by the overvalued dollar, and not by Japanese trade barriers to American products. Frankly, I am not all that convinced by this argument. In 1983, the United States merchandise trade deficit with Japan was just over $20 billion. In 1985, only 2 years later, that figure soared to over $50 billion. It strains the imagination just a little bit to think that an increase of 150 percent can be attributed solely to fluctuations in currencies.

American trade policy, since the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Act in 1935, has been founded on the philosophy that free trade is the best promoter of growth both in the United States and within the world economy. Mr. President, I have always been a staunch believer in free trade, and I have not forgotten how the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930 helped in aiding and abetting the coming of the Great Depression. However, free trade can only mean one thing: reciprocity. In my State alone, South Dakota, I have seen how unfair trade practices by the EEC have crippled our wheat exports. As with our merchandise trade deficit to Japan, economists tell me it's because the dollar has been overvalued for most of the last 5 years. Well, partially it is because of the dollar, but it is also because our competitors have, in a number of industries, created unfair trade barriers to our products.

Mr. President, in the month of February of this year we imported over $1 billion worth of automobile parts from Japan. The month before we imported $857 million in parts. In reality what has happened is that Japan has flooded our markets with their automobile exports, and then turned around and flooded these same markets with Japanese made replacement parts, ignoring by and large the purchase of American equivalent parts. Meanwhile, when we try to push our telecommunications equipment or our semiconductors, we find these markets are constricted because of Japanese trade barriers. The use of discriminatory standards and investment restrictions are techniques often employed by the Japanese to keep American products out.

I am not, nor do I ever hope to be, a strong proponent of protectionist legislation. On the other hand, I voted last year in favor of a Senate resolution directing the President to take stronger actions against Japan for its closed market policies. I am not fond of threats which usually consist of empty rhetoric, but I would like to suggest to our trading competitors that America can no longer afford trade deficits which run in excess of $145 billion.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: FRIENDS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, Naum and Inna Meiman are friends of mine. They are a wonderful couple living in the Soviet Union who wish to emigrate to Israel. This wish has caused many problems for the Meimans.

Since Naum applied to emigrate over 10 years ago, he has been harassed. Although he is a respected scientist, Naum has been isolated from the scientific community. Along with this, his phone has been cut off and almost all his mail continues to be confiscated. Inna also suffers at the hands of the Soviet Government. She has cancer, and although the Soviet doctors have told Inna that there is nothing more they can do for her, the Soviets refuse to grant her permission to go to Israel to receive more advanced medical treatment.

No one likes to see their friends mistreated. I am deeply troubled when I am forced to watch my friends, the Meimans, suffer. They deserve the chance to be happy.

I implore the officials in the Soviet Union to let the Meimans emigrate to Israel.●

IN SUPPORT OF SOVIET JEWRY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to participate in the 1986 Congressional Call to Conscience, an important effort designed to focus attention on Soviet human rights violations. As chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I am particularly concerned over the plight of members of the Jewish community in the U.S.S.R., the world's third largest.

In 1975, the Soviet Union joined the United States and Canada as well as 32 other European nations in signing the Helsinki Final Act. Basket 3 of the accords contains crucial provisions pertaining to human rights. Currently, representatives of each of the signatory countries are meeting in Bern, Switzerland, to review compliance with this aspect of the act. On Tuesday, I chaired a hearing of the Commission on East-bloc emigration policies and human contacts. During the course of the hearing a number of experts provided testimony which painted a clear picture of the bleak situation faced by Soviet Jews today.

My concerns regarding Soviet Jewry are twofold: a desire to help those who seek to emigrate from the Soviet Union, and to ensure that the rights of those who remain behind are safeguarded.

Despite assertions by Soviet authorities that those Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate have already done so, 380,000 Soviet Jews have requested letters of invitation from relatives in Israel, the first step in the arduous emigration process. The Final Act clearly states that, "The participating states will deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the application of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family." Nevertheless, the Soviet Union continues to deny this basic right to thousands of Soviet Jews.

Soviet Jewish emigration, which reached a peak in 1979 when 51,000 Soviet Jews were permitted to leave, has fallen off to little more than a trickle. During 1985, 1,140 Soviet Jews received visas enabling them to be reunited with relatives in Israel. Thus far this year, visas have been issued to 79 in January, 84 in February, and 47 in March.

Estimates indicate that at least 20,000 Soviet Jews have been refused permission to emigrate. Of these "refuseniks," as they are come to be called, hundreds have languished for more than 10 years while waiting to join their families.

Those who request permission to emigrate often do so at great personal risk. Many are fired from their jobs, denied access to education and subjected to other forms of harassment by the secret police—the KGB.

The Soviet Union has undertaken a concerted effort to eliminate all forms of Jewish culture. Hebrew teachers are imprisoned for teaching the Hebrew language. Parents are arrested for providing their children with religious instruction. The Soviets have gone so far as to establish an "anti-Zionist committee" wich serves to spread propaganda denigrating Jews and rekindling the fires of anti-Semitism in the U.S.S.R.

The cries of human suffering ring out loud and clear despite Soviet attempts to squelch them. It is our responsibility to respond.

As Anatoly Shcharansky recently stated after his release from the Soviet gulag, "It is more necessary than ever now for international public opinion to press the Soviet Union on these matters. It is high time for Moscow to begin complying with the Helsinki agreement signed in 1975."

As chairman of the Helsinki Commission, I urge my colleagues to join me in speaking out in support of Soviet Jewry.●

MAINE LOBSTERMEN'S ASSOCIATION AND ED BLACKMORE

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, when one thinks of Maine, perhaps the first image which comes to mind is the Maine lobsterman—a craggy, independent soul who embodies the qualities of independence and hard work which Maine is known for.

For the past 14 years, the lobstermen of Maine have looked to Ed Blackmore of Stonington, ME, for leadership and guidance. Ed, the president of the Maine Lobstermen's Association, has fought and won many battles in behalf of his fellow lobstermen during those 14 years.

I met Ed when I first ran for Congress in 1972, and he has been a strong supporter and good friend ever since. The Boston Globe recently published an article concerning Ed and his work in behalf of the Maine lobstermen, and I ask that the article be included in the RECORD at this time.

The article follows:

LOBSTERMAN TRADES UNDERWATER TRAPS FOR POLITICAL ONES OF MAINE STATE HOUSE

(By Denise Goodman)

NOBLEBORO, MAINE.—In many ways, Ed Blackmore is the quintessential lobsterman. During two years of military service, Blackmore said, he dreamed of "getting home, getting about and dropping some traps . . . of being out there on the water, being your man, making your own decisions.

But over the last 14 years, as president of the 1,000-member Maine Lobsterman's Association, Blackmore gradually traded his traps for a desk and lobbying forays in the State House. Along the way, he began to bridge the gap between the lobstermen and the scientists who study the shellfish they harvest. The 31 years he put in hauling traps summer and winter have given Blackmore a special credibility with the legislators he urges to support lobster conservation measures.

Asked what it's like to represent 1,000 independent lobstermen, Blackmore quickly responds, "You get a lot of phone calls with everyone beating you over the head."

And then: "Once in a while somebody calls and says I did a good job and that makes it worthwhile."

Developing a position on recent legislation to increase the minimum size of legally harvestable lobsters is a case in point. At first, Blackmore said, his 15-member board was split. But because lobstermen are so independent, Blackmore regularly polls them on legislative issues and on this one, the result showed 74 percent favored the bill.

Every lobster harvesting state has a 3 3/16-inch minimum—from the eye socket to the end of the body shell—for legal "keepers." The Maine bill, adopted earlier this month, would gradually increase that size to 3 5/16 by 1992 if, and it's a big if, all the other states adopt similar measures and agree to throw back female lobsters that Mainers have "V-notched."

As a conservation measure, Maine fishermen mark every egg-bearing female lobster they catch with a "V" and throw them back. But because other states have no similar practice, Blackmore said, when those lobsters most likely to reproduce migrate to waters off other states' shores, they are usually harvested.

Last year, Blackmore's troops successfully defeated efforts to repeal another unique Maine conservation law, a five-inch maximum, from eye to back of body, for harvestable lobsters.

Scientists estimate that 90 percent of lobsters now caught have no chance to reproduce and say the larger minimum would allow more to bear eggs before they are trapped. But Maine lobstermen put more emphasis on the V-notch and maximum-size provision, Blackmore said, because mature female lobsters will bear up to 60,000 eggs a year, 10 times the number their minimum-sized counterparts will produce.

Born in the Down East fishing village of Stonington where he first lobstered with his grandfather, Blackmore, 58, said Maine lobstermen have a special feeling for their vocation.

LOBSTERING "A HERITAGE"

"We're more conservation minded because we don't have the economic options the others have," Blackmore said. "In other states, lobstering is more of an economic thing. Here, it's more of a heritage." If the resource is depleted, Maine fishermen would have little choice but to sell their island or coastal mainland homes and move inland to find work, he explained. "And the more offshore the island is, the more ornery people are about protecting the lobster resource," he added.

Blackmore said he discovered the value of scientific research when he served for three years on the New England Fisheries Management Council. "Whatever I said didn't mean anything because I couldn't document it," he noted.

Convincing his fellow lobstermen was not easy, he said, because too often the fishermen saw scientists as "bureaucrats who protect their backside," often didn't make their findings public and, when they did, "didn't put them in language people could understand."

Blackmore has built the association from 245 to 1,000 members and its annual budget from loose change to nearly $60,000. Much of his time is taken up keeping a watchful eye on state and federal legislation covering everything from boat taxes to gear conflicts.

Although he hasn't fished for a decade, Blackmore still lives with his family in Stonington. He said he talked his son out of lobstering because "a lobsterman reaches his peak at 40, and then you just work harder and harder to stay where you are . . . I told him, 'Son, if you're smart, you'll stay on the docks and take money from the fishermen when they come in.'" Heeding that advice, his son opened his own marine electronics business.

A DEEP SENSE OF TRADITION

Even as Blackmore leads Maine lobstermen to a heightened awareness of modern, scientific and political issues, Blackmore retains a deep sense of their traditions, including a self-regulating system that outsiders might consider vigilantism.

"You can't live in Bangor all your life, buy a boat and run down to Stonington and put a bunch of traps out," he warned. "You can put them out, but you may not get them back. You have to get along with your peers." Even as a Stonington native, he explained, he didn't fish some areas because "the bay was divided up among families who traditionally fished certain spots."

Get too close to the line, Blackmore said, "and you may find your trap warp wrapped around the pot buoy spindle, back to. That's just a warning." The next "infraction" could mean losing traps, he added. "It's a good system. I don't say it's right, but it works."●

THE DEFENSE BUDGET

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Senate Budget Committee voted wisely when they approved a defense budget giving the Pentagon $295 billion in spending authority for the 1987 fiscal year. In a letter to the Budget Committee prior to their vote, I advocated adoption of a zero real growth for defense, close to the level the committee eventually voted for.

Defense spending is an emotionally charged issue. I support a strong defense, as do all my colleagues. We differ on how to get there, but we all agree on the end goal. With Gramm-Rudman, we have no alternative but to pass a responsible budget to avoid the automatic cuts. This means that growth in defense spending, which has grown more than any other budget function since President Reagan took office, must be constrained.

The argument is often made that cutting defense, or keeping spending authority level, harms us by encouraging our enemies. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Our adversaries do not focus on how much we spend; they focus on what we get for these expenditures. This point is all too often overlooked.

We have a good example of misplaced priorities in the events of the past few days. In the aftermath of our military strikes against Libya, we have to ask ourselves if the never-ending nuclear arms race in being waged at the expense of the war against terrorism. Even some of our spending on conventional weaponry has to be reevaluated: Are we buying the right kinds of equipment and conducting adequate training to combat the new threats posed by international terrorism?

When you include our allies in the balance of forces between East and West, the numbers look much less frightening, and in fact start to look encouraging. Our allies spend much more on defense than the Soviet Union's Warsaw Pact allies. NATO-Europe would be much more politically reliable in the event of external aggression. And our troops in Europe are not policing the local populace, as are many Soviet troops in Eastern Europe

We too seldom consider that the U.S.S.R. has real vulnerabilities: A weak economy; a long and sometimes hostile frontier with China that requires one-fourth of the Red army's manpower—contrast this with our long and peaceful borders with Canada and Mexico that do not require any real defenses; a draining war in Afghanistan; and economically weak allies, from Cuba to Poland.

These and other good points are made in a recent article in the Baltimore Sun by Jeffrey Record, entitled "Reckoning the Military Balance." We have to start getting more bang for the buck, through defense reorganization, procurement reform, arms control, and a more realistic assessment of the military balance and the real threats facing us today. I commend Mr. Record's article to my colleagues, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD in full.

RECKONING THE MILITARY BALANCE

(By Jeffrey Record)

WASHINGTON.—During the past weeks the Reagan administration has treated the nation to a plethora of pessimistic assessments of the U.S.-Soviet military balance. The immediate purpose of these assessments, most of which are the truth but far from the whole truth, is clear: to restore eroding public and Congressional support for major real increases in U.S. defense spending.

The administration's argument is twofold. First, that the U.S.-Soviet military balance has continued to deteriorate during the past several years, despite a U.S. military buildup of a magnitude unparalleled in peacetime. Second, and because of the worsening balance, the Defense Department's fiscal 1987 budget, which represents an increase after inflation of 8 percent over last year's budget, ought to be exempted from congressional spending cuts aimed at reducing overall federal budgetary deficits that are also historically unprecedented.

Once again, the administration wants a strong national defense but is unwilling to pay for it. Never mind that the present deficit crisis is attributed in large measure to the Reagan administration's own voodoo economic policies (you can lower taxes, increase outlays, or balance the budget, but you cannot do all three simultaneously). And never mind that declining public confidence in Caspar W. Weinberger's Pentagon stems mainly from the Pentagon's predictable inability to absorb efficiently the mountains of cash thrown so abruptly and indiscriminately at it by an administration that still seems not to have grasped the fact that the U.S. military has become simply another vast government bureaucracy.

The U.S.-Soviet military balance may indeed have deteriorated since 1981, justifying the administration's proposed increase in defense spending. But how is that balance to be measured? Administration assessments, complete with pretty charts and graphs, focus on simple numerical comparisons between U.S. and Soviet forces; raw numbers of men, tanks, ships, planes, divisions, and so on. And, to be sure, it turns out to no one's surprise that in almost every index of things that can be counted the Soviets have more than the United States. The Soviets have 5.3 million men under arms to our 2.2 million; 55,000 tanks to our 14,000; 289 major surface naval combatants to our 200; 8,000 tactical aircraft to our 5,400; and 209 army divisions to our 27.

But such numerical disparities, while disturbing, hardly tell us much about the outcome of a future war. First of all, to compare only U.S. and Soviet military power is to ignore what is perhaps America's greatest remaining strategic advantage over the Soviet Union—namely, the presence of rich, militarily powerful, and politically reliable allies. For example, in Europe, which remains the principal military focus of both superpowers, a confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union would automatically engage their respective European allies, and the size and fighting power of America's NATO allies dwarf that of Moscow's Warsaw Pact allies, most of which are, in addition to being a drain on the Soviet treasury, small, poor, and of uncertain political loyalty. The NATO alliance as a whole suffers no pronounced numerical disadvantages in major categories of military forces vis a vis the Warsaw Pact.

The balance of respective allies in the Far East is even more favorable to the United States. Leave aside the fact that most Soviet forces in the Far East are deployed against a foreign ally, China. In a war with the United States the Soviet Union could at best hope to count on only North Korea and Vietnam—rather sorry compensation for South Korea, Japan, Australia, and the Philippines. Moreover, the Soviets would face formidable logistical problems in Asia. With the exception of the trans-Siberian railroad, some stretches of which run perilously close to the Chinese border, there is no continuous land line of communication connecting the Soviet Union's military and industrial heartland with her Far Eastern provinces.

Second, much of Soviet power cannot be fairly counted in the U.S.-Soviet military balance because it is allocated to the protection of the Soviet empire from threats other than those "posed" by the United States and its allies. Soviet military problems are far more numerous and quite different than those facing the United States. For example, whereas U.S. forces in Europe are burdened by no internal police functions, many of the 30 Soviet divisions deployed in Eastern Europe are stationed there to enforce that region's political loyalty to Moscow. Additionally, in contrast to the United States, which has no enemies along its borders, the Soviet Union deploys fully one-quarter of its army opposite China. Indeed, it has been said that the Soviet Union is the only country in the world surrounded by hostile communist states. The United States, rich in allies and secure along its own borders, does not need 55,000 tanks and a 209-division army.

Third, and perhaps most important of all, numbers are but one of many indices of military power, and not necessarily the most important. History repeatedly has shown that numerical inferiority can be more than offset by superiority in such crucial intangibles as strategy, tactics, organization, training, leadership, group cohesion, combat experience, and individual morale. If numbers alone were decisive, Alexander the Great would never have made it across the Bosporus; the United States might still be saluting the Union Jack; Anglo-French forces would have defeated Hitler in 1940; Israel would have lost all its wars; the United States would have trounced Vietnam; and the Soviet Union long ago would have eliminated any vestige of resistance to its occupation of Afghanistan.

None of this is to play down the formidable challenges that burgeoning Soviet military poses to the Free World. It is simply to recognize that numbers are but one ingredient of true military effectiveness. It is also to recognize that since the days of Peter the Great. Russia has traditionally enjoyed a significant numerical advantage over her military opponents, but nevertheless has suffered repeated military disasters at the hands of smaller though qualitatively superior enemies.●

THE LITTLE TOWN THAT COULD

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I am proud to bring to the attention of the Senate the story of a small community in rural southwestern Kentucky, once a thriving port along the Mississippi River, which is showing the strength of commitment and determination to rise from its own decline.

Hickman, KY, which suffered when the railroad revolution in the latter half of the 19th century brought competition to commerce on the waterways, has now bought its own railroad, the Tennken Railroad. With its show of commitment to revitalization, it has won an enterprise zone designation from the Commonwealth of Kentucky which has, in turn, spurred new growth in Hickman's economy.

Hickman's resurgence, with the help of Kentucky's Enterprise Zone Program, is another example of the value of this economic development concept. I hope the day is not too distant when Congress will enact Federal Enterprise Zone legislation to augment successes which State-created zones are enjoying.

I ask that the following article, entitled "Hickman—The Little Town That Could," by Hal Greer, be printed in the RECORD. It appeared in the January 1986 issue of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's publication, "Enterprise Zone Notes."

The article follows:

HICKMAN—THE LITTLE TOWN THAT COULD

(By Hal Greer)

Hickman is a small rural community of 3,000 located on the Mississippi River in far western Kentucky. It is nearer to five other state capitals than it is to its own. Like many communities on major rivers, Hickman thrived as a boisterous river port early in the 19th century. It was a center of trade and commerce until the railroads revolutionized transportation. Then once lively river towns, like Hickman, became little hamlets almost overwhelmed by progress.

The 1980 census showed that Hickman continued to lose population, particularly its young people, due to the lack of job opportunities in the area. But instead of ignoring the worsening situation, Hickman decided to do something about its plight.

The first application the Kentucky Enterprise Zone Authority received for an Enterprise Zone designation was from Hickman. The state awarded Hickman a zone designation in 1983, not only because of the need existing in the area but also because of the show of community organization and determination. Local commitment to the program led Hickman to offer special natural gas rates for businesses, and to reduce the city's real estate and tangible property ad valorem tax rates to one mill per $100 of assessment, for qualifying businesses.

Hickman impressed the Kentucky Enterprise Zone Authority with its purchase and restoration of 51.7 miles of railroad track linking the town to the main line in Dyersburg, Tennessee. The rail spur has significant value for Sigri Carbon Company, the city's major industrial employer. The $2 million project, headed by the Hickman River City Development Corporation, required assistance from the Kentucky Commerce Cabinet (state community development block grants), the state Department of Transportation, and the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). The Tennken Railroad made necessary track improvements before the sale. Now, a year later, Hickman's rail line operates in the black.

Progress in developing a new riverport complex that could handle virtually any type of cargo transported on inland waterways further impressed the Enterprise Zone Authority. Authority members felt that Hickman had taken a positive step by establishing a task force to unite the leadership from all segments of the community—city and county governments, business and industry—to develop a master plan for effective development.

To date, 24 small businesses have expanded or located in the Hickman Enterprise Zone, creating or saving 200 plus jobs. Ash-Tex, a new plant specializing in textile finishing (e.g. washing, pressing, special stitching, and labeling blue jeans) expects to hire 200 employees during the next 18 months. It is well on its way toward the goal with 70 workers already on the job. Mr. Jerry Gurien, the plant owner, says "We are excited by the possibilities of the Enterprise Zone benefits. In fact, it will give us a good start in a new venture that will be very beneficial in the long run. Future development can expect to use the zone tool as leverage for any expansions or growth. We would encourage any businessman or industrialist to look at the area's potential and the local initiative evidenced by the aggressive community cooperation."

James M. Everett, Fulton County Judge/Executive, said, "We are pleased with the tremendous coming together of local initiatives to develop the total economic potential. The Enterprise Zone is a tool of economic development—a very good tool. Local and state incentives, and, hopefully, federal incentives in the future, add new reasons for businesses and industries needing and looking for expansion or new developments."

Hickman has just completed work on a video to market its Enterprise Zone and port facilities. The film is a cooperative effort among the city, the Kentucky Commerce Cabinet, Murray State University, and TVA.

The Hickman Economic Development Task Force is asking about Foreign Trade Zones and their benefits to industry. They may decide they want one. Anyone want to guess what will come next?

SURVIVORS OF ABORTION: THE DREADED COMPLICATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, when tiny infants survive abortion they do not enjoy equality before the law. Premature children will be rushed to neonatal care units, occasionally via ambulances and even helicopters. This is not the case for the survivors of abortions. A child who lives through an abortion in the second or third trimester may be as fully formed as the "preemie," but he or she receives different care.

The article I am submitting today describes in brutal detail two typical "medical procedures" for the treatment of abortion survivors. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to consider the words of nurse Kathleen Malloy. She was ashamed of her profession when this article was published in Florida, back in 1979. We should be ashamed that this sort of behavior even now occurs daily in our Nation.

The article follows:

NURSE TO SENATE: ASHAMED OF PROFESSION

(By Dick Conklin)

NURSE'S TESTIMONY

"I'm a housewife and a registered nurse from Jacksonville. I retired from the nursing profession when I became pregnant with my first child and stayed retired until my fourth child was in the sixth grade. I then returned to work in my local hospital in the labor and delivery room. Many things progressed in those years—some things regressed. I learned by seeing with my own eyes that to have an abortion is to rid oneself of a human being.

"I worked the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift, and when we weren't busy I'd go out to help with the newborns. One night when I went to the nursery, I saw a bassinet outside the nursery. There was a baby in this bassinet—a crying, perfectly formed baby—but there was a difference in this child. She had been scalded. She was the child of a saline abortion.

"This little girl looked as if she had been put in a pot of boiling water. No doctor, no nurse, no parent to comfort this hurt, burned child. She was left alone to die in pain. They wouldn't let her inside the nursery—they didn't even bother to cover her.

"I was ashamed of my profession that night! It's hard to believe this can happen in our modern hospital but it does. It happens all the time. I thought a hospital was a place to heal the sick—not a place to kill.

"I asked a nurse in another hospital what they do with their babies who are aborted by saline. Unlike the hospital where I work, where the baby was left alone struggling for breath, their hospital puts the infant in a bucket and puts the lid on. Suffocation! Death by suffocation!

"Another nurse said she had to stop helping with abortions. The little servered arms and legs from a suction abortion were just too much for her to look at.

"Gentleman . . . ladies . . . aren't you happy our moms weren't born in this generation. It could have been one of us that ended in that lonely bassinet—or in that ugly bucket. We must respect life. Please, I ask you to support a constitutional convention . . . thanks for listening."●

NOTICE PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Mr. Peter D. Lennon, a member of the staff of the Democratic Policy Committee, to participate in a program in Brussels and Norway, sponsored by the NATO Information Service, last October 13-18, 1985.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Lennon in the program in Brussels and Norway, at the expense of the NATO Information Service, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

TEST BAN

● Mr. SIMMON. Mr. President, Dr. Robert O. Byrd, former faculty member at North Park College in Illinois and now a resident of Ontario, Canada, sent me an editorial from the Toronto Globe and Mail about the test ban.

We should listen when our friends who believe in Western values as much as we do, say we're making a great mistake.

The final line of the editorial is, "It is a sad thing to have to say, but it is Mr. Reagan's 'dynamism,' not Mr. Gorbachev's, that worries the world."

I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to read it.

The editorial follows:

[From the Toronto Globe and Mail, Apr. 2, 1986]

CASE FOR A TEST BAN

The purpose of arms control agreements and nuclear test bans is not to rid the world of nuclear weapons, which is, unfortunately, unrealistic. It is to increase stability in the military relationship among the major powers. Stability reduces the risk of war on technical and psychological grounds. And stability reduces the cost of deterrence, allowing more devotion to other human needs.

This is why Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's campaign for a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty (which would include underground explosions) is so immediately attractive. It offers stability at zero level of activity (recalling former prime minister Pierre Trudeau's concept of nuclear "suffocation"), a prospect of unusual clarity in the complex business of arms control. Mr. Gorbachev enhances his proposal by agreeing to on-site verification and adds political force by implying that his attendance at another superpower summit may be conditional on the American response.

The American response is negative. Early explanations for this referred to supposed "testgap" between the Soviets and Americans, or to the existence of more sophisticated U.S. devices in need of regular checking. It is now apparent that the U.S. nuclear test program is also part of the Strategic Defence Initiative which so inspires President Ronald Reagan. The United States is working on nuclear-powered X-ray lasers, a particularly "promising" possibility that would fall to a comprehensive test ban treaty. This helps to explain the vigor of Mr. Gorbachev's very public posture, and the curtness of the American response.

Here is another illustration of how Mr. Reagan's SDI reduces the prospect for stability in arms and nuclear testing, at least in the medium term. The SDI introduces an enormous new dynamic into superpower military relations precisely when the Soviets (and most of the rest of the world) are looking for more predictability.

The SDI is not just another weapons system. It presumes a radically different concept of deterrence—defense instead of mutually assured destruction—that would require decades and huge expenditures to realize (if it proves technically feasible). Perniciously, this forced reversal of military doctrine would create enormous instability as it was implemented, and its outcome would be no different from what we have already achieved—a military checkmate. (No one should doubt that the Soviets would follow America's lead.)

Mr. Reagan's claim that the new balance would be superior because it is non-nuclear ignores the destructive and offensive potential of laser and particle-beam technology (some of which may be nuclear-based), forgets that nuclear weapons will still exist, and discounts the risks and waste of moving from one doctrine to another.

The Soviet Union appears to want affordable stability in its military relations with the United States. Despite this, and even without the SDI, a new agreement on strategic arms and intermediate nuclear weapons reduction would be difficult. (The Soviets are not bear cubs, Lawrence S. Hagan, research director at the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, recently described Soviet arms control proposals at Geneva as "patently one-sided, designed to strike at the heart of U.S. and NATO technology, capability and strategy.") But without the SDI, a comprehensive test ban treaty would be possible (which could be expanded to anti-satellite and strategic defense programs), and the prospect of reducing the very nuclear arms Mr. Reagan hopes to nullify would be less the chimera it now appears.

It is a sad thing to have to say, but it is Mr. Reagan's "dynamism," not Mr. Gorbachev's, that worries the world.●

THE ACCESSION OF SPAIN AND PORTUGAL TO THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, last Thursday, the Senate unanimously agreed to a resolution urging the President to use his full authority to retaliate against the new restrictions on grains and oilseeds in Spain and Portugal, unless the United States receives prompt and complete compensation for any loss of trade resulting from the enlargement of the European Community. It was my hope that this resolution would strengthen the hand of Secretary Lyng and Ambassador Yeutter as they made one final attempt last weekend to resolve this dispute with the Europeans. Unfortunately, early reports of that meeting indicate that the Europeans remain intransigent and refuse to negotiate a reasonable solution to the problem.

By way of background, some of my colleagues may recall the floor remarks I made on the subject of the European Community enlargement 2 months ago, before the new import restrictions on grains and soybeans in Spain and Portugal went into effect March 1.

Subsequently, 20 of my colleagues joined me in a letter to the President to urge him to pursue to the fullest extent the American right to compensation under the rules of international trade by preparing and using a comprehensive list of items for retaliation against the European Community.

I am encouraged that on March 31, the President announced such a list of retaliatory commodities, which includes imports of European wine, cheese, mineral waters, pork and cakes. By announcing these possible measures, the President has elected to demonstrate that the United States will no longer stand idly by and let the American farmer pay the price for the enlargement of the European Community.

Regrettably, in response to our assertion of rights expressly provided for under GATT, the European Community has again targeted many American agricultural commodities for counter-retaliation. This time, many of California's lucrative products, such as wine, prunes, fruit juices, and California's $185 million worth of almond exports to Europe, are on the European Community's hit list.

Although California producers ask nothing more than a fair market in which to compete, once again, they might be the victims of unfair agricultural trade practices by other governments. And it is California, again, which might be made to pay the price to defend American grain and soybean exports.

So many of you here today may wonder why I—a Senator from California—feel so strongly about the enlargement of the European Community which, for now, harms our grain and soybean producers. My reasoning is clear and simple.

Ultimately, the enlargement of the European Community will affect all sectors of American agriculture. Thanks to the subsidies of the common agricultural policy, Spain and Portugal may become the "Californias of Europe," producing and exporting abundant supplies of subsidized fruits, nuts, and vegetables. And as those subsidies continue to flow, Spain and Portugal will threaten to strip California exporters of their hard-earned markets in Europe and abroad, in the same way that American grain and soybean exporters are currently losing their European markets.

In my view, all of American agriculture must unite behind this issue, because ultimately it will affect all of American agriculture.

We can no longer afford to divide American agriculture only to let the European Community conquer it. We must look ahead to the 10 years it will take for Spain and Portugal to fully integrate their agriculture with the European Community. Unless American agriculture stands united now, from the outset, to defend the legitimate rights of every American farmer in this process, agricultural producers of numerous other commodities may lose many export markets forever.

Yesterday, the Joint Economic Committee held a timely and informative hearing on this critical issue, during which testimony was received from Government witnesses, including officials from the Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Trade Representative, as well as industry representatives. One such witness, Dwayne Andreas, who is chairman and CEO of Archer Daniels Midland, provided the committee with a very informative and insightful statement about our relationship with the European Community. Indeed, his testimony is among the best explanations of the historical roots of this dilemma, its impact upon our Nation's farmers, and recommended it to all of my colleagues and ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The statement follows:

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY AGRICULTURAL TRADE PRACTICES

Good morning and thank you for inviting me to appear before you today. My name is Dwayne Andreas. I am Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Archer Daniels Midland Company. ADM is a food processing company located in the heart of America's farm country. We have 175,000 farmer shareholders and are partners in global merchandising of farm crops with cooperatives that represent more than 2 million farmers. ADM is unique in that it is the only public company entirely devoted to processing, marketing, and moving agricultural products. Together with our affiliates and subsidiaries, we market, manage, and move approximately 75 million tons annually around the world.

If we are to understand the effects on U.S. agriculture of the Common Agricultural Policy of the European Economic Community, we should go back in history and examine a little-publicized report dated August 24, 1960. It was in the early 1960's that we negotiated the famous Kennedy Round which set the stage for vast uneconomic ventures in the years to come.

Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, after an extensive trip through several Common Market countries, submitted the following most perceptive recommendations and conclusions:

1. "I am very much concerned about the preponderant support I found for higher rather than lower support levels in some countries. The potential for production increases in the Common Market area is great. If stimulated by high prices, production increases for grains, oil seeds, and livestock products can make the area more self-sufficient and reduce our traditional dollar exports in this part of Europe. It is essential that the United States continue to follow a liberal trade policy. Thus, our moral position in urging greater imports of U.S. farm products into dollar export areas will be sustained. I found this to be so on my trip."

2. "I found that our current export potential in this area was being hampered by protective devices which inhibited trade in agricultural commodities. These current restrictions on our exports, many of them discriminatory in nature, should be removed as rapidly as possible."

3. "If the EEC adopts the protective import program which has been proposed, this could easily result in reduced exports from the United States. This could create serious problems in the development of mutually beneficial and more liberal trade policies."

4. "We must continue to impress the individual members of the Common Market that the U.S. is basing its strong support for the community on the assumption that an outward-looking policy which will contribute to expansion of the multilateral trade on a non-discriminatory basis will be developed. I find it difficult to see how they can develop an outward-looking policy under a system which utilizes, for many agricultural commodities, unlimited variable import levies against the competition of imports."

5. "High price supports would force the Community to implement them by trade-restricting devices which would interfere with normal commercial relations. This could relegate outside countries to the status of residual suppliers. This would do irreparable harm to GATT since one of its primary objectives is to expand total trade, including agriculture. High price supports in the United States would weaken our position in making a strong objection of high supports in other countries."

6. "During the 6 to 9 years transition to the Common Agricultural Policy, the amount of protection should be reduced progressively so that the trade of the EEC with other free countries will expand on a mutually-beneficial basis. We cannot expect sudden policy shifts without disruptions.

7. "Our use of some P.L. 480 funds for market development has achieved considerable success in Western Europe. This program, in cooperation with American industry, should be strengthened and enlarged."

Now, 26 years later, we find the following devastating results:

On April, 1, 1986, the U.S. average farm price per bushel of wheat was $3.17 per bushel. The variable import levy was $4.24 per bushel on top of that.

For corn, the average price received by U.S. farmers for corn was $2.31 per bushel. To enter the Common Market, the importer had to pay an additional $3.49 per bushel.

Our surplus corn is converted into ethanol which costs about $1.20 a gallon. Spain buys ethanol from its farmers for about $4.00 a gallon then sells it to a Jamaican company for 40 cents a gallon. The Jamaican company passes it through a pipe to dehydrate it, an operation that could be performed in the U.S. for less than 5 cents a gallon, then calls it a CBI product and brings it in the United States without paying the 60 cents a gallon duty.

When it is used here, it benefits from another 60 cents tax concession which was enacted as a National Security Measure to help us be independent of imports and to help corn growers market their corn, despite the obvious fact that every 100 million gallons replaces 40 million bushels of corn and costs our government more than $60 million in revenue.

For grain sorghum, the U.S. producer received $3.68 per cwt., and the import levy was an additional $3.66 cwt.

For broilers, the import levy is approximately 15 cents per pound. The Common Market's export subsidy on broilers is now 11 cents per pound. They now dominate world broiler trade with subsidies although we are the low-cost producer.

Wheat flour is so heavily subsidized into export that the EEC share of world trade in flour has gone from 20% to 60% while ours has gone from 60% down to 20%, even though the U.S. is by far the lowest-cost producer. This has cost us $13 billion in flour exports since 1970.

Foreign federal treasuries destroy the law of comparative advantage.

At the time the Benson report was written, the EEC was a much larger grain importer, buying up to 20 million tons of grain per year. Recently, it has been exporting about 5 million tons per year plus more sugar, poultry, eggs, and dairy products than any single country in the world and, except for Argentina, is the greatest beef exporter in the world. Only Canada and the U.S. exceed the EEC in wheat exports.

The ascendancy of the EEC position reflects the full effects of the Common Agricultural Policy's use of expensive and complex devices, such as high price supports and export subsidies. These tactics are buttressed by variable import levies and feed manufacturing requirements to use EEC surplus products. More recently, to reduce protein meal imports, extremely high returns are provided for Common Market producers of soybeans (about $15 per bushel). Also, rapeseed and sunflower seed are sold to processors at 30% of the price farmers receive. That is part of the EEC effort to drive U.S. soybeans from the marketplace.

With all these expensive economic incentives for production, surpluses are the inevitable result. These surpluses are disposed of by utilizing a device called export restitutions (which we call export subsidies).

Probably the worst case scenario is that of sugar. Sugar is supported at about 27 cents per pound and dumped into the world market at the raw sugar equivalent—as low as 3 cents per pound. The EEC sugar policy is costing developing countries some $6.4 billion annually in lost income. It is my judgment that the U.S. would not need a sugar program if the EEC should stop its dumping program.

On a global basis, U.S. agricultural exports are severely depressed from a dollar peak in 1981 of almost $44 billion to a 1986 USDA estimate of $28 billion—a drop of more than 35% in 5 years. I do not mean to imply that this reduction in exports is all due to EEC policies. Actually, it is due to several factors, including, but not limited to, recessions and even depressions in several potential importing countries. Additional causes are the International Monetary Fund and related debt constraints of third world countries, and the value of the dollar relative to the currencies of other exporters. (This latter case is being corrected but will not show immediate results.)

Moreover, the relatively high loan rates in the U.S. have been a contributing factor to making us a residual supplier. The 1985 Food Security Act will enable the U.S. to be much more competitive—if the authorities provided therein are implemented wisely.

Nevertheless, USDA and others agree that EEC export and production are costing U.S. farmers the loss of about $6 billion annually in export markets and about a billion more annually in farm income because of depressed prices.

A recent study by the Australian Bureau of Agricultural Economics reveals that the EEC policies have "depressed world prices of major temperate agricultural products by, on average, some 16 percent."

Ironically, all this massive subsidizing of EEC production, costing the Common Market over $14 billion a year, is possible because the U.S. negotiators agreed to it in the Kennedy Round and because the U.S pays tens of billions of dollars toward EEC countries' defense costs, leaving them with enough tax income to carry out this program.

Fundamentally, the formation of the CAP resulted in an increase in protection against agricultural commodities from non-member countries. Actually, what we see is insulation, with few exceptions, from outside competition and the internal supports well above world price levels. Internal stability, buttressed by the variable levy and other devices, creates external price destabilization, especially when world-wide dumping occurs.

I am certain that U.S. government witnesses will advise this Committee that the Administration policy is strongly against the EEC policies which distort trade and do damage to the concept of comparative advantage. Successive administrations have been saying this for years, so frequently that we are known in Europe as "Paper Tigers". The U.S. government sends strong notes, and the EEC sends grain and other products.

I understand that Secretary Benson, on his historic trip, was told that the CAP was to be the glue that would hold the EEC together. However, I feel that this objective could have been achieved at much less cost to the non-EEC countries. It will be difficult at this point in history to resolve the basic differences between the EEC and the U.S.—yet settle or ameliorate them we must. There are many within the EEC who recognize that the costs, increasing at a rapid rate, will force a restructuring of the CAP. The new U.S. legislation will increase export subsidy costs to the EEC.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Last year I chaired the President's Task Force on International Free Enterprises dealing with Trade and Aid. We made several recommendations, some of which have been adopted.

One of the most important recommendations was that we double the P.L. 480 program which has successfully functioned to move food and food products into additional consumption globally.

We should implement that recommendation forthwith and invite the EEC to join with us by contributing an equal amount to parts of the world which otherwise could not afford it. High-level EEC officials have expressed interest in such a coordinated effort. This could be done without legislation or appropriations simply by donating surpluses to the P.L. 480 administration like we do for the BICEP program. Such a program aggressively administered could solve most of the surplus problems by increasing consumption for essential humanitarian reasons. Economic benefits would be enormous.

2. There should be a recognition that the Current General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) has had very little effect on agricultural trade. The next round of trade negotiations must resolve this problem—or cease to be a factor in world market disputes. There must be a commitment to improvement of the conduct of all parties involved in agricultural trade.

3. It is both the U.S. and the EEC interests to resolve the problems inherent in the strong competitiveness for export markets. The U.S. has unilaterally made efforts to adjust output and stocks. However, the 1983 PIK program, which resulted in sharp downward production adjustments, was accompanied by increases in non-U.S. production. Therefore, the EEC and the U.S. should meet to agree on production restraint policy. With the long U.S. history of production control efforts, the conferences can be mutually profitable.

4. If the EEC and the U.S. could agree to each reduce sugar and fructose production by about 2 million tons annually, world sugar markets would become market oriented once again. U.S. import quotas could be increased or even eliminated with resulting economic benefits to the CBI and developing countries.

5. Policy changes should become a matter of bilateral discussion with the objective of avoiding injury to the other country and possibly to third countries. The interests of low-income, developing countries must be on the continuing agenda.

6. Our Task Force recommended that at least $7 billion should be made available for mixed credit through the Export Import Bank to match the mixed credits proliferating from other Western countries.

I applaud the Administration's recent decision to start with $300 million for that purpose. Twenty times that much is needed to revive exports and to bring the countries who abuse mixed credits to the bargaining table.

I do not mean to imply that the above are a complete list of possible recommendations. None of these suggestions will be easy to accomplish. However, failure to make economic sense through negotiations is unthinkable and much more difficult.

In closing, I would like to comment in another vein on our attitude toward the EEC Commissioners. We must be careful to not be too critical of them. A number of them disagree just as we do with their policies. But they are obligated to carry out programs and policies which we—our negotiators—contractually agreed to long ago. So we share the responsibility.

I applaud the free-market orientation of this Administration. But we in business often question whether doctrinaire economists in government, most of whom have no practical business experience, realize that very often, when preoccupied with the ideaology of free trade practices in a world which has abandoned free trade, they are in fact saying to our people and institutions: "Workers, farmers, cooperatives, corporations, go ahead—compete directly with foreign governments who engage in business using subsidies and state trading. If that means you become unemployed or go broke, so be it. It's part of the system." This is utter nonsense, and the dire consequences of neglecting trade policy are already evident.●

INTERPRETATIVE RULING OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Select Committee on Ethics, I submit for the information of the Senate, an interpretative ruling on the use of Senate letterhead by Members of the Senate in connection with campaign fundraising efforts. This interpretative ruling is issued pursuant to section 206 of Senate Resolution 110, 95th Congress.

This ruling was the subject of a "Dear Colleague" letter which was dated April 14, 1986.

Interpretative rulings by the committee may be relied upon by an individual involved in a specific transaction or activity which is indistinguishable in all its material aspects from the facts on which a ruling has been rendered. The committee encourages written requests for rulings on specific situations not clearly covered by the Code of Official Conduct. The committee will continue to respond to written requests for interpretations, treat such requests confidentially, and publish its rulings with appropriate deletions to protect the privacy of individuals who seek committee guidance.

I ask that the ruling be printed in the RECORD.

The ruling on the use of Senate letterhead is as follows:

INTERPRETATIVE RULING No. 409

QUESTION CONSIDERED

Is the advisory Opinion of the Select Committee, issued on August 14, 1978, regarding the use of letterhead and/or envelopes which utilize the words "United States Senate" and "Official Business" or any combination thereof, applicable to a Senator's funds or support for a campaign for election or reelection to any Federal, State, or local office?

ADVISORY OPINION

"It is the opinion of the Select Committee that it is improper conduct which reflects upon the Senate for a Senator to authorize or allow a non-Senate individual, group, or organization to use the words 'United States Senate' and 'Official Business,' or any combination thereof, on any letterhead or envelope. The use of a Senator's name followed by the words, 'United States Senate', is not hereby deemed improper."

FACTS

In an invitation which was written on official Senate letterhead which includes the words "United States Senate, Washington, D.C., 20510", a Senator invited individuals to a dinner which was directly connected to the raising of funds for his campaign for reelection. The letter of invitation was prepared by the Senator himself and was sent from his office.

DISCUSSION

The Select Committee's Advisory Opinion of August 14, 1978 on the use of the words "United States Senate" on letterhead and envelopes was prompted by the receipt of a substantial amount of correspondence from the public concerning the use by non-Senate groups and organizations of facsimiles of United States Senate letterhead in their fundraising appeals. Typically, prior to August 14, 1978, a Senator would agree to write a fundraising letter on behalf of a non-Senate group or organization and allow that organization to include the Senator's letter in a fundraising appeal to be sent by that group or organization. In most instances, the Senator's letter was written on a facsimile of official United States Senate letterhead and in many instances was mailed in envelopes which bore the return address of the United States Senate. The concern expressed by the public was that they were misled into believing that the mailing was from the Senator whose letterhead was used when, in fact, it was really from a private group. As a result, the Committee developed an Advisory Opinion, pursuant to its authority under S. Res. 110 and S. Res. 338, to issue Advisory Opinions on actions which might tend to reflect discredit upon the Senate. The Advisory Opinion concluded that it was improper for a Member of the Senate to allow a non-Senate organization or group to use letterhead or envelopes which contained the words "United States Senate" and/or "Official Business." During the development of the Advisory Opinion, concern was expressed by some Members of the Committee that while the Advisory Opinion should restrict the use of Senate letterhead by non-Senate groups or organizations, such as campaign committees, the Advisory Opinion should not preclude a Senator's personal use of his letterhead for whatever correspondence the Senator thought appropriate. As a result, the Advisory Opinion included, as a last sentence, a proviso that "the use by a Senator of his or her own name followed by the words 'United States Senate' is not hereby deemed improper."

Since the adoption of this Advisory Opinion, the Committee has been asked by Senators on several occasions about the application of the Advisory Opinion to various types of mailings in which the Senator was interested. In these Interpretative Rulings, the Committee has taken the position that while it is improper and a violation of the Advisory Opinion for a Senator to allow a campaign committee or any other non-Senate organization to prepare a mailing which uses letterhead that contains the words "United States Senate" on the masthead of the letter (see, IR #169 and #254), the Advisory Opinion would not preclude a Member from writing a personal letter on Senate letterhead from his own office (see, IR #264, #270, and #365).

Because of a concern that the last sentence of the Advisory Opinion was being interpreted too broadly by Members and staff, the Committee reviewed the previous interpretations of the application of the Advisory Opinion and concluded that the Advisory Opinion does preclude a Senator from using letterhead and/or envelopes containing the words "United States Senate" and/or "Official Business", or any combinaton thereof, for any correspondence, even that prepared personally by the Senator, which solicits a financial contribution or other form of assistance for any campaign for election or reelection to any Federal, State, or local office. Where a Senator desires to correspond with members of the public about a campaign-related matter, such correspondence should be prepared on letterhead which has been paid for by the Senator's personal funds or funds derived from his campaign committee and which does not employ the words "United States Senate" and/or "Official Business."

RULING

The Select Committee's Advisory Opinion of August 14, 1978 on the use of official letterhead does apply to and therefore restricts a Senator's personal use of letterhead and/or envelopes which utilize the words "United States Senate" and/or "Official Business" or any combination thereof, where the correspondence involves a request for a financial contribution or other form of assistance for any campaign for election or reelection to any Federal, State, or local office. Additionally, this ruling would preclude the use of such official letterhead by a Senator to write "thank-you" letters to contributors or campaign workers.

Lastly, through previous Interpretative Rulings, the Select Committee has approved the use of letterhead, by a Senator, which uses the Senator's name followed by "United States Senator." This latter form of letterhead could be used to address correspondence which involved campaign-related topics, including "thank-you" notes for participation in a campaign.●

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, many of my colleagues are probably aware that this Sunday, April 27, marks the beginning of this year's 6-month observance of daylight saving time. Many also know that I have proposed a bill and more recently an amendment which would extend daylight saving time by changing the starting date from the last Sunday of April to the first Sunday of April.

Daylight saving time is something which many of us take for granted. We turn our clocks forward every spring and backward each fall without considering the potential effects of changing the duration of daylight saving time. We all know that daylight saving time causes sunrise and sunset to occur an hour later in the day, but many of the effects of this change are not at all obvious. Consequently, when Congress considers legislation to extend daylight saving time, the debate is characterized by recitation of sunrise and sunset times and analysis of statistics relating to traffic safety, crime, and energy consumption. Through all of this, it is not easy to grasp the facts.

I would like to suggest to my colleagues that one simple way to understand this issue is to get up Saturday morning and watch the earliest sunrise of the year. If you are here in Washington, the sunrise tomorrow will be at 5:17 a.m. Of course, it will begin to get light about 30 minutes earlier, so if you want to see the crack of dawn, by its official definition, you will have to get up at, or stay up until, about 4:47 a.m.

Many of us will be in our home States tomorrow and will have the opportunity to see first-hand how my amendment would affect their States. I will be in Seattle, where sunrise tomorrow will occur at 5:01 a.m., and the first daylight will be visible at about 4:31 a.m.

The purpose of my amendment, and of daylight saving time, is to make the sunrises and sunsets coincide with the way we live. Under current law, the earliest sunrises of the year occur in April. This year in Washington, DC, the 18 earliest sunrises of the year are those from April 9–26. This period coincides almost exactly with the period of time—April 6–26—which would have been affected this year by my amendment. Tomorrow's sunrise in Washington will be 26 minutes earlier than sunrise on June 21, the day with the most daylight of the year. This year, daylight saving time begins 55 days before this "longest day of the year" and ends 127 days afterward. Clearly, our present system is imbalanced, and much of our April daylight is wasted.

Along with the distinguished Senators from Maine, Senator MITCHELL, California, Senators CRANSTON and MITCHELL, and Rhode Island, Senator PELL, I have sent my colleagues a letter describing the amendment and a chart showing sunrise and sunset times for towns in Senators' home States. I hope that these materials will convince our colleagues that daylight saving time in April will enable us to make better use of our daylight hours. I urge those who are skeptical to get up early Saturday morning, watch the earliest sunrise of the year, and think about how useful an hour of sunlight would be early Saturday evening.●

AMBASSADOR ROSENNE'S THOUGHTS ON TERRORISM

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to commend to my colleagues a recent speech given by Israel's Ambassador to the United States, Meir Rosenne. The occasion was the annual policy conference of the Americans Israel Public Affairs Committee, and the subject of Ambassador Rosenne's address was the problem of terrorism.

Besides giving us the perspective of a country which is perhaps more experienced than any other in dealing with terrorism, Ambassador Rosenne has achieved in this speech a unique blend of the emotional and the rational. He evokes the searing images of terrorism, images that sicken and sadden us: the brutal slayings of innocent civilians and the glorification of those who carry out these terrorist acts as freedom fighters. But he also provides a carefully reasoned analysis of the problem of terrorism and what we can do about it. Ambassador Rosenne tells us who bears responsiblity for the persistence of terrorism; he sets out the basic principles we should follow when acting against terrorists; and he identifies some of the approaches we can take to combat terrorism in the long run.

Ambassador Rosenne has made an extremely useful contribution to the debate over how best to deal with terrorism, and I hope that my colleagues will take the time to read his speech.

I ask that the text of Ambassador Rosenne's speech be printed in the RECORD.

The speech follows:

[AIPAC Conference, April 6, 1986]

ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR MEIR ROSENNE—TERRORISM: WHO IS RESPONSIBLE, WHAT CAN BE DONE

I will speak today on the problem of terrorism—who is responsible for it, and what can be done to combat it.

Whenever I address the problem of terrorism, my mind is assailed by searing images which I cannot escape:

The slaughter of the Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

The execution of Leon Klinghoffer, shot and pushed into the sea.

The killing of the 11-year old daughter of the American journalist at Rome airport.

The standing ovation given to Yasser Arafat by the United Nations in 1974, when Secretary General Waldheim greeted him, and he sat with his gun in the chair reserved for Presidents.

The standing ovation at the 1980 World Conference on Women in Copenhagen, afforded to the PLO terrorist Leila Haled, who hijacked a plane.

The terrorist holding his hand over the mouth of the pilot of TWA Flight 874 at Beirut airport last year.

The decapitated body of a five-year-old girl in Nahariya, in 1981.

The body of the American (woman) photographer on the beach at Herzlia, when Arafat's men killed a bus-load of 80 Israelis on the road to Haifa.

The freeing of the Entebbe hostages by the Israeli commandos in 1976.

These are the images. Those were the victims. Anyone sitting in this room could have been one of those victims. We have short memories, but the survivors—the sons and daughters, husbands and wives and parents—will live with the trauma for the rest of their lives.

We have become so used to terrorism that we tend to forget that anyone under 20 doesn't even know that there were times when you could board a plane without X-ray screening. Life will soon become unbearable unless we decide immediately to take the steps necessary to put an end to this disease.

Two things are required—political wisdom and moral will.

First comes a proper understanding of terrorism. Then it is a question of the will to act. So we must ask two questions: Who is responsible for the persistence of terrorism, and what can be done to combat it?

(1) The responsibility lies with those democratic states that thought that Israel would be the only victim. Now they see their own innocent citizens victimized.

(2) The responsibility lies with those who make a distinction between terrorists, saying that Abu Nidal is a "bad" terrorist but Arafat is a "good" terrorist.

My friends, there is no such thing as a good terrorist, and anyone who makes such a distinction in effect condones and encourages terrorism. Indeed, such distinctions inevitably paralyze action whenever terrorism rears its ugly head.

(3) The responsibility lies with the West European states of the European Economic Community that, because of oil, adopted a resolution in November 1973, following the invasion of Israel by Syria and Egypt, condemning the victims rather than the aggressors.

(4) The responsibility lies with those who for years refused the extradition of terrorists, but instead let them go free.

I shall never forget that, when I served as Legal Advisor to Israel's Foreign Ministry, Israel requested, jointly with West Germany and in conformity with our extradition treaty, the extradition of Abu Daoud, the terrorist conspirator who organized the Munich killings; he was set free because there was fear of retaliation by the PLO and Arafat.

(5) The responsibility lies with all those Western states that have accorded virtual diplomatic status to the PLO and have permitted PLO offices to function, with respectability and legitimacy, as bases from which to launch their terrorist murder.

(6) The responsibility lies with all those states, in all corners of the world, whose ambassadors accorded a standing ovation to Arafat after he addressed the UN General Assembly.

Let's face it: The hands that applauded there were condoning the atrocities committed by the terrorists before and after that dark day in 1974.

(7) The responsibility lies with those states that regard the terrorist gangs as comradely anti-Western and anti-democratic forces, and permit them to be trained on their territories, and provide them with weapons and ammunition, funds, diplomatic, political, economic, and intelligence and moral support.

It has long since been amply demonstrated—especially in the vast amount of PLO documents captured in the 1982 Lebanon war—that the Soviet Union is at the heart of this enterprise, in league with its East German and other allies. These states are accomplices in the commission of terrorist atrocities.

(8) The responsibility lies with the United Nations which only this year, for the first time in its history, adopted a resolution, in the Security Council, condemning terrorism. But this ignoble, decades-long delay should come as no surprise: This was the same UN that refused to condemn anti-semitism in 1964, and that equated Zionism with Nazism in 1975.

(9) The responsibility lies with states like Syria, Libya, Iraq, Iran, that organize, direct and support proxy terrorist forces, and provide every kind of practical assistance to the terrorists. These are lawless states engaged in lawless actions—they are guilty of state terrorism.

(10) The responsibility lies with those who seek the "root causes" of terrorism, and who seek to "explain" or "understand" the terrorists and their motivations and aspirations. Such explanations function in effect to justify terrorist acts.

This fashionable "understanding" is a form of moral confusion. All over the world there are all sorts of groups with all sorts of grievances. If "understanding" were to be extended to their "root causes," they would have carte blanche to murder, in order to gain "redress". Should they be permitted to run amok with their Kalashnikovs?

Mass murder is mass murder, and no grievance can justify it, nor will "understanding" avert or eliminate terrorism.

(11) The responsibility lies with the countries that condemned Israel for having taken action, at great risk to itself, against PLO headquarters outside Tunis. The UN Security Council resolution condemning the raid was an encouragement to even more terrorism. Instead of punishing the aggressor, the victim was indicted. And now the PLO fighters boast publicly of being back in Beirut, in force.

(12) The responsibility lies with the oil-producing states that exploited their extortionate "oil weapon" to try to impose solutions that would have brought about the end of the State of Israel. And it was a sad moment in European history to see how democratic states were ready to accept the diktat of hoodlums in place of the principles of enlightened diplomacy.

Even though this problem no longer exists, it is worth remembering, for the future . . .

What can be done?

First, we have to realize that terrorism did not begin with the problem of the Palestinian Arabs, and it will not end if and when that problem is resolved.

Terrorism is rooted in the culture of violence in some countries. Internecine Arab terrorism for example, is a natural part of Mideast politics, and this atmosphere is hospitable to the extension of terrorism beyond the Arab world itself—against Israel, against France, against Britain, etc. It is in the context of that traditional culture of violence that the terrorism perpetrated against Israel by the Arab world is to be understood.

Second, we have to realize that there is no appeasing terrorists, who threaten not only Israel but Western democratic society. Those nations, especially in Western Europe, that have appeased the PLO should have learned from their own bitter historical experience that appeasement only inspires contempt, scorn, and further aggression.

Acting on these basic principles, democratic states have an array of weapons to use against terrorism.

(1) There are enough legal tools available—international conventions against terrorism, hijacking, extradition. Unfortunately, these legal instruments are rarely if ever enforced. All civilized nations must adhere to and implement them.

(2) All offices of terrorist organizations, such as those of the PLO, should be closed and their operations banned.

(3) It should be made clear by the political decisions of democratic governments that there can be no bonus for terrorism. No one should try to pacify a terrorist organization such as the PLO by granting it the privilege of being a party to any political or diplomatic negotiation. Any attempt to compromise, in any shape, manner or form, with terrorist gangs will only encourage terrorism.

(4) There must be a total ban on landing rights in the democratic countries for the airplanes of states—like Libya, Syria, Iran, Iraq—that encourage terrorism.

(5) No commercial exchanges, no economic relations, should be established with countries that provide assistance to terrorist organizations, and sanctions should be taken against such states.

We do not think there is any justification for considering Saudi Arabia a peace-loving country so long as it provides—as it has been doing for years—$250 million a year to the PLO—funds that are used for killing Americans, Israelis, and other innocents.

(6) There must be closer cooperation in the exchange of intelligence information among democratic governments. Fortunately, the framework for a system for such exchange already exists; it should be broadened and strengthened.

(7) The role of the mass media, especially television, in providing instant, intense and wide-ranging attention to acts of international terrorism must be very carefully evaluated. On the one hand, there are the fundamental freedoms of press and speech to be zealously protected. On the other hand, we must recognize that those very freedoms are abused and exploited by the terrorists—for what they seek, above all, is publicity.

The tension between freedom and the requirements of security is not new, nor is it restricted to the area of terrorism. Very possibly, this is a tension that will never be fully resolved, and will always remain a dilemma for democratic societies to grapple with, especially in emergency situation. But in doing so, we should always be keenly aware of the dangers to our freedoms posed by those who would curtail or destroy them.

(8) Finally, a profoundly important moral/intellectual dimension. All too often, people in democratic societies praise, or at least condone, so-called national liberation movements for using terrorist means to gain their ends.

A legitimate movement of freedom fighters for national liberation does not, like the PLO, use violence as a first resort—does not target innocent civilians—does not, like the PLO, aim to annihilate its adversary.

Acceptance of such behavior reflects not only a debasement of language, but a deep moral and intellectual confusion, which must be rigorously clarified and rejected if we are to be able to act decisively against terrorism.

It has become fashionable to include something on terrorism at every conference on the Middle East. But I did not come here this afternoon to add my bit to this fad.

I came to express my solidarity, and the solidarity of the State of Israel—and, if I may say so, of the Jewish people—with all the victims of terrorism and their families:

With all those who lost their dear ones at airports in Paris, Vienna, Rome, Munich . . . .

With the members of the various diplomatic corps still held in capacity . . . .

With the American Ambassador to the Sudan who was murdered by Arafat's men in 1972 . . . .

With Bar Simantov, my Counselor of the Embassy in Paris, who was shot down on Saturday, April 3, 1982, in front of his wife and his eight-year-old daughter . . . .

With the innocent civilian patrons of department stores and cafes in Rome and Paris . . . .

With my dear friend and close colleague of 30 years—Shlomo Argov—a man of great humanity and a diplomat of unequalled talent and skill who in the 1960s and 1970s served Israel in this city of Washington with distinction, devotion and pride—and subsequently our Ambassador in England, who was gunned down in the streets of London four years ago—and who, now paralyzed, is doomed to spend the rest of his life in a wheel chair in Jerusalem.

We who meet here, in an AIPAC conference, have a solemn moral obligation to remember the fate of Shlomo Argov and all the other victims, to let that memory and those images spur us on to determined and vigorous efforts to battle terrorism to the end.

Thank you very much.●

THE 1986 CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes on this first day of Passover to join once again in the congressional call to conscience for Soviet Jewry.

As Jews all over the United States gather to observe Passover traditions, let us not forget that the Jews of the Soviet Union are not so lucky. While in this country Jews are free to express their religious and cultural heritage freely and without fear of persecution, Soviet Jews face a daily struggle with a government which oppresses them simply for being Jewish. I have spoken with Jewish leaders from Rhode Island about the situation of Soviet Jews, and I have read newspaper and magazine reports. By all accounts, there is no evidence to indicate that the latest Soviet crackdown on Jewish activities, which began in 1984, is letting up.

As is well known, Soviet authorities have long persecuted Jews, but since 1984 we have seen a particularly virulent wave of anti-Semitism issuing from the Kremlin. Hebrew teaching and other Jewish cultural activities are viewed as antistate activities. Soviet citizens who insist on retaining their Jewish identity—by, for example, observing the feast of Passover—place themselves in great danger. The odds are that they will be harassed, stripped of professional positions and titles, rejected by universities, and in general treated as nonpersons. The personal stories of Soviet Jews today read like chapters from Orwell's "1984" replete with false arrests and accusations, trumped-up charges, and psychological terrorism.

I recently heard from Rabbi Chaim Casper, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the University of Rhode Island, that authorities in Soviet Georgia plan to demolish one of only two synagogues left in the capital city of Tbilisi. Twenty thousand Jews live in this city, and they are understandably opposed to this, yet another Soviet attempt to stamp out Judaism. I have written to the Soviet Ambassador here, expressing my opposition to the destruction of Tbilisi's Ashkenazi Synagogue, but I do not expect to receive a response.

That is perhaps the most frustrating aspect of our efforts to fight repression of Soviet Jews: the thick, unresponsive wall of the Soviet bureaucracy. We in Congress join the President and other American leaders in making frequent calls to Soviet leaders to stop the oppression of Soviet Jews. But our requests that the Soviets reopen the doors of emigration which were, in effect, closed tightly in 1984, seem to go unheeded; usually, the only response is silence.

I am here today to remind my colleagues that our efforts are worth it. Jewish emigration totals have plummeted from more than 50,000 in 1979 to just 1,138 last year. The stories of refuseniks trampled upon by Soviet authorities for their desire to emigrate continue to reach the West. These facts give us all the more reason to redouble our efforts on behalf of Soviet Jews. The example of Anatoly Shcharansky, who languished in prison for 8 years until his sudden release a few months ago, should inspire us to continue our pressure on Soviet authorities. They must not be let to think that the release of Shcharansky was enough. President Reagan's efforts on behalf of Shcharansky paid off, and now we must work to obtain similar results for the thousands of refuseniks who may not be as famous as Shcharansky, but whose stories are no less tragic.

One such story is that of Boris Agarkov, a 48-year-old computer scientist from Leningrad. Although Soviet authorities allowed Boris to visit Israel in 1966 as part of an official delegation, he and his family were later refused permission to emigrate there. Both Boris and his wife Geralina lost their jobs as a result of their applications for exit visas, and have since faced serious financial problems. Despite his training in computers, Boris now works as a garage attendant. Boris' son, Dimitri, has also suffered for being a member of a refusenik family. He was expelled from school in 1985, officially because he was a backward student; actually it was because he married an American. He too has applied for an exit visa, which was denied, and his wife has been denied entry to visit him.

The Agarkov family's tragic story could be repeated over and over again, with different names and cities but the same pattern of persecution. I hope all of my colleagues will join me in continuing to press the Soviet Government for an end to this persecution. Soviet policy denies Jews some of the most basic human rights—the right to think and believe as one chooses, and to preserve one's cultural heritage. During this feast of Passover, when Jews the world over celebrate their rich traditions, let us hope that our plea is heard by Soviet leaders, and that they grant those basic rights to their Jewish citizens, or let them move to countries where they can live freely and openly as Jews.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HELPING PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITIES HELP THEMSELVES

HON. WYCHE FOWLER, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, as we review the Federal commitment to housing assistance programs, I would like to share with you one local housing authority's efforts to develop alternative sources of funding and greater self-sufficiency. The following speech was delivered by Samuel A. Hider of the Atlanta Housing Authority at a recent meeting of the Public Housing Directors Association trustees. I believe it contains some creative, worthwhile suggestions as to ways in which housing authorities can help themselves. I also believe that Mr. Hider's comments exemplify a responsible, considered reaction to the prospect of declining Federal assistance. Therefore, I would like to submit the following statement for the RECORD.

WHAT ARE WE DOING TO HELP OURSELVES?

(Speech delivered to PHADA Trustees, Dallas, TX, March 24, 1986, Samuel A. Hider, Executive Director, Atlanta Housing Authority)

The year of 1986 brought new challenges as well as old ones to housing authorities throughout our nation—balanced budgets, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill, and dwindling federal dollars. We, as housing administrators, have in the past shared our responsibilities when our budgets have been reduced from a 100% operating level.

To meet these new challenges, some of the avenues we have traveled in Atlanta were—first—to meet with our Mayor, City Council members and County Commissioners to keep them informed of the plight of public housing and the 50,000 tenants that we serve. We then scheduled meetings with the community at large, civic organizations, Chamber of Commerce, Minister's Union, United Way and business interests. Our first thought was to keep the community informed of the Atlanta Housing Authority's programs and objectives and the effect the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill will have on the Authority's ability to render services to our tenants by keeping the projects in decent, safe and sanitary condition.

Public housing agencies can re-evaluate and re-vamp goals and objectives for less spending. The federal government can and will reduce subsidy to our programs. But these actions alone will not lead to balancing the nation's deficit. In light of this, we are suggesting ways in which housing authorities can help themselves.

After meeting with the various groups I have mentioned, here are some of the things we have undertaken in Atlanta. We have called upon private industries and businesses to form Public/Private Partnerships. The primary focus of the Partnership Campaign was to develop local resources to eventually become less dependent upon federal subsidy.

Our tenants have telephones and are loyal users of Bell System services. In view of that the BellSouth's commitment to community service, the Authority entered into a partnership that led to the weatherization of more than 12,000 units of public housing, summer employment for public housing youth and job preparedness counseling for youth. The Authority's summer weatherization program has been funded by BellSouth, over a four-year period, at a cost of $107,335. Even more importantly, we have improved tenant relations by providing job training and employment.

Similarly, realizing that they too have a commitment to their clients, the Authority approached Georgia Power Company with a partnership proposal. That partnership has provided more than $100,000, in labor to weatherize our apartments.

The summer weatherization program trained youth from our property sites to do jobs like weatherstripping of doors and windows, caulking, installation of showerheads and other energy conservation measures.

A positive result of these programs has been permanent employment for some of our young residents; while others gained valuable experience of working on jobs, being responsible for reporting to work and developing work habits.

Another program that has worked well for the Atlanta Housing Authority is our Adult Services Program. Many of our elderly receive medical service from doctors' and nurses' groups. Each year the elderly have taken extensive trips throughout the country and abroad at a minimum cost. A group just returned from London and Paris for four days and three nights which I am told was most enjoyable.

The Adult Services Program has formed partnerships with Special Audiences, Inc. which commissioned artist Charlotte Riley Whitt to produce three paintings for elderly highrise buildings. An ongoing partnership with Special Audiences allows seniors to attend various cultural functions. Partnerships with several health care organizations has enabled the Authority to provide medical services to tenants. Some of these partnerships include the Morehouse College School of Medicine, Metro Home Health, Atlanta Eye Consultants and Grady Memorial Hospital.

Another area of working with our tenants is to create vacancy preparation teams with tenants by providing paint, brushes and rollers, and cleaning equipment, training them on preparing vacant units where only minimum preparation is needed before re-occupancy can take place. It increases the income of those tenants as well as provides training for them and helps the Housing Authority to reduce vacancies at a reasonable cost.

Other ways of reducing expenses have been to review our telephone system. A Housing Authority of our size has a very elaborate telephone system. After reviewing a number of newly developed telephone systems, as well as Southern Bell and AT&T, we were able to re-write our contract and provide the same level of service thereby saving the Authority a considerable amount of money.

We have reviewed our legal services contract. Because of the growing demand for legal services and legal advice due to increased amount of suits being levied against the Housing Authority and contracts needing scrutiny, we went to an in-house staff Counsellor, which was another means of reducing costs.

A Scholarship Program is being developed. Private industry and businesses are asked to contribute to the fund to provide scholarships for youth living in the projects who excel in academics and meet the criteria for the scholarship eligibility.

Some of our staff have organized Track Teams that work with the Atlanta Track Club. Out of that Club have come state winners; hopefully, we will produce Olympic stars in years to come.

Our city passed an ordinance that all dwelling units in Atlanta must have smoke detectors. After meeting with City Officials and our Public Safety Commissioner and discussing the limited funds the Housing Authority had to operate on, smoke detectors were donated by the City and another organizations for all housing units operated by the Atlanta Housing Authority.

We are developing a Speaker's Bureau and schedule for the Executive Director and the Commissioners to meet and address schools and other organizations to support their Housing Authority.

Carver High School Principal Norris Hogans and the Atlanta Housing Authority have formed a partnership in identifying at least fifteen young girls who have various backgrounds and experiences and have decided to turn stumbling blocks into stepping stones and excel in their scholastic achievement, remain in school and not get pregnant.

These young ladies from a group called "The Cotillions". The Housing Authority uses them for ushers in various activities in and around the Authority. We will assist them in attending social functions in and around Atlanta to give them as much exposure in our society as possible, and to continue to motivate these young poeple to climb the ladder of success. It is our goal that they serve as role models who moved from the public housing life style to becoming self-supporting members of our society.

Running the Housing Authority is the responsibility of all citizens of a City and Town. We provide shelter for those who can least afford to buy a home of their own. Our projects are old and need major renovation, gas lines, and new heating systems. Without federal dollars these improvements seem to be impossible. With the cooperation of our citizens, Housing Authorities can take their share of budget cuts and still run a well-managed Authority that will provide decent, safe and sanitary living.

A POETIC TRIBUTE TO THE "CHALLENGER" ASTRONAUTS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the tragic loss of the Challenger crew will never fade from our memory. Their ill-fated mission will be remembered by every American who watched their story unfold under the glare of television cameras.

Recently a fellow Nebraskan shared with me a poem that she wrote in memory of the astronauts. In brief, but heartfelt words, she captures the feeling many of us share.

I request permission to have Mrs. Donna Crebbin's poem printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that my colleagues can experience the vision she captures in poetry.

7 IN HEAVEN

Beyond—is space—a mystery!
Seven brave people are now history!
Undaunted, courageous, so full of life!
Probably good moments, but also strife
Gone! Where? To see God's face?
And embrace them He did!
He loves every race!
Their images may soon fleetingly pass
But never their bravery, how can one surpass?
It's fleeting! It's final! when the curtain comes down,
And not one of us gets a chance to go back around.
How many can say at the end of their flight,
"I accomplished my mission—I fought a good fight!"
God bless these astronauts—at peace now in space!
Let's remember their courage and try to keep pace!

TRIBUTE TO MAYOR SILVIO BANAL

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mayor Silvio Banal who has recently retired from 22 years of public service as mayor of Dillonvale.

Mayor Banal, admirably referred to as "Curly" by his friends, retired on March 15. He had been actively involved in village government and the Democratic Party for nearly three decades. He was elected to the Village Council in 1957, and served as council president pro tem before becoming mayor in 1964.

Since 1964, Banal has served Dillonvale as a dedicated mayor. During his term as mayor, he was instrumental in the organization of the Dillonvale Emergency Medical Service Squad, the construction of two banks, a playground, a senior citizen's center, the completion of two municipal annexations, and numerous street improvements and bridge repairs.

Banal has also been actively involved in the village and surrounding area as a member of St. Adalbert's Catholic Church, the Knights of Columbus, the Eastern Ohio Mayors' Association and the Democratic Party executive, and central committees.

Banal retired from the Consolidated Coal Co.'s Piney Fork highwall mine as superintendent in 1973, having advanced in the industry after beginning as a coal driller at the Dun Glen mine in 1936. While employed by Consolidated Coal Co., as a mine foreman, he contributed to the openings of the Franklin, Friendship, Georgetown No. 11, and Rose Valley No. 6 mines.

A testimonial dinner is being held on Mayor Banal's behalf on May 2 to honor his many successful years as mayor of Dillonvale in keeping with the highest traditions of community service.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I pay tribute to a man who is not only a friend, but an inspiration to the people and the community he has served for many years with such distinction. To mark Silvio Banal's departure from office, I ask that my colleagues join me in wishing him the best of luck in all of his future endeavors.

A LETTER FROM CHILE

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, the news from Chile has not been good lately, but it has a hard time finding its way into the papers when put up against the daily headlines from Nicaragua and Libya. Therefore, I have made an attempt to keep my colleagues aware of what happens in Chile by inserting articles of note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Today, however, I would like to share with my colleagues not just another analysis, but rather the words and thoughts of a Chilean college student. I think this young man conveys, more poignantly than any news story ever could, the frustration and anger felt in Chile, particularly by the generation of Chileans who have known nothing but the repression of General Pinochet. These young people have not had the opportunity to experience Chile's long and proud tradition of democratic rule, they have never seen the doors of the National Congress open, and they have never had the opportunity to cast their vote in favor of or against the government that rules them.

I hope that my colleagues will hear the message that this young Chilean is sending us—they need the active and sustained support of the United States to bring about a democratic transition in Chile. Without pressure from the United States, General Pinochet will extend his 13-year reign as Chile's dictator to the end of this century.

Following are excerpts of the letter and the text of a UPI wire story from Santiago, dated April 18, 1 week after the letter was written.

APRIL 11, 1986.

As far as politics go, I am completely confused and very frustrated. I have begun to get involved with the Centro de Alumnos (student council), and have had some contact with the student movement. I really don't know what to make of it all.

The national and international situation is also completely baffling. Here's how I see it. For some reason, Reagan begins to talk about coming down on Pinochet. From that, we get State Department and Shultz statements. Then the government panics, frets for a while—with the usual diplomatic comments—and waits to see what will happen. From the United States—nothing, so they begin to relax. They realize it is all rubbish. I don't believe the U.S. will do anything.

Last week things seemed shaky and rumors came and went. Then, toward the end of the week, the government began to move again. First a statement by the Minister of Education to close all campus branches that weren't completely filled, mostly in the provinces. The reason that spots weren't filled was because the inscription went up from 6,000 to 25,000 pesos, and most people couldn't afford it. So the students went crazy and got ready for a fight. Throughout the year, the mobilization has been Mondays and Wednesdays for students, and Fridays for the women. This past Monday, about a thousand students arrived from the provinces where the campus branches had been closed. They slept Monday night at San Joaquin and were scheduled to march to the Ministry of Education on Wednesday. Tuesday night there were riots in a few of the shantytowns and a carabinero (policeman) was killed. There was a big deal on television. Wednesday the student march was severely repressed. Forty students, among them three student council leaders, were jailed. The council went crazy and called for a sit-in at the main campus building. Things looked bad. Wednesday night they released some students, but also announced that another carabinero had been killed, and another had been kidnapped. A five thousand man search began.

On the news, nothing was said about the jailed students, and more incredibly, the Interior Minister was hinting that the increasing violence might make it necessary to impose a state of siege. They are getting ready for some serious repression, but they wouldn't do it if there was the slightest possibility of U.S. action.

I hate to be cynical, but there seems to be just talk and no action from the United States and I don't see why that should change. Isn't it absurd, here we are again looking to the United States for salvation. This country is messed up, we really have no future.

I can't believe the excuse about the successor problem. It is more than obvious that any compromise to replace the military will have to be done with the right. There are plenty of people who could do it. A nationalist like Jarpa, or if they want the Christian Democrats, there is Valdez or even Zaldivar. If they want neutrals, they can always choose someone like Retamal. That's not the problem. The only reason for Reagan to want to change things here is for some propaganda reason or maybe as a bargaining chip for Nicaragua. But all that is really much more complicated than I can deal with, he may just get into Nicaragua without having to bother about Chile—especially if Ortega keeps it up. I would like to know what you think. I am very confused, and quite angry.

SANTIAGO, CHILE (UPI).—Soldiers in combat gear surrounded three university campuses Thursday, and riot police arrested hundreds of demonstrators during a third day of student unrest across Chile.

Police said 471 demonstrators were arrested, raising the number of students arrested to 632 since the protests began Tuesday.

Heavily armed police stormed the University of Chile's economics school and dislodged student occupiers at gunpoint, forcing them to walk out with their hands on their heads.

Earlier, troops with blackened faces carrying automatic weapons surrounded the Metropolitan University and the arts school of the University of Chile as police rounded up students and drove them away in buses.

"The military action against the universities is absolutely out of all proportion," said the president of the University of Chile student union, Humberto Burotto, who was arrested in the third raid.

The protest, which halted classes at most of the country's 27 universities, was called by student organizations seeking the restoration of university autonomy and an end to intervention in the schools by the military government of President Augusto Pinochet.

The students are demanding an end to the direct appointment of top university officials by the military government and a return to the internal election of school authorities.

Burotto denied government accusations that arms had been found by police on one of the campuses.

University authorities suspended classes at the schools after the demonstrations, which began Tuesday, erupted into in violent clashes with police.

FORMER MEMBERS GUIDE

HON. LINDY (MRS. HALE) BOGGS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a resolution to authorize the printing of a research guide to assist scholars, archivists, and historians to locate the historical papers, memoirs, diaries, and other memorabilia of former Members of the House of Representatives. This publication, the "Guide to Research Collections of Former Members of the U.S. House of Representatives, 1789–1987," is a project of the Office of the Bicentennial and was prepared under the supervision of the historian of the House, Dr. Raymond Smock.

This project has been endorsed by the Commission on the U.S. House of Representatives Bicentenary as an important element in our preparations for the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution in 1987 and the bicentennial of the legislative branch of our Government in 1989.

I am joined in sponsoring this resolution by several of my colleagues on the Commission, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. HENRY, and Mr. SHARP. I would like to insert a more complete explanation of the purpose of our legislation immediately following my remarks, along with the text of the resolution.

H. RES. 434

Resolution authorizing printing of the compilation of materials entitled Guide to Research Collections of Former Members of the United States House of Representatives, 1789-1987"

Resolved, That the compilation of materials entitled "Guide to Research Collections of Former Members of the United States House of Representatives, 1789-1987" (prepared by the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives) shall be printed as a House document, with illustrations and suitable binding. In addition to the usual number, 5,000 copies of such document shall be printed for the use of the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives.

GUIDE TO RESEARCH COLLECTIONS OF FORMER MEMBERS OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—1789–1987

This publication will provide a vital resource for all researchers interested in the history of the Congress. A nationwide survey, launched by the Office for the Bicentennial in April 1985 is locating the manuscript collections and other historical materials of the approximately 10,000 former Members of the House of Representatives. The Guide will present the results of this survey along with descriptions of the manuscripts, diaries, oral histories, photographs and memorabilia of former Representatives.

The national survey relies on enthusiastic state coordinators and other volunteers in all fifty states. The coordinators, who generously have agreed to assist in this national bicentennial effort, are persons who are familiar with the local repositories likely to contain papers of former Members. The volunteers also provide a means of communication between libraries and archives within their respective states and between the states and the Office for the Bicentennial. Already the survey is complete in seventeen states and material from others arrives daily.

Meanwhile, the staff of the Office for the Bicentennial is searching archival resources in Washington and examining collection guides published by major repositories. They have found, for example, about five hundred former Members of Congress represented in the collections of the Boston Public Library. The Office for the Bicentennial searched the 720 card catalog drawers of the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections at the Library of Congress. Information from all these sources is compiled, edited, and entered into a specially-designed computer program, thereby creating a data base and a publication file simultaneously.

The number of individuals serving in the House, particularly in the nineteenth century when most Members remained for only a term or two, and the often random dispersal of personal papers have prevented scholars from recreating a comprehensive account of many aspects of the history of the House of Representatives. By establishing a central file for information on the location of surviving manuscripts, the survey and guide will open a new range of opportunities for research. Historians will have access to the collections of powerful Speakers and the papers of little known Members who served only a short time. The range and diversity of sources included in the guide undoubtedly will contribute to a richer, more balanced view of earlier Congresses.

The initial returns from the survey demonstrate the difficulties historians have faced without a central guide to the records of former Members. Many of the collections are scattered far from the home state of an individual Member. Papers of Maine Congressman Elisha Hunt Allen are in the Hawaii Public Archives. A letter book kept during the Revolutionary War by Elias Boudinot, later a Congressman from New Jersey, is in the State Historical Society of Wisconsin. While some collections are completely housed in a single repository, many are divided among several libraries and archives. The papers of Henry Clay are located in at least eighteen repositories from Massachusetts to California.

Although research on the House of Representatives will continue to require visits to numerous archives, the survey reports convincingly establish the value of searching out the varied papers of former Members. The many diaries and private letters in these collections contain the most descriptive and personal accounts of congressional business. A memoir of William Armistead Burwell of Virginia describes his service as President Jefferson's secretary and his early years in Congress. Abijah Bigelow's letters to his wife in Massachusetts, written between 1810 and 1815, describe congressional debates, reaction to the War of 1812, and daily life in Washington. The correspondence of James Hepburn Campbell of Pennsylvania chronicles the events in Washington during the early months of the Civil War.

By drawing on the materials catalogued in the Guide and the new entries in the Bicentennial edition of the Biographical Directory of the United States Congress, researchers will be able to tap the whole spectrum of sources available for individual Members. The ability to locate the extant sources on any number of Representatives from former Congresses will encourage historians to draw a more comprehensive picture of the distinct role of the House of Representatives. The publication of this Guide will make an important contribution to the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives and it will be of lasting value long after the Bicentennial is over.

AFGHANISTAN: THE CRIMES CONTINUE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, sometimes we seem to have fallen silent on the struggle in Afghanistan. But the war in that country involves nothing less than the extermination of whole portions of the population, and such crimes deserve something well beyond silence.

One of the leaders on this issue has been the Honorable GORDON HUMPHREY of New Hampshire, and the April edition of American Legion magazine carries another of his essays on the continuing tragedy. I want to recommend it to my colleagues in the House, and so I ask that it be placed in the RECORD of today.

[From American Legion Magazine, April 1986]

AFGHANISTAN: CRIES IN THE WILDERNESS

(By Senator Gordon J. Humphrey)

Six years ago, Soviet tanks rolled into Afghanistan and began a campaign of genocide that has killed some one million Afghan men, women and children. Approximately four million have fled from their country, mainly to Pakistan. Millions more have been driven from their homes, forced into internal exile, leaving one third of the original population of 15 million.

The numbers are staggering to comprehend, but the war still goes largely unnoticed by the rest of the world. It is a closed and silent war—the Kremlin has succeeded in hiding it from civilized people everywhere.

Moscow has a long-range view of the war—to outlast the freedom fighters. The Kremlin has referred to its colonization campaigns of the 1920s and 30s in what is now Soviet Central Asia as a model for the current strategy in Afghanistan. This is the calculating, steamrolling nature of the communist machine. It's hard for Americans to understand that kind of strategy. Because we misunderstand the nature of the war, and because the facts are not out in plain view, we fall prey to characterizations of the war as a "stalemate" where not much is happening. We are led to believe that the Soviets are losing their resolve and that the freedom fighters don't need our help. Gorbachev leads us, like the Pied Piper, with his pretty songs of "peace offensive" and "troop withdrawal."

What was once a pastoral nation of proud farmers and villagers has been transformed into a bloody battlefield where some 118,000 Soviet troops commit unspeakable torture and murder.

"A whole nation is dying," said Mohammed Eshaq, a resistance leader from Afghanistan's Panjsher Valley. He and scores of other refugees, resistance fighters and victims were interviewed extensively and quoted in two human rights reports by Helsinki Watch and Asia Watch: "Tears, Blood, and Cries" and "To Die in Afghanistan." Eshaq described in one report the fate of two elderly brothers in his village during a communist incursion: "The Russians came, tied dynamite to their backs and blew them up." The Soviets tie up men, women and children, pour gasoline on them and burn them alive. Refugees have testified that the communist soldiers systematically enter households and execute all the inhabitants, including women and children. Pregnant women are disemboweled with bayonets. Entire families and villages are herded into their homes, which are then blown up and burned. Parents are executed before their children's eyes.

Thousands of Afghan children are separated from their families by deceit or force, then shipped to Russia for Marxist indoctrination and training. They learn to fight and to spy for the Soviets. Many of the children who are not plucked from their war-torn homeland are killed and maimed by bombs, disguised to look like toys, which explode when curious children pick them up. The Soviets have destroyed food supplies and irrigation canals, burned orchards and wheat fields, and massacred livestock. They have bombed hospitals and executed or imprisoned the doctors.

The United States has dragged its feet on providing aid to the Afghans. Congress has secured some U.S. support for the freedom fighters, but the State Department has thwarted increases in aid. When aid was finally authorized for 1985, the State Department took seven months to allocate a paltry $6 million to relief agencies. Congress recently appropriated an additional $15 million for humanitarian aid despite more reluctance from the State Department. Without the congressional initiative, there would have been no new money at all.

Many of the volunteer medical and charitable organizations aiding wounded Afghan freedom fighters and refugees say the funds promised by State Department officials are not arriving on a timely basis.

The Afghan freedom fighters need military and humanitarian aid more desperately than ever, but Congress cannot provide that assistance by itself. The administration must live up to its rhetoric and its promises.

The current administration has said that free people have a moral obligation to support those willing to fight for their liberty. The brave freedom fighters of Afghanistan have been fighting—and dying—for six years. It is hard to imagine a more compelling cause for our support.

BEARING THE BURDEN

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the American bombing raid on Libya has been the focus of enormous public attention in the United States. But in contrast to many other major foreign policy issues of the day, it has not been controversial. There are those, to be sure, who opposed the raid on various grounds, but a substantial majority of Americans feel that President Reagan had no choice but to respond as he did. A recent editorial in the Norfolk Daily News makes the point that we dealt with Qadhafi "in the only way possible." I commend the editorial to my colleagues.

[From the Norfolk Daily News, Apr. 16, 1986]

BEARING THE BURDEN

It would be preferable for the American government to combat terrorists covertly, James Bond style. Obtaining specific information about who they are, where they are and then having clandestine agents on the scene to rout them out would be the ideal way to handle Moammar Khadafy's terrorists, or any others.

That happens only in the movies. In the real world today there are no activities of the Central Intelligence Agency which do not risk disclosure. A department of dirty tricks which might once have been engaged to deal with a Khadafy more on his own terms has been disbanded. Information sharing with committees of Congress which are held to have special interests in the plans and performance of intelligence agencies proves a special risk. Confidentiality is difficult to maintain. Policy critics seem quick to reveal more than they should, in the interests of another worthy objective, which is openness in the conduct of all the nation's affairs.

When it comes to terrorism of the sort sponsored by Col. Moammar Khadafy's government in Libya, that leaves no other recourse than a military strike.

President Reagan has used American force wisely, in a timely way, with more than sufficient warning to Col. Khadafy and with adequate consultation with members of Congress as well.

In this positive action taken Monday we are reminded of the words uttered long ago, by President Kennedy in his 1961 inaugural:

"Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans—born in this country, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage—and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed, and to which we are committed today at home and around the world."

It had become clear in the subsequent two decades that there was much hesitancy, despite extreme provocation, to resort to force or even to recognize terrorism's undoing of human rights. Global involvement has been regarded as much too costly.

The additional thoughts, so well put by the young president, had almost been mocked: "Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty."

Perhaps surprisingly, there is in the person of Ronald Reagan a member of an old generation willing, as more timid and hopeful souls are not, to recognize that the survival and success of liberty are not without risk and sacrifice.

The nation has acted to deal with Col. Khadafy in the only way possible. Until he changes or is replaced by those who reject the philosophy of pursuing their objectives through terrorism, more such actions will be required.

OPENING FOREIGN MARKETS BY UNDERSTANDING THEM

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. trade deficit is the subject of growing concern in Congress and the Nation. As concern grows, it is important that solutions be found that are within the parameters of the free trade environment.

Experiments in protectionism have proven costly and ineffective over the years. Protectionism invites retaliation by our trading partners and risks economic disaster. We cannot afford to forget the lessons taught by the disastrous Smoot-Hawley Act which led to the Great Depression.

The only things industries are protected from by protectionist measures are the realities of the marketplace. This encourages companies to put off needed modernizations and product improvements, further delaying the day when American products will compete more favorably in world markets once again.

Perhaps part of the trade imbalance problem is, as Tom Peters recently wrote in U.S. News & World Report, that American industry does not always succeed in adjusting to the needs of foreign markets. Protectionist measures would misdirect the energy of both American industry and the Congress. Let us instead direct our energy to solving the fundamental problems of our trade imbalance. In Congress, this means developing sound fiscal policies to reduce the budget deficit. In industry, it means, in part, tailoring American productions more closely to the needs of foreign markets.

As consumers, Americans expect other countries to tailor their goods and services to suit the American market. Foreign markets have the right to expect no less from us. Indeed, we cannot reasonably expect foreign consumers to buy our products if they do not meet their needs. To be competitive abroad, we need to apply the same standard of market sensitivity to ourselves that we demand of our foreign suppliers here.

I have included the article by Mr. Peters that appeared in the March 3, 1986, issue of U.S. News & World Report. I would urge my colleagues and many sectors of American industry to give it serious thought:

CLOSED MINDS CAN'T OPEN MARKETS

The U.S. achieved its export dominance in the aftermath of World War II, when no competition from abroad existed. For two decades after the war, our strategy was to peddle products past their prime overseas, with little attempt to tailor these goods to foreign tastes.

Things have changed. Not only have foreign economies rebounded, but they have become stiff competitors overseas as well as in the U.S. It is increasingly difficult for us to gain access to new markets or even to hold our own in old ones. The truth is, our previous successes abroad were won because there were no alternatives, not because we had honed our international management skills.

For instance, Detroit managed to sell only 1,300 cars to Japan last year. But BMW, the favorite car of Japan's "yuppies," sold 6,000 autos, an increase of 50 percent from the year before. How does BMW succeed where we fail? The reason is that we refuse to adjust to the Japanese convention of putting steering wheels on the right. By not doing so, we're caught in a vicious circle. We assume the Japanese don't cotton to American cars, so we don't extend ourselves to meet their needs. It is tempting to blame our difficulties on unfair subsidies by foreign governments to their domestic industries. But the truth is we are shooting ourselves in the foot.

A recent UNESCO study ranks American people next to last on sensitivity to other cultures. Sixty-one percent of our business schools do not offer any international courses. The number of students who studied Japanese only grew from 9,500 to 11,500 during the decade from 1973 to 1983 when the Japanese challenge mushroomed. Just one of the 415 board members from the top 25 U.S. export companies is Japanese—at Hewlett-Packard.

If you still wonder why we are at such a disadvantage, consider that fewer than one third of Fortune 500 chief executives had any foreign tour of duty during their careers. Yet Sony Chairman Akio Morita lived in New York for two years before his company launched its products here, sniffing out the market. Today, five of his children are working in Sony operations in the United States. Mitsubishi has 700 people in New York devoted solely to studying U.S. markets. Thirty thousand Japanese nationals are on the payrolls of Japanese companies in the United States. Japanese citizens in Manhattan alone number 96,000. By contrast, a paltry 800 American citizens work in all of Japan.

Will a surcharge on Japanese goods overcome this barrier? No, only one thing will: Listening. Just look at some savvy U.S. companies that have benefited by tuning in instinctively.

Coca-Cola spent a dozen unprofitable years before it gained a foothold in Japan. All its products but Coca-Cola were changed to accommodate a Japanese preference for a sweeter taste. It now has captured 60 percent of the soft-drink market. Schick commands a 70 percent share of the Japanese disposal-razor market. It beat Gillette because it mastered the ins and outs of Japan's wholly different distribution system, and patiently built relationships with Japanese distributors, while Gillette was insensitive to this problem.

In the early '80s, it took telecommunication-equipment manufacturer Rolm 20 visits to gain the company's first small order from the Japanese, but Rolm stuck with it. An even better example is IBM, which recently purchased Rolm. Big Blue's computers are fine enough, as always, but Japanese industry experts attribute IBM's $3.1 billion in sales to Japan last year to its longtime devotion to offshore product development. IBM simply is willing to listen to the customers and adapt products to their needs. The firm never quits pressing. Last year it moved its entire Pacific region headquarters from Armonk, N.Y., to Tokyo.

Borg-Warner is delighted to provide transmissions for Nissan's 280Z and 300ZX. Nissan insists that every part be polished to a high finish, even parts completely hidden from the customers' view. Borg-Warner did it and got the business.

There is no other magic. Executives who are successful in Japan report the same set of factors for their success time after time. "Form is as important as substance." "Relationships are key." "Extended contact." "Patience." "Sell yourself before you sell the product." "Americans fail to focus on the intangibles." "Continuity of management." "Delicate and continuous stroking." "No hit and run." "Direct and regular senior-person contact." "Contact at multiple levels."

A senior marketing executive at Seattle-based John Fluke Manufacturing Company says that its success turned on providing "all the features the Japanese want, and sales persons fluent in the Japanese language and trained in the benefits of the product." He adds: "These sound like simple things. But you'd be surprised how infrequently American companies pay attention to those things in foreign markets."

Our closed minds and centuries-old isolationist bent, not the policies of host-country governments, lead to most of our failures abroad. And not just in Japan.

Pizza Hut has learned exactly what customers want overseas. Mexicans demand jalapeño toppings; Canadians prefer bacon; and Koreans insist on low salt. Japan? Pizza Hut sells millions of pizzas there—mostly with generous portions of squid.

HOUSE PASSAGE OF H.R. 44, ELECTRIC CONSUMERS PROTECTION ACT

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 44, the Electric Consumers Protection Act, as amended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce on which I serve, and passed by the House on Monday of this week, April 21.

The standards and procedures which apply to the relicensing of non-Federal hydroelectric projects are of considerable importance to the State of California in general and to the district I represent in particular. California has abundant hydropower resources which provide consumers with a low-cost source of electricity. All utilities in the State, publicly and privately owned alike, understandably seek to obtain the benefits of this resource for their respective consumers. This is particularly true in my district, which is served in part by an investor-owned utility and in part by a municipal utility. The municipal utility is in the city of Anaheim, the largest city in my district, and serves 93,000 ratepayers, most of whom are my constituents. By the same token, the rest of the district receives power from the private utility. I have sought to do my best to help come up with a balanced proposal that lets all utilities compete on fair terms for this resource. H.R. 44 as amended by the committee and passed by the House represents such an approach.

The particular issue which prompted congressional legislation in the first place is whether or not a preference for a municipal utility applies to the relicensing of hydro projects just as it does when an original license is issued. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission confirmed in 1980 that such a municipal preference does apply to relicensing. The 11th U.S. Court of Appeals upheld this result and the U.S. Supreme Court denied certiorari. A panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit reached the same conclusion late last year. The latter case is being heard on appeal by the entire D.C. circuit court at the present time.

Current law, then, as interpreted by the courts to date, is that a municipal preference applies to relicensing under the Federal Power Act. I have long believed that this question is best answered by Congress. The issue, therefore, is no longer whether the preference will be changed. The real question now is whether it will be changed in such a way as to preserve effective competition or not. The importance of H.R. 44 is that while it eliminates the municipal preference, it does not go beyond that and swing the pendulum to the side of giving a preference to the existing licensee, whether public or private. Rather, there is no statutory preference for any party under this legislation. The existing licensee already has the benefit of operational knowledge from running the facility and the challenging applicant can seek to win the license by coming up with a better plan. In short, with the mask of preference for any applicant removed, all of them may compete on a stand-up basis to convince FERC that their application is the best adapted to the public interest.

While the law should be changed, fairness and equity demand that we not make changes in the law retroactively apply to cases pending at FERC which were commenced under existing law and held up at FERC while the debate over municipal preference has taken place. Most of the 10 affected projects are in my State of California. In two of the projects, the municipal utility in my district joined with others in California to form a consortium to compete for projects now operated by the private utility that serves the northern part of our State. This consortium has spent at least $3.5 million in legal fees, engineering analyses, and environmental reports to pursue the applications. However, the change in the law contained in H.R. 44 does much more than affect these costs for it also takes away from them the opportunity to obtain power under the terms of existing law.

Given the importance of this issue to my district, I was pleased to be able to have worked with my colleagues in the delegation who are similarly situated, led by the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI]. Together with our colleagues on the committee, and others from our delegation, we came up with section 10 in H.R. 44. This provision will force the competing parties to negotiate a settlement, or FERC will impose one, if the new law is to apply to these projects. The compensation must include both the reasonable costs incurred by the competing applicant and a reasonable percentage of the net investment value of the project in question. The bill contains factors that FERC shall take into consideration in determining the appropriate compensation and may award such amount that it finds to be reasonable based upon how the factors relate to any given project. It is imperative that any bill which comes out of conference contains satisfactory compensation for these projects, as the House bill provides.

In addition to the above, the legislation also provides more flexibility for FERC to award adequate compensation when a project does change hands, strengthens the environmental criteria with particular emphasis on the impact of hydro projects on fish and wildlife, and makes certain that if a project is transferreed the transferee can obtain access, on reasonable terms, to needed transmission facilities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while this legislation resolves the questions about municipal preference, there are other items on the agenda of electric issues that merit our further consideration. We have witnessed the consumer benefits, in the form of lower rates, which flow to ratepayers of natural gas utilities by virtue of more access to natural gas pipeline transmission facilities. This is a lesson we should keep in mind for regulating the transmission of electricity as well.

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, April 23, 1986, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is the federal agency everyone loves to hate. Every member of Congress hears a litany of complaints about the IRS—especially at this time of year. Taxpayers have trouble getting tax advice from the IRS, and many feel harassed by it. They complain they are treated as if they are guilty until they prove their innocence. Tax counselors complain that the IRS is far behind in writing regulations to clarify the law. Errors plague the system, and phone calls and letters to the IRS go unanswered.

Once regarded as a paragon of efficiency among federal agenices, the IRS is quickly losing the respect that has kept taxpayers in line. A shortage of funds, manpower, and political support has taken its toll at the agency, and increasing numbers of Americans believe that they risk little by cheating on their taxes. All of us have an interest in an IRS able to administer effectively the nation's tax laws and to collect its revenues. When one American cheats on his taxes, the rest of us have to pay more.

The most immediate concern facing the IRS is avoiding a repeat of the 1985 debacle when, at the height of tax season, its new computer system broke down. Thousands of taxpayers were dunned for taxes they did not owe, millions of refunds were delayed for months, and understaffed IRS telephone lines went unanswered while inquirers fumed. But the mishap cost the IRS more than frazzled nerves. Ultimately, an additional $69 million was spent by the agency to cover interest on delayed returns, employee overtime pay, and productivity losses.

The most costly result has been the damage done to IRS credibility. Traditionally, the agency has relied largely on voluntary compliance in revenue gathering, but cheating is now on the rise as growing numbers of taxpayers are tempted to test the IRS's scrutiny. Contrary to popular belief, illegal activities and large corporations account for only a small portion of tax cheating, just 10% and 7% respectively. Ordinary citizens are responsible for the vast majority—over 80%—of the tax cheating that goes on in the U.S.

The rapid decline in tax compliance is particularly alarming in light of the federal budget deficit crisis. Compared to a deficit of $180 billion this year, tax cheating cost the Treasury an estimated $107 billion in 1985, up from $23 billion in 1973. By 1990, it could reach $160 billion. In the frantic attempt to reduce the deficit without raising new taxes, many members of Congress are realizing that improved tax compliance could bring large sums into federal coffers with no pain to the honest taxpayer.

Reducing the "tax gap" will not be easy, as the agency has suffered years of neglect. In the early 1970s, after the IRS was used to harass political enemies of the administration, its funding was curbed. The request for the new IRS computer system originated in 1970, but funding was delayed until 1982, and the new system came on line only last year. Chronic funding shortages have also made it difficult to hire and retain qualified personnel. In any given tax season, only 40% of the seasonal employees—those primarily handling returns—have had previous experience at IRS. Audit staff has dwindled, and the proportion of returns audited has fallen steadily, from 5% in the 1960s, to 1.2% last year.

If tax compliance is to improve, the IRS must reestablish its reputation as an efficient and credible federal agency. Toward this end, the agency has taken steps to prevent a repeat of last year's confusion. Software bugs have been removed, enabling IRS computers to work 68% faster than last year, and overall computer capacity has been increased by 40% over 1985. The President has proposed adding 7500 auditors by 1988, which could have a large payoff in revenues. A Congressional Budget Office study concluded that every additional $1 spent on compliance enforcement could generate as much as $16 in unpaid revenues. In addition, the House-passed tax reform bill, now pending in the Senate, includes measures to boost penalties for tax evasion. That could generate an additional $8.3 billion by 1991, and, like expanded audit coverage, creates added incentives for compliance by taxpayers.

Far more will have to be done, however, to assure the smooth operation of the IRS on into the next century. It has been understaffed, underfunded, undertrained, and underequipped. The IRS is planning to expand its conputerized auditing systems, which nabbed 6 million faulty returns last year. It is also experimenting with computerized tax filing services, which, for a small fee, will feed tax returns directly into IRS computers, eliminating the need for cumbersome paper returns. But such modernization programs will go nowhere without adequate political and fiscal support. The Administration, realizing that previous attempts to limit funds for the IRS have cost the government billions in lost revenue, requested $340 million in additional funding for the agency for 1986. In my view, adequate funding for the IRS must continue despite current attempts to reduce federal spending and the deficit. Members of Congress must remember that the IRS can increase revenues just by being able to enforce the law.

On a more fundamental level, the problem of tax evasion lies less with the IRS than with the tax code itself. As long as the tax code is so complex that even two IRS tax counselors can interpret it differently, as long as taxpayers with the same income pay widely different taxes, as long as wealthy individuals and successful corporations can avoid taxes altogether, and as long as special interests appear to receive tax breaks at the expense of all others, compliance with the tax code will continue to decline. Overhauling the IRS will not solve the problem if most taxpayers believe the tax code is fundamentally unfair. That is why the thrust of tax reform—to reduce tax rates, plug tax loopholes, and ensure that all taxpayers are paying their fair share of taxes—is so important. Reforming the IRS is necessary for improving taxpayer compliance, but so is reforming the tax code.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleagues for reserving this time to enable us to participate in this special order commemorating the 71st anniversary of the beginning of the genocide of the Armenian people.

The Armenian genocide began with the roundup by the Ottoman Turkish Government of Armenian community intellectuals in Istanbul, who were then executed in cold blood. Before it was over, 1½ million Armenians were brutally slaughtered in a rampage that lasted for 2 years.

Although this slaughter was unprecedented in modern times, it went largely ignored by the world. Yes, there were reports of the heinous deeds being committed, but, as it seems with other systematic, mass murders, little if anything was done to stop it from happening. But it did happen, and we must not forget that it did.

The survivors of the Armenian genocide to this day suffer not only the traumatic scars of seeing their families and loved ones cruelly tortured and murdered, but they and their children suffer the indignity of having every Turkish Government deny the atrocities committed in 1915.

We have heard the word genocide spoken often in this Chamber, and its meaning never ceases to conjur up visions of heinous and horrific deeds. The memory of the Armenian genocide and its historical importance must be kept alive, and we must reject any attempts to bury it in the sands of history. As with all genocides, we must remember that they happened so that they will not happen again.

COMMEMORATIVE LEGISLATION

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, in the past week, my staff has spent several hours organizing, answering, and generally handling more than a dozen "dear colleagues" concerning commemorative legislation. These requests for cosponsorship pour into my office each morning, calling for me to add my name to everything from "National Food Bank Week" to "National Digestive Disease Awareness Week." Now, while I understand the role that this type of legislation can play in alerting our citizens to important events and problems in our society, I feel that Congress is not the best institution to handle the situation. Therefore, I would like to express my support for H.R. 479. This bill, introduced by my colleague, WILLIAM WHITEHURST, would turn this responsibility over to a commission that would inexpensively make recommendations to the President who would make the final decisions on these matters; taking this expensive practice out of the hands of already overworked congressional staffs. You hear a lot of talk these days about cutting the budget and restricting spending. I feel that this type of pork-barrel legislation should have been the first to be cut. Mr. WHITEHURST has repeatedly stressed that passing this legislation would save in the area of $1 million per year. Although passing this legislation will not solve our financial problems, it will be a good start and will send a message to those we represent that we can recognize frivolous and wasteful spending and do something about it.

WEST PARK TERRACE: RETIREMENT AS IT SHOULD BE

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, on May 4, West Park Community, a retirement community in Cincinnati, will open an apartment complex that is so innovative and exciting, I would like to share with my colleagues this new concept of retirement living.

Called West Park Terrace, these apartments are really a carefully planned village that provide every need and recreation for the senior citizen who can live independently. West Park Terrace will offer a full service bank, a dining room with a chef, a general store, a cocktail lounge, a health spa, a beauty shop, and an arts and crafts center. In addition, residents have access to a health clinic, with doctors who do make house calls. West Park also built special apartments in West Park Terrace that are specially accessible for handicapped seniors.

West Park does not just provide retirees with a place to live, it provides them a way of life that is active and enjoyable. Too often, Mr. Speaker, our society takes for granted our elder Americans, who deserve a pleasant and diginified retirement. The concept behind West Park Terrace rejects the myth that senior citizens are too old to enjoy exercise, learn new skills, or continue the pursuit of a busy social life. And, the community is attentive to the special needs of seniors, by offering medical care and other services in close proximity. At West Park Terrace, seniors do not have to fear walking or living alone, because its village setup provides security as well.

I am impressed by this new style of retirement living because I think it gives everything our seniors have always asked for from retirement: Independence, dignity, immediate medical attention if necessary, safety, and continued enjoyment of activities they have pursued all their adult lives.

American retirees do not want to lean on the government, they want a comfortable and secure retirement, with self-sufficiency and respect for their maturity. I commend West Park for creating a retirement lifestyle that fulfills these well-deserved requests.

PLIGHT OF SOVIET JEWRY

HON. JOHN McCAIN

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to once again join the Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews. This year has already been marked by the release of Anatoly Shcharansky, formerly one of the best known Jewish prisoners of conscience in the Soviet Union. As a member of the Congressional coalition for Soviet Jews, as well as the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I believe it is vital that we reaffirm our dedication to the cause for which Shcharansky served so many years in prison.

Although the release of Anatoly Shcharansky may appear promising, the Soviet leadership has given no indication that it will permit Jewish emigration to occur on a significant scale. In many ways, Shcharansky's case was typical of the Soviet Jewish experience. Once a highly respected computer scientist, his application to emigrate and his involvement in Jewish cultural activities soon cost him his job and eventually landed him in prison, where he spent the last 7 years.

Shcharansky's liberation was touted by the Soviets as a trade, an exchange for convicted spies, and this too is typical of the official Soviet attitude toward its Jewish citizens. The Soviet press is openly anti-Semitic. One popular pulication recently claimed that "Zionists are trying to infiltrate all spheres of public life." Last year, a so-called documentary was broadcast in Leningard detailed the Jewish conspiracies against the Government. Hebrew teachers are frequently arrested on trumped-up drug charges, and any cultural activist is commonly subject to a series of arrests, searches, and threats.

There are approximately 2.5 million Jews living in the Soviet Union today, the third largest Jewish population in the world, following the United States and Israel. Most of these people live in the urban areas, and, when permitted, have been among the most educated and industrious of Soviet citizens. Yet this exemplary group has increasingly become the object of a cold-blooded campaign of cultural and religious persecution.

Prevented from teaching or learning Jewish history and traditions, they are, in addition, denied the opportunity to emigrate. There are over 350,000 Soviet Jews who are waiting to leave. Some have been waiting for over 10 years, and many have, like Anatoly Shcharansky, spent that time in prison.

My own adopted refusenik, Feliks Kochubievsky, was also a prisoner of conscience. Released last spring, he has been waiting with his wife since 1978 to rejoin their sons in Israel. Mr. Kochubievsky's request for a visa resulted in the loss of his job as a highly respected senior electrical engineer, and ultimately in his arrest as a subversive. This criminal was a former recipient of the Soviet Order of Merit for Patriotic Work.

His request for a visa was refused for the same reason Shcharansky was originally denied—regime considerations. According to the Soviet officials, the presence of these individuals abroad would be damaging to national security. By far the most popular and convenient excuse used by the Government, its merit lies in the fact that it can be applied to those who have served in the military. Military service is, of course, compulsory in the U.S.S.R.

Anatoly Shcharansky's eventual liberation can be directly attributed to continued pressure from the West, and to the unfailing efforts of his wife, Avital. Feliks Kochubievsky and his wife, Valentina, have not been so fortunate. They are both still waiting. We owe it to the thousands of other refuseniks, as well as those who have served or are serving time as prisoners of conscience, to renew the pressure on the Soviet Government.

Mr. Gorbachev's recent and alarming statement that "the so-called problem of Jews in the Soviet Union does not exist" should be a warning. While permitting Helena Bonner to visit the West for medical treatment, and releasing Anatoly Shcharansky would seem to be proof of their growing understanding of good public relations, the contrast between the over 50,000 Soviet Jews who were permitted to leave in 1979, and the paltry 1,140 who left in 1985 is stunning, and, I think, speaks for itself.

Progress cannot be measured by Soviet rhetoric or by grand gestures, but only by counting the number of Jews actually allowed to leave. The Soviet Government would like to use Shcharansky's release as a diversion. The truth is that emigration is down, with only 53 Jews allowed to leave in March. That is the lowest figure since last summer.

Soviet Jews need a long-term, regularized emigration policy. General Secretary Gorbachev is planning a visit to the United States, and the Soviets have expressed an interest in expanding trade with American businesses. We must make it clear that improved relations are inextricably tied to the Soviet human rights record, and I am proud to have the opportunity to make my appeal for Soviet Jews through the Congressional Call to Conscience.

A TRIBUTE TO COL. LEE H. TUCKER

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to speak about a veteran living in my district. His name is Col. Lee H. Tucker and he dutifully served this country's Army for over 32 years.

Colonel Tucker was appointed executive director of the Soldier's Savings Program during the Second World War. He was selected for the enthusiasm, initiative, and determination he had displayed in his duties. Under his leadership, the program reached an all-time high of 94.9 percent participation among civilian personnel of the military establishment.

I would like to quote from a September 1945 recommendation that Colonel Tucker be awarded the Legion of Honor. It states:

Colonel Tucker, in making his outstanding contribution to this most important phase of the War, displayed a willingness to venture into uncharted fields, unusual leadership in developing teamwork among all commands, initiative, foresight, keen intellect, organizational ability, tremendous enthusiasm, and outstanding devotion to duty.

As Colonel Tucker approaches his 91st birthday on May 30, I would ask that every Member of this body join together in recognition of the outstanding achievements of this veteran.

Although he has never been formally recognized by the U.S. Army for these services, let this proclamation stand as an official recognition in honor of Col. Lee H. Tucker, for the superior performance of his duties as executive director of the Soldier's Savings Program.

HONOR THE VICTIMS OF GENOCIDE WITH PEACE

SPEECH OF

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 22, 1986

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, in 1985 we marked the 70th anniversary of the Armenian geoncide. A relatively small national group who happened to be caught in the middle of World War I were quietly killed or marched off to uninhabitable areas where starvation and disease proved a cheap substitute for bullets.

Since World War I, genocides have occurred with devastating regularity. World War II saw a number of genocidal attacks on whole peoples. The Jews and Gypsies of Europe, Balkan peoples, and others who were viewed as racially inferior or simply in the way of the war. Resistance to occupation was dealt with by mass murders of men, women, and children.

Since World War II, there have been further genocides for different reasons in different places. The Cambodian genocide directed against those who were in even the most remote way connected with the past, stands as a recent example of this particular horror. It seems that we have learned how to destroy, but the road to peaceful resolution of disputes and the recognition of all people's right to exist has not yet opened.

As we remember the Armenian genocide we are forced to look at similar episodes and consider just how we might avoid such horrors in the future. To begin with, we might consider developing international agreements on the conduct of modern war. Although everyone can agree that aerial bombardments are likely to cause civilian casualties, the world community has not come up with an agreement to cease this particular horror. One way in which we might honor those who died in genocides might be to begin work on controlling this modern form of genocide. We might also look to all of the destructive capability of modern warfare and commit ourselves to avoiding war and the use of the destructive weapons that are available.

The hatred and ignorance which are necessary conditions for a genocide to occur have grown far too costly in human lives and suffering to be borne any longer. Rational self interest dictates that we abandon the seduction of the easy solution and start to apply our knowledge and our will toward creating a more peaceful world for ourselves and all of our fellow human beings. Victims of a genocide can never be avenged. They can only be honored by our commitment to preventing such horrors in the future.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION, VOTE ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 432

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was unavoidably detained on official business, and therefore missed rollcall vote No. 97, on the question of whether the House should consider House Resolution 432. This resolution would effectively reinstate the previous limits on Members' earned outside income. This limit on outside income had been raised on Tuesday, April 22, as a result of a unanimous-consent request.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on the question of immediate consideration of House Resolution 432.

TEST BAN FOLLY

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, sometime in the near future we will consider the urgent supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1986.

It is possible that an amendment by Congresswoman SCHROEDER to cut off all funds for U.S. nuclear testing may be made in order. I strongly oppose this amendment and intend to speak against it if we take up this question.

Because of this, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues two editorials which recently appeared in the New York Times and the Washington Post. Both raise serious questions about the advisability of a nuclear testing moratorium at the present time.

I would urge all of my colleagues to read both of these editorials and join me in opposing the Schroeder amendment:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 7, 1986]

THE TEST BAN TALK

What about a nuclear test ban? The treaty of 1963 banned explosions in the atmosphere, in space and undewater, repeated efforts to extend the treaty to underground tests have failed. Different administrations, including Jimmy Carter's have determined that it was more urgent to level off or reduce existing weapons than to fashion a ban on testing that would head off new weapons. They have felt that some new weapons should be tested—at least weapons, such as Midgetman, that serve the purpose of taking existing arsenals off a hair trigger. Verification has always been in contention. So has reliability testing: in a nuclear world, testing helps provide assurance that stockpiled weapons are accident-proof and that they work.

Nonetheless the test ban issue is back. It was nowhere near center stage at the Reagan-Gorbachev summit. There President Reagan was insistent on wanting to develop, and therefore test, some new weapons, including the model of his Strategic Defense Initiative, with a nuclear trigger. But the Soviet Union has been pushing it all the same.

On the American side, a ban plays to 1) people's desire to do something about a seemingly endless process of arms-building, and 2) fears that arms are controlling governments instead of the other way around. Many people understand that a test ban would leave both powers with large arsenals, arsenals more dangerous than they need be. Especially when other arms control progress looks dim, however, a market expands for an arms-control step that is, as Mikhail Gorbachev says, the "simplest" around.

Actually, on the Soviet side, other considerations appear to govern. Arguing for a ban, Mr. Gorbachev has stated that doubts that might grow about the reliability of one's nuclear arms, if they were not tested, could slow down a reach for the trigger in a crisis. This seems silly; no less implausible, considering its source, is the lament that further underground tests will "deface our beautiful planet."

His more serious calculation may be that the Soviets have more to lose than gain from a foot-to-the-floor technological and economic competition with the United States. If this is so, however, the Soviets can ease their burden by arms reductions. Moscow may also hope a ban will shut down SDI. Again, if this is so, Moscow can come in the front door in Geneva where space arms are already on the table; a test ban is the back door. Moscow may also calculate that a closed society can shave compliance or resume testing more easily than an open society. If this is so, it is no comfort to Americans.

Two weekends ago, Mr. Gorbachev offered Mr. Reagan what he said was a last chance to join the seven-month Soviet unilateral testing moratorium. He proposed an early one-issue summit in Europe to start negotiating a full treaty ban. The administration at once complained about being pressed in public. For rejecting the offer, it will pay a certain price in international and domestic opinion. But a bad weekend in the propaganda wars is not going to turn Mr. Reagan around. Congress, in the unlikely event that a majority was so disposed, could seek to enforce a moratorium by denying test funds, but it cannot compel him to negotiate a ban.

We do not say any of this cheerfully. Mr. Reagan had reason to say no to Mr. Gorbachev on a test ban, even though in saying no he is turning down the one arms control agreement within visible reach. He is saying, too—otherwise, he could not be taken seriously—that he can do better. Let him do so.

[From the New York Times, Mar. 31, 1986]

THE TEST BAN SHIBBOLETH

Mikhail Gorbachev sings a seductive tune in demanding a complete halt to further testing of nuclear weapons. The campaign is going so well that he has twice extended a self-imposed moratorium on Soviet nuclear testing, piously declared last July to mark the 40th anniversary of the American bombing of Hiroshima.

In the battle for public opinion, Mr. Gorbachev seems to be advancing easily. Last week 63 Members of the House and Senate wrote the White House urging Mr. Reagan to call off an American nuclear test. Other Members want to withhold money for American tests so long as the Soviet moratorium continues. With its peremptory refusal even to consider a complete test ban, the Administration plays into Mr. Gorbachev's hands.

The President's two principal arguments are that nuclear explosions are necessary to maintain the reliability of the nuclear stockpile and that a ban would be unenforceable because Soviet cheating could not be detected. He is widely disputed by scientists outside the Government.

Proponents of a test ban argue cogently that it is one way to cool the nuclear arms race and to encourage nonnuclear powers to remain so. They contend that a test ban would lock in the present American advantage in the design of nuclear warheads. The demand for a test ban has thus become the touchstone of sincere peace seekers.

But Mr. Gorbachev's persistence and Mr. Reagan's resistance probably have little to do with sincerity about arms control. A test ban now, without other agreements, would appear to do a great deal more for the Soviet Union than it has yet admitted: it would kill development of the nuclear-powered X-ray laser, a device that some see as the most promising technical component of President Reagan's antimissile defense initiative.

However misconceived that "Star Wars" program, the Administration is not obliged to kill it for free. It should be bargained away in orderly fashion, for sizable reductions in nuclear stockpiles.

"Star Wars" aside, why should a test ban be a prepayment for a major arms control agreement? The Administration is pursuing arms talks with the Soviet Union across a wide front; to hang toughest on the items the Russians want most is not a bad tactic provided the negotiations are sincerely pursued. And if the Administration were not sincere, there is no way to make it so except at the ballot box.

Instead of urging the Administration to throw in its hand on the test-ban issue, Congress would do better to elucidate the underlying facts. Would a test ban really halt the arms race? It would freeze technical change in warhead design, but not all changes have been bad. A freeze 20 years ago would have prevented development of lower yield warheads and of permissive action links, the safety devices that prevent unauthorized use of nuclear weapons. What can one predict for a freeze now?

The Livermore and Los Alamos laboratories that design nuclear weapons have a vigorous interest in opposing a test ban; it would put them largely out of business. Congress should rigorously examine their contentions that stockpile testing is necessary and that seismic monitoring could not detect Soviet cheating.

Securing the answers to such questions would help lay the ground for a test-ban negotiation. Shouting at the White House, especially during the din of Mr. Gorbachev's public relations campaign, will not.

ELYSIUM THEATRE HONORS ACTRESS/DIRECTOR LEE GRANT

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 22, at the National Arts Club in New York City, the world-renowned actress, Lee Grant, was awarded the Erwin Piscator Award for achievement in acting, directing and education. This ceremony took place at a luncheon sponsored by the Elysium Theatre Co., an international repertory group located in the congressional district which I represent.

It is particularly fitting that Ms. Grant be the recipient of this prize. She embodies in her life and in her work the principles for which Erwin Piscator stood in illuminating interpersonal relationships and in relating individuals to their environment and to society.

Ms. Grant's entire life has been devoted to the performing arts, having begun her career at the age of 4 on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera. At 14, she won a scholarship to New York's Neighborhood Playhouse which led to her Broadway debute in "Detective Story," for which she was awarded the Critic Circle Award.

Hers has been a career highlighted with recognition and achievement. She is the recipient of the Best Actress Award, two Emmys, and the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress in "Shampoo." In her recent career in film and stage, she has explored experiences that major studios rarely handle. In 1983, she received the Congressional Arts Caucus Award for outstanding achievement in acting and independent filmmaking. Her dedication, talent, and creative energy have touched the lives of everyone who has had contact with her. We are proud of her and grateful to her for having enriched our lives.

MARIE KINZLER—CARNEGIE'S EDITOR EMERITUS

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to salute one of my district's most outstanding newspaper women—Marie Kinzler—a woman who has been chosen by the Chartiers Valley Commission on Human Relations to receive its 1986 Community Service Award.

I have known Marie Kinzler for many years, really from the first days of my political life when I walked into her office at the Carnegie Signal-Item and urged her to write about this young, unknown candidate for Congress. She did, as she would for any area resident with an interesting story to tell.

Marie Kinzler's professionalism as a newsperson is the result of years of experience. A lifelong resident of the South Hills, Marie began writing for newspapers in the seventh grade, where she first wrote and later edited the Scott-T-News, her school newspaper. Her first boss was long-time friend Judge John Brosky who edited the Scott-T-News when Marie was a seventh-grader.

In January 1950 Marie joined the Carnegie Signal-Item, a weekly paper for residents in the Chatiers Valley owned and operated by another excellent newspaperman, Jim Knepper, now Pennsylvania's Secretary of Labor and Industry. When Marie joined the paper, the Signal-Item was an 8-page newspaper with a circulation of 1,800—when she retired from the paper in September 1984, the Signal-Item was often a 22-page paper with over 11,000 readers.

The growth of the paper is only one measure of Marie Kinzler's contribution to the communications business in the Chartiers Valley. Equally important, perhaps more important, has been Marie's willingness to help so many community groups and individual volunteers get the attention and notice they need and deserve to do the good that they have done in our community.

Mr. Speaker, I salute Marie Kinzler, and with her husband Steve, son Steve, and her many friends, I join in congratulating Marie on being so justly honored with the Community Service Award of the Chartiers Valley Commission on Human Relations. As Marie continues her work now as assistant to the president of Knepper Press, I count myself and the people of the Chartiers Valley very lucky to have Marie Kinzler as a friend.

LYDIA KIM—OUTSTANDING YOUNG WOMAN

HON. PAUL B. HENRY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to recognize and honor 13-year-old Lydia Kim, who, as the winner of the 1986 Greater Grand Rapids Area Spelling Bee, will be representing Grand Rapids, MI, and the Grand Rapids Press in the National Spelling Bee held this May in Washington, DC.

As an eighth grader, this was the last opportunity for Lydia to enter the local spelling bee and win the coveted trip to the national finals. With the help of her father, a local pediatrician, Lydia spent long hours pouring over the dictionary and list of words supplied to the contestants. Her mother helped by encouraging her daughter to participate in outings that served to ease the tension and relax the serious and shy young student.

Lydia, spelling champion of the East Grand Rapids Public Schools for 3 of the last 4 years, met the challenges of the competition with confidence and poise. With the spirit and nerves of steel exhibited by her idol, Olympic Medalist Mary Lou Retten, Lydia, without flinching, defeated 24 other students by correctly spelling more that 100 words throughout the grueling 3-hour competition.

An academically advanced student, Lydia is listed on the honor roll and good citizenship list of her school She also finds time to play the violin and piano and is a member of the East Grand Rapids swimming team. Born in Des Moines, IA, Lydia is the daughter of Dr. Ihl and Monica Kim who came to this country from South Korea. Lydia follows in the footsteps of her sister, Susie, who also won a school spelling championship.

Mr. Speaker, Lydia Kim is an outstanding young woman and a tribute to the youth of America. I am pleased to offer my congratulations and admiration for her successful efforts in winning the regional spelling bee and wish her the best of luck as she goes on to compete in the national contest in May.

DODGE MORGAN'S EXTRAORDINARY ACHIEVEMENT

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to relate to my colleagues the extraordinary and inspiring accomplishment of Mr. Dodge Morgan, a resident of Cape Elizabeth, ME.

On April 11, Mr. Morgan completed something that no American before him, and only three others in the world, had done. On that day, after a record 150 days, 1 hour, and 6 minutes, and more than 26,000 miles, Dodge Morgan completed a single-handed circumnavigation of the globe aboard a 60-foot sailboat, the American Promise.

By Mr. Morgan's own account, it takes a good boat, an iron will, and luck to sail around the world alone. I would agree with him; however, I believe it takes more—it takes courage, self-reliance, independence, and, above all, a level of self-understanding that enables one to overcome adversity. Mr. Morgan has all of these qualities and then some.

A former Air Force fighter pilot, news reporter, and advertising executive, Dodge Morgan sold his electronics firm and brought to reality a dream he had had to sail around the world—a dream inspired by a trip he made in the 1960's from Maine to Alaska aboard a 36-foot schooner.

Dodge Morgan's achievement should be a source of pride and inspiration to us all. His feat is one of courage, determination, and perseverance, and I, therefore, ask the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in applauding Mr. Morgan and in welcoming him home.

NATIONAL POLICY AND TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION ACT OF 1985

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 24, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to discuss for the consideration of my colleagues, the National Policy and Technology Foundation Act of 1985 that I recently introduced as H.R. 3997. Joining me as cosponsors of the bill are Congressmen BEILENSON, BERMAN, BONIOR (MI), CONYERS, CROCKETT, DIXON, DYMALLY, EDGAR, FAZIO, FORD (MI), GUARINI, HAWKINS, HERTEL (MI), LEVINE (CA), LUNDINE, MACKAY, MCKINNEY, MITCHELL, NELSON (FL), PANETTA, RANGEL, TORRES, UDALL, WALGREN, WAXMAN, and WEISS.

The National Policy and Technology Foundation Act was introduced to focus congressional attention on the need for legislative flexibility and the correction of structural deficiencies in our basic governmental institutions that threaten the long-term economic foundations and quality of life in the United States.

INTRODUCTION

Sometime, nearly four decades ago, with the United States enjoying the world's highest standard of living and a seemingly invincible industrial plant, the Nation's industrial base began to erode and the country's quality of life entered into a long-term decline. Held captive by past success and its own conventional wisdom, the Nation ignored many danger signs. Finally, in the late 1970's and early 1980's the loss of consumer electronics markets, followed by steel and automobiles, made it clear that America's leadership and prosperity were being lost—perhaps forever.

The country is experiencing a broadly based structural phenomena that is indescribable in terms of classical economic models. The regression of American trade and economy are being matched by a concurrent deterioration of the relative American life quality. If the trend of the past 40 years foretell America's future, our children will have much less to be thankful for than their parents.

Industry provides most of the material goods of our society and generates much of the revenues used to finance our social services. However, by almost any standard, American industry is ill and shows few signs of regaining its ability to compete in world markets. The dreary statistics documenting the United States' inability to meet current international competition are too well known to repeat. The LICIT Report of April 1983 presents a grim picture of world market share trends. During the 15-year period from 1965 to 1980, in 12 major manufacturing categories ranging from iron and steel to aircraft and computers, France and Japan each increased their percentage of world market share in eight categories. West Germany increased its share in five categories and now leads the United States (5 to 4). United States' market share on the other hand declined in 10 out of 12 categories. The result of our eroding industrial competence is a $150 billion U.S. trade deficit for 1985 and a drop in relative U.S. GNP/capita from first place after WWII to 10th place today. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness points out: "Real hourly compensation in the United States has remained virtually stagnant since 1973. Since 1979 it has actually declined."

National life quality is obviously influenced by the national GNP/capita, but the actual quality of life is given by other environments such as education, health, personal security, pollution, etc. In each of these areas, the United States life quality is not outstanding.

Educational test scores have been dropping steadily in the United States while functional illiteracy remains at close to 20 percent. Our ability to allocate our educational resources to effectively serve national needs is questionable. During the past decade, with high technology industry often struggling to satisfy its demand for experienced engineers, California's production of electrical engineers decreased by nearly 30 percent while the output of lawyers increased 300 percent. It would seem that we plan to litigate our way back to industrial preeminence. Japan, on the other hand, produces twice as many engineers as the United States, but the entire country employs fewer attorneys than are found practicing in Los Angeles County.

In spite of our enormous investment in medical research and health delivery, Americans are not relatively healthy. Today the Japanese and the Swedes, contributing little to medical science, are the world's healthiest people with the lowest infant mortality rates and the longest life spans.

In other life quality areas the country is doing no better. Crime is excessive; the average American is more conscious than ever of muggings, burglary and widespread use of narcotics. The Nation's physical environments are being damaged by pollutants. Acid rain is destroying Eastern forests and lakes. Smog levels in our major cities remain high.

WHY A NATIONAL POLICY AND TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION?

Centralized national planning is neither practical nor desirable for our society. Large scale national plans take so long to produce and put in place that the dynamics of a modern industrial society render such plans obsolete before they can be implemented. Central national planning, therefore, is simply not useful.

On the other hand, only the Government can take responsibility for the creation and maintenance of coherent national policy in the national interest. Rational planning and investment by the private sector, individual and corporate, cannot exist independent of government policy. In reality, the very rationality of a business decision almost inevitably depends upon its consistency with national policy. Conversely, in the face of inconsistent, incoherent, conflicting or invisible national policy, private planning and investment becomes a high stakes gamble instead of a reasoned exercise.

Congressman LEON E. PANETTA of the House Agricultural Committee in the Los Angeles Times, May 12, 1985, said: "Counterproductive and conflicting Federal laws and policies abound in agriculture to the point where they sometimes sound like 'Alice in Wonderland' creations. For example there are: Tax policies that encourage investors to begin raising unneeded, irrigated crops on easily erodible soil in Nebraska using scarce water at the same time the Government is fighting soil erosion and looking for ways to conserve that water."

Allen Paul, President of the Agriculture Council of America observed: "There ain't nobody responsible, nobody accountable. . . . We just don't have an integrated farm policy."

The consequences of inconsistent national policy appear everywhere. Monetary policies established to combat inflation contribute to an overpriced dollar that made U.S. goods uncompetitive in world markets and created a $150-billion trade deficit. Conflicting macro policies, which frequently insulate economic sectors from market forces, drive U.S. farmers bankrupt and allowed Argentine wheat to be delivered in Minnesota at less than U.S. cost.

The problem is deep-seated. Institutional rigidity has precluded changes in our basic institutions and institutional deficiencies insured that the need for change was not perceived. The country's present institutional structure is flawed and unsuited for the dynamics of a modern world—lacking means to facilitate the integrated public-private policies so necessary to the country's long term interest.

Policy conflict begins at the data level with micro information gathered by very specialized agencies charged with making micro policy. There are no mechanisms to gather data on a more global basis, assess the consequences of both micro and macro policy and propose the modifications necessary to create integrated, coherent and consistent national policy in the long term public interest.

Although every Government department and most important agencies have policy sections, their scope is generally limited to gathering micro data to provide micro policy for their host. Regardless of capabilities or desire to do more, they are restricted both by the data available and their franchise. Even if adequate data were made available, the United States has not established a formal system for monitoring the international trends and developments that impact our economy and quality of national life. Commercial opportunities arise and are forever lost while economic challenges mature into major crises without an early warning system to alert our Government and industry.

Micro policies proliferate within major Government departments with little analysis of their interaction and collective effectiveness. Macro policy is created, often in response to an ideology, and with negligible assessment of long term consequences. The experimental and changing nature of national policy is largely ignored. Formal means to evaluate policy consequences are seldom installed. National policy is almost entirely reactive. A 40-year decline in international trade competitiveness is recognized only after much of American industry has been driven off shore and exploding trade deficits make the United States a debtor nation for the first time in 70 years.

It is at the integrated policy structure level that the U.S. institutional deficiencies become most painful. Means do not exist to consider, much less assess, the interrelationship between national macro policies such as monetary policy, inflation policy, trade policy, industrial initiatives, tax policies, saving policy, life quality policies, etc. The Nation does not possess institutions capable of proposing integrated national policy alternatives and assessing their expected long term consequences. Until this deficiency is relieved, the Nation will continue to dissipate its considerable resources and stagger from one avoidable crisis to another.

In recent years the consequences of the Nation's institutional deficiencies have become more evident. Failures of the formal national policy making system have finally culminated in the Gramm-Rudman Act.

Gramm-Rudman represents a massive breakdown of the legislative process. The act was passed by a frustrated Congress unable to resolve a runaway budget crisis. But Gramm-Rudman is not the first nor will it be the last of major national issues for which the Congress and the administration will be unable to provide adequate national policy. Like the Social Security crisis of 2 years ago Gramm-Rudman flows basically from structural and institutional deficienceis and not from a lack of dedication or the desire to perform by the Congress or the administration.

The Nation's leading trade competitors have long enjoyed well established institutional means for developing national policy and obtaining the necessary public consensus. Germany's Stability and Growth Act of 1966 established a tripartite consultation process among labor, business, and government. Japan's MITI has 35 associated independent councils with over 200 standing committees that insure the effective participation of every segment of Japanese society.

Unlike our trade competitors, the U.S. Congress simply does not have the tools to cope with the far-reaching complexity of the problems of a modern global society. Without the means to anticipate pending crises before they become critical, develop an adequate data base, formulate and assess policy alternatives and in particular, generate the national consensus necessary for public acceptance, the United States is assured of a future with more Gramm-Rudmans.

The country needs to put in place the means to recognize world change that will require adjustments in its national policies and it needs the means to effectively initiate and facilitate policy change. Specifically, a consensus-driven mechanism is required to rationalize national policy by anticipating changing conditions, assessing the long term consequences of existing and proposed policy and recommending to the Congress and the President self-consistent, mutually supporting national policies. With continually changing world markets and international competition that shapes its policies and strategies to match the changing market, it becomes axiomatic that the United States must be able to readily reshape its policies and institutions for compatibility with the changing times.

The Nation's policy facilitating agencies are also incomplete. Although the Federal Government now provides substantial funding for science, and technological support for selected industries such as agriculture, aviation and commercial fisheries, we presently lack the institutional capacity and civilian agencies to focus programs upon the competitive performance of our economy as a whole. Congress has responsibility for designating the appropriate agencies to implement national policies. In practice, however, implementation of important policies may languish for lack of an existing competent agency to pursue them. In the broadest sense, the Nation does not possess for our new technology development needs the equivalent of the National Science Foundation or the National Arts and Humanities Foundations. The National Policy and Technology Foundation would consolidate technology related activities which are not now closely tied to an agency mission and would insure that the Federal Government will assume suitable responsibilities for needed civilian technology which have heretofore not been adequately discharged by any sector of society.

The combining of existing governmental functions into a new foundation with responsibility for facilitating national policy and the technology supportive of that policy finds its counterpart in the principal policy agencies for some of our major trade competitors. Japan's MITI is heavily involved in insuring the excellence of that nation's technology.

NEEDS ADDRESSED BY THE NATIONAL POLICY AND TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION

While it might be convenient to blame the Nation's present difficulties upon one or the other political party or upon a particular ideology, this would belie the facts. Our regression has steadily progressed for nearly 40 years under the stewardship of both parties. The data would demonstrate that the United States is in the midst of a long-term decline resulting from 200-year-old structural deficiencies that render our institutions incapable of discharging the policy responsibilities of a modern society. The rigidity and structural deficiencies of America's basic institutions have existed so long, they are almost impossible to perceive or to question. John Kemeny, Chairman of the President's Three Mile Island Commission, after studying that disaster, was forced to the conclusion that the fault lay more with obsolescence of U.S. institutions than with the reactor operators. "The present system does not work. It was designed for a much earlier and simpler age. The only way to save American democracy is to change the fundamental decision-making process at the Federal level, so it can come to grips with the enormous and complex issues that face the Nation."

To confront most large scale national problems, the Congress has need for effective, nonpartisan institutional means for creating coherent, consistent national policy in the public interest. Indeed, there is often great difficulty in recognizing or even defining long term public interest. When faced with complex, legitimate, and conflicting demands, our national institutions are too often inadequate, causing the political process to fail.

The National Policy and Technology Foundation has been designed as an effective, efficient, nonpartisan national policy mechanism. Existing agencies and bureaus are brought together to provide Congress with the badly needed early warning system, comprehensive policy data base, policy assessment and the public consensus necessary to reduce legislative gridlock. The Foundation draws upon the lessons learned from the policy institutions of our more successful trade competitors and from our own national experience to offer a bipartisan approach to achieving and facilitating integrated national policy.

The number of studies and congressional bills addressing various manifestations of America's loss of economic and industrial leadership has been increasing. The pressures of the times are seen to be forcing the restructuring of the basic institutions necessary to maintain the national life quality and trade competitiveness. The administration has considered two significant reorganization initiatives involving the creation of two new Cabinet level agencies: a Department of International Trade and Industry [DITI] and a Department of Science and Technology. At the same time, thoughtful proposals such as those by the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness and the House Republican Research Committee have invariably come to propose major changes in national policy. There has been a direct or at least tacit recognition that the Nation's need to resolve complex national issues such as trade competitiveness requires the addressing of a host of national policies in a coherent manner.

The House Republican Research Committee's "Agenda for Meeting America's Competitive Challenge" targets the process of innovation to improve the Nation's competitiveness. While the agenda does not directly address the general issue of conflicting national policies, its emphasis is upon the broad spectrum of national policies that must come together to improve our trade competitiveness. The impact upon U.S. trade competitiveness of monetary policy, tax policy, education and retraining policies, trade policy, capital formation policy, intellectual property policy, antitrust policy, national R&D policy and regulation policies has been carefully defined. The proposed Foundation is structured to provide long term attention to the national policy issues that the "agenda" has raised.

America's declining ability to compete in the international marketplace is one of the more serious consequences of the structural deficiencies of our country's national policy institutions. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness [Young Commission] dispelled many of our most cherished trade myths. Four institutional policy needs are found in the Young Commission report that coincide with the basic functions of the Foundation. The Foundation would provide:

1. A high quality, comprehensive readily accessed international and domestic information and data base.

The Young Commission observes: "One reason few U.S. firms export is that they lack critical information about foreign markets. Such information currently exists within Government, but it is not readily available."

2. First rate, independent capabilities for the analysis of national problems and opportunities and the assessment of policy alternatives—their interdependence and interaction:

The Young Commission found "The competitiveness issues facing America today are not new, yet they remain unsolved. The ability of the political decision making process to deal with them is impeded by conflict along the very sectors needed to solve the problems we face. Policy makers must deal with widely disparate points of view presented by a diversity of interested parties. Often there is not even agreement as to the facts of the issue much less a shared understanding of the tradeoffs in the policy options under discussion."

3. Highly visible societally representative means for achieving national policy consensus.

The Young Commission recommends "Government can be strengthened significantly by providing a forum in which consensus can be reached on the facts of an issue and in which implicit tradeoffs among policy options can be made explicit."

4. Means to facilitate and implement those policies for which there is no presently existing suitable organization.

The Young Commission wrote ". . . we should be concerned by the fact that the Federal government conducts its R&D . . . in agencies and organizations with no common management. Each research entity has a mission independent of the others and none has industrial competitiveness as a goal."

DESCRIPTION OF THE BILL

The National Policy and Technology Act of 1985 establishes the Foundation as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government.

STRUCTURE OF THE FOUNDATION

The Foundation would have nine main branches and appropriate independent public councils.

First, The National Information Office.—This office would develop in cooperation with other public and private agencies, the comprehensive, coherent National Information and Statistics Policy necessary to the creation of a National Information System.

Information and data required for the informed, effective operation of the Nation's public and private policy makers would be provided. The basic factors influencing the national economy and life quality would be continuously monitored including United States and foreign: Economies, trade, production, market and industrial trend indicators, customs, tariffs, regulations, commodities, energy, market opportunities, technological innovation, scientific advances, industrial competitiveness, industrial policy and strategy, government and business policies, educational policies and resource allocation strategies.

A national computer network with remote terminals would provide ready access to the national data base by public and private users.

The National Technical Information Service of the Department of Commerce would become part of the National Information Office.

Second, National Office of Policy, Analysis and Assessment.—This office would provide a vehicle for comprehensive examination of the U.S. policy structure. Interrelationship of existing and proposed national policies including life quality, societal, economic, industrial, monetary, et cetera, policies and their combined future impact upon the Nation's standard of living, international competitiveness, industrial competence and technological development would be continuously evaluated. Particular attention would be given to conflict between micro policies and the coherence and consistency among macro policies needed to form integrated national policy.

Drawing upon the data banks of the National Information Office, the Policy Office would provide an early warning system to identify emerging national and sectorial problems, opportunities and needs before they assume crisis proportions. In cooperation with existing Federal policy groups and other concerned public and private bodies, critical issues would be evaluated. Alternative policies and programs to resolve national problems, needs and opportunities would be assessed and furnished to the appropriate councils for public reevaluation and debate. The evaluations and assessments of the Office of Policy would serve as points of departure for the public deliberation of the councils. The National Science Foundation's Division of Policy Research and Analysis would be transferred and serve as the nucleus of this office.

Third, Office of National Programs.—This office would undertake the applied research and development required to develop proposed policies in those areas of national concern not adequately supported by other agencies or the private sector. Cooperative industry, government, university and professions programs would be encouraged and facilitated. Commercialization and deployment of resulting new technology would be the responsibility of the private sector. Typical large scale, one time national programs could be the fifth generation computer, the unmanned garment factory, and the very high speed, large scale integrated circuit program which went by default to the DOD. The National Science Foundation's Applied Research and Problem Focused Research Divisions would be transferred to form the initial core program of the Office.

Fourth, Office of the Professions.—The office would support fundamental research in the engineering disciplines and nationally needed development and applied research in public professions not adequately supported from other sources. The National Science Foundation's engineering divisions would be transferred to the Office of the Professions and could constitute the initial programs of the Office.

Many critical national issues require multidiscipline, multiprofession resolution. Mechanisms including cross-disciplinary and multiprofessional activities would be investigated to facilitate implementation of cooperative public-private understandings in the national interest.

Fifth, Office of Institutional and Human Resources Development.—This office would include the Centers for Industrial Technology authorized by Public Law 96–40. The Office would have responsibility to join government, university, industry and professions in cooperative activities including generic development useful to many industries and training of individuals for innovation, industrial competence and international competitiveness.

Cooperative government, industry, university, and Federal laboratory efforts to establish technical and economic feasibility in the matter of Government mandated industrial health, safety, and environmental regulation, would be important activities of the Centers. Technological and societal systems needed for long-term resolution of major industry-environmental questions such as acid rain, would be considered.

Quantitative projections of human resources needs would be made. Training and retraining programs, new curricula and educational institutions to meet these needs along with those caused by technological displacement and the unmanning of the Nation's factories would be proposed. Encouragement and assistance for minorities and women to enter the professions would be offered.

Sixth, Office of Small Business.—This office would materially improve the resources and capabilities of U.S. small business, including upgrading production technology by grants and incentives for cooperative industry-wide development and research, promotion of computerization, training of personnel, et cetera. The small business innovation program of the National Science Foundation would be transferred to the National Policy and Technology Foundation.

A major undertaking would be the creation of the Federal Technology and Professions Extension Service to be the counterpart of the U.S. Agriculture Extension System. Ready access would be provided for individuals, companies and industries to advice, support and expert consultation upon the latest manufacturing processes, management systems, quality assurance methods, production techniques, personnel procedures, computer applications financial controls, et cetera. These programs would be coordinated with existing State technology, professions, or industrial programs to avoid duplication or adverse impact.

Seventh, Office of Intergovernmental Technology and Professions Delivery System.—This office would facilitate the integration of the latest professions delivery system and technology advances into the policy formulation and delivery systems management of State and local governments. Cooperation between government (local and State) with the university's professional schools would be supported. The Office and universities would offer resources particularly suited to massive problems such as solid and toxic waste disposal that go beyond the resources and boundaries of conventional jurisdictions. The intergovernmental programs of the National Science Foundation would be transferred and serve as the nucleus of this Office.

Eighth, National Bureau of Standards.—The Bureau would be transferred intact from the Department of Commerce to serve as an operating laboratory for the Foundation. Present duties and programs of the Bureau are quite compatible with Foundation responsibilities. Where appropriate, mechanisms would be developed to foster public-private partnerships involving the Bureau and the Federal Laboratories in the applied research and development often required for implementation of specific policies in the national interest.

Ninth, Patent and Trademark Office.—The classification, evaluation and protection of invention and technology innovation function of the office makes it reasonable to transfer the Office from the Department of Commerce to the National Policy and Technology Foundation.

Councils.—Superimposed upon the Foundation's structure is a series of independent councils. Council members would be appointed by the Director from outside the Foundation and would include leaders in concerned industry, labor, general consumers and experts from a wide spectrum of society including academia, mass media, finance, government, environmentalists and the professions.

The councils, serving as deliberative public forums for national policy, are the crucial link to the public and the key to the successful function of the Foundation. By serving as an early warning system, offering a comprehensive policy data base and providing policy analysis and assessment, alternative evaluations and area expertise, the Foundation becomes the base from which the councils can work. It is the councils upon their own initiative or in response to requests from the President, Congress or the Directors that would take the lead in investigating and deliberating on long term and basic national policy. The councils would redefine problems, hold public forums, assess alternatives and suggest policy options. It is the councils' voices that would be heard through the policy papers submitted to Congress and the President and which would carry the weight of a "public consensus."

MANAGEMENT OF THE FOUNDATION

The Foundation would have a Director, a Deputy Director and nine Assistant Directors—one for each branch. It would also have a National Policy and Technology Board.

National Policy and Technology Board.—The Board would have 24 members and the Director. Specific responsibilities would include establishing Foundation policy, budget and program review, grant approval and biannual reports to the President for submission to Congress of the important national policy issues, emerging problems and opportunities along with the Foundation's recommendations for such policy legislation as may be deemed appropriate. Members would be Presidential appointees and would be selected from people prominent in a wide variety of fields inlcuding the professions, labor, entrepreneurship, management, education, industry, government, technology and trade. To avoid dominance by the Federal Government, the Board would be expected to independently represent all segments of society. Nominations for the Board should be widely solicited including from the Board itself, the national academies, professional societies, business associations, labor associations and other appropriate organizations. Board members would be appointed for 6 year terms. For continuity terms would be staggered.

The intent of the Board along with the councils is to insure that the community of those affected by National Policy will have a say in the operation of the Foundation and the creation of a national consensus for the resulting national policy recommendations.

Director and Assistant Directors.—The Director, the Deputy Director and the nine Assistant Directors of the Foundation would be Presidential appointees at executive levels II, III and IV respectively. The Directors' term of appointment would be 6 years.

In order to permit the strong central operation needed to coordinate activities of the various branches of the Foundation, all authority over the Foundation, other than that reserved to the Board has been given to the Director. The Director may delegate parts of that authority and would be expected to do so, but would always have the ability to take personal control of any aspect of the Foundation operations.

FOUNDATION OPERATION—POLICY FACILITATION

Facilitating the creation and where appropriate the implementation of coherent national policy in the long term public interest is the basic need to be satisfied by the National Policy and Technology Foundation.

The National Information Office would collect, organize and disseminate international and national information, data and statistics for public-private policy makers.

The Office of Policy, Analysis and Assessment would continuously evaluate data from the National Information Office to identify pending national needs, opportunities or problems. Alternative policy options would be proposed, evaluated and assessed by the Policy Office for consideration by the councils.

Independent public councils utilizing the data, evaluations and assessments of the Policy Office and other sources would respond to requests from the President, Congress, Foundation Directors or upon their own initiative. Councils would provide public forums that openly debate and redefine national policy issues and thus generate the public consensus necessary to avoid legislative grid lock.

With public recognition and acceptance of the equity of the tradeoffs and sacrifices inherent in resolution of any large scale public issue, the Congress and the President would have renewed flexibility to create and legislate consistent integrated national policy in the public interest. Responsibility for the implementation of designated sectors of these policies would be assigned by Congress to appropriate agencies. These could include activities which would be brought together in the Foundation from uncertain homes in bureaus scattered throughout the Federal Government.

Advancement of the Nation's civilian technological and professional capabilities would be offered by the Office of National Programs, the Office of the Professions, and the National Bureau of Standards. Emphasis would be upon facilitating policies and programs of substantial national interest where sufficient timely development cannot be expected from the private sector alone due to high risk, long lead time or the sheer magnitude of the required resources.

The Office of Institutional and Human Resource Development would be responsible for technology and professions institutional and human resource development. Stressing public-private cooperation, emphasis would be placed upon the long-term development of human resources and the creation of generic technology useful for many industries.

The United States still leads the world in basic research and technological innovation. However, we too frequently fall behind other nations which have more successfully deployed and utilized technology and systems often originated in the United States. Improving technology transfer and deployment in the United States would be an important responsibility of the Office of Small Business, the Office of Intergovernmental Technology and Professional Delivery Systems and the Patent and Trademark Office.

COORDINATION OF PROGRAMS

A separate section of the National Policy and Technology Foundation Act, section 12, requires close coordination of the Foundation's programs with other programs of the Federal Government, with the private sector and with State and local government programs.

A standing National Foundation Coordinating Board with five members each from the Boards of the National Policy and Technology Foundation, the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities and the National Science Foundation would be appointed to provide recommendations to improve the collective effectiveness of the three Foundations in the national interest. To the greatest extent feasible, extramural basic research fields which the Foundation wishes to advance should be channeled through the National Science Foundation. Studies in societal value systems and ethics needed to support regulatory cost/benefit analyses would be coordinated with the applied humanities programs of the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

Section 12 also requires that the Policy and Technology Foundation coordinate its small business activities with those of the Small Business Administration. Other coordination is required in other sections of the act. The National Information Office in cooperation with public and private agencies would seek to develop a coherent National Information and Statistics Policy that would lead to the development of readily accessed, comprehensive, computerized National Information and Statistics Data Banks. The Office of Policy, Analysis and Assessment is specifically charged with cooperating and coodinating with other policy bodies of Federal, State and local governments. The Federal Technology and Professions Extension Service is required to coordinate with existing programs such as State Technology Services to avoid duplication or adverse impact. Assistance would be provided to the President's Office of Science and Technology Policy and Analysis.

AUTHORIZATIONS

The act would provide for authorization of activities in fiscal year 1986. Any funds for years beyond 1986 would have to be authorized by future acts. We estimate that the fiscal year 1987 funding for the existing functions proposed to be transferred to the Foundation is about $500 million. We believe that a realistic level of funding for the first full year of operation of the Foundation should be about 20 percent more, or about $600 million. The precise level of authorization would be determined after hearings and a more precise determination of the final makeup of the Foundation.

While $600 million is a substantial expenditure, it represents less than 20 percent of the annual budget of Japan's MITI [Ministry of International Trade and Industry] which is that nation's leading instrument for facilitating national policy. The proposed budget also is substantially less than that of MITI's Agency of Industrial Science and Technology which includes the Japanese equivalent of the U.S. Bureau of Standards.

The success of our trade competitors in coordinating their national policies and advancing their technological competence to secure increased market share can be attributed to their creation and funding of competent national policy instruments.

SUMMARY

The concept of a National Policy and Technology Foundation grows from recognition of the limitations and resulting failures of the present national policy process. There is a clear need to correct the structural shortcomings of national policy institutions that have led to Gramm-Rudman. There is a need to provide the Congress with an effective nonpartisan mechanism for the creation and facilitation of consistent national policy. To satisfy the foregoing need, the Foundation would offer a comprehensive policy data base, policy alternative analysis and assessment, public policy review and consensus and finally—where appropriate—agencies to implement policy and supporting civilian technology.

The National Policy and Technology Foundation would be an independent agency with associated public councils and nine main branches for national information, policy analysis and assessment, national problem focused programs, the professions including engineering, institutional and human resource development, small business, intergovernmental technology and professions delivery systems, the National Bureau of Standards, and the Patent and Trademark Office. The agency would have programs transferred from NSF—almost all of engineering and applied science—and from the Department of Commerce—almost all of the programs of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Science and Technology. Responsibility for the centers for industrial technology would reside in the institutional and human resource development branch.

Governance for the Foundation would be handled by a Director and a National Policy and Technology Board patterned in organization but not composition after the National Science Board. Key functions of the Board would be to establish the policies of the Foundation and review the Foundation's budget and programs. The Director would have all powers not assigned to the Board and would be assisted by a deputy and nine assistants, one for each branch.

The bill contains authorization for fiscal year 1986 of $600 million with a line item for each of the nine branches. Additional authorizations will be required for succeeding years. It is expected that the economics to be realized from the Foundation will more than make up for the appropriations required above that presently budgeted for the existing agencies and activities that will be incorporated into the Foundation.

The bill requires close cooperation between the National Policy and Technology Foundation, the agencies and the private sector. A national Foundation Coordinating Board with equal membership from the Boards of the three National Foundations—Policy and Technology, Science, and Arts and Humanities, shall provide recommendations to improve the collective effectiveness of the three Foundations in the national interest.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, April 28, 1986

The House met at 12 noon.

The Venerable Frederick C. Byrd, archdeacon of the Episcopal Diocese of upper South Carolina, Columbia, SC, offered the following prayer:

Father, You have given us this good land for our heritage. May we always prove ourselves a people mindful of Your favor and may we show our thankfulness through good stewardship.

Bless and guide the Members of this House here assembled. Give them courage, wisdom, and foresight to meet the needs and well-being of all our people.

By faithful administration and wise laws, may the rights of all be protected and may our Nation be enabled to fulfill Your purposes.

Give grace, O Lord, to these Your servants and keep our Nation under Your care. Lord, hear our prayer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK C. BYRD

(Mr. DERRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure today to welcome a very close, life-long friend as our guest chaplain.

The Venerable Frederick Byrd is the archdeacon of upper South Carolina and truly one of the State's outstanding religious leaders.

A native of Ridge Spring, the archdeacon attended Clemson University, where he served as student chaplain during his senior year. Following his graduation, he worked for 1 year for the Sergeant at Arms in the U.S. Senate. Later, he attended Virginia Theological Seminary in nearby Alexandria and received his B.D. and masters of divinity degree.

He began serving the Episcopal Church in Greenville, SC, became vicar in 1969 and was appointed archdeacon 10 years later.

His many diocesan activities are rivaled only by his civic pride.

The archdeacon is a highly esteemed clergyman among his colleagues and parishioners. He has touched countless lives—mine included—and he has my thanks for a very thoughtful prayer.

UNCLE SAM PLUCKED CLEAN

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, Aesop told us about a man whose hair was turning grey. He kept two mistresses, one younger, and the other older than himself. The young woman did not like the idea of having an older man for a lover, so she pulled out his grey hairs. The older woman was ashamed of having a younger man make love to her, and when he came to her, she kept pulling out the black hairs from his head. So between them, the two women succeeded in making this man completely bald.

According to a report in the Wall Street Journal, separate analyses by the White House Budget Office and the Senate Budget Committee indicate that recent declines in interest rates, oil prices, and inflation may make the budget deficit for fiscal year 1987 worse, not better as earlier projected.

Mr. Speaker, Uncle Sam has tried the high dollar, and he has tried the low dollar, both with the same dismal results in the form of devastating budget deficits and an astronomical public debt. Maybe if Uncle Sam settled down, and got married to a dollar of fixed gold value, then his newly found husbandry would save him from the ignominy of being plucked clean in plain view of the whole world.

THE ADMINISTRATION SHOULD TAKE ACTION BEFORE THE PEOPLES' CONFIDENCE IS LOST

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend a very courageous reporter. A reporter named Howard Kurtz has been doing all sorts of work in this town for a long time, about the standards of government, about the public trust, and about what it means to be in charge of the public money.

In the Sunday, April 27, Washington Post, he printed the whole long listing of senior Reagan administration appointees who have come under investigation, or have been accused of improper conduct, or who have resigned under fire, who have been dismissed, or whose nominations have been withdrawn or rejected.

The list was compiled by him from a review of past investigations by newspapers and wire service accounts, since President Reagan took office. It filled two pages in the Sunday paper.

I want to commend the Washington Post for printing it and I want to commend Howard Kurtz for having the courage to collect it all; and I certainly hope action is taken, because if we lose confidence in the people who are the trustees of this great Government, we are in real trouble.

REQUIRING UNITED STATES OIL COMPANIES TO CEASE OPERATIONS IN LIBYA

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, the President has identified Libya as the primary sponsor of international terrorism. Its leader, Muammar Qadhafi, has been responsible for the murder of innocent men, women, and children.

In response to Libya's attacks on Americans, President Reagan has ordered all Americans in Libya to leave that country. We have been involved in intensive negotiations with our European allies to convince them to bring greater economic and political pressure on Libya.

And, last week, the President committed United States military power to the fight against Libyan terrorism.

Yet, this administration has given its approval to five American oil companies to continue their operations in Libya.

These oil companies sold more than 100 million barrels of oil last year on behalf of Libya. This produced nearly $2 billion in revenues—the vast majority of Libya's cash assets. The money produced by those oil companies helped Mr. Qadhafi buy the missiles he used to kill two brave American pilots.

My distinguished colleague from Maine, OLYMPIA SNOWE and I will introduce legislation to require these five oil companies to cease their operations in Libya. I urge my colleagues to join with us in our efforts to deprive Qadhafi of $2 billion he needs to continue his murderous foreign policy.

Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman tell me whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] has been informed and agrees to this procedure?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield under his reservation?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the gentleman that with any assurance.

Mr. LUNGREN. Would the gentleman withhold the request so that we can check it out on our side for procedure?

Mr. FASCELL. Absolutely.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request temporarily.

NATIONAL NURSING HOME RESIDENTS DAY

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 264) designating April 28, 1986, as "National Nursing Home Residents Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 264

Whereas over one million older Americans reside in nursing homes and one in five older Americans likely will reside in a nursing home at some time;

Whereas nursing home residents have contributed to the growth, development, and progress of this Nation and, as elders, offer a wealth of knowledge and experience;

Whereas Congress recognizes the importance of the continued participation of these institutionalized senior citizens in the life of our Nation;

Whereas in an effort to foster reintegration of these citizens into their communities Congress encourages community recognition of and involvement in the lives of nursing home residents;

Whereas the Congress recognizes the importance of safeguarding the rights of nursing home residents; and

Whereas it is appropriate for the American people to join in support of nursing home residents to demonstrate their concern and respect for these citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 28, 1986, is designated as "National Nursing Home Residents Day", a time of renewed recognition, concern, and respect for the Nation's nursing home residents. The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my support for House Joint Resolution 533, the resolution authored by the distinguished gentleman from Florida and the former chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, Mr. PEPPER, which would designate today, April 28, 1986, as "National Nursing Home Residents Day."

I would like to commend Representative PEPPER for introducing this resolution. Today is a day for the general public to pay tribute to the past, present, and future contributions of our Nation's 1½ million nursing home residents. It is a day when we recognize that nursing home residents have made significant contributions to the growth, development, and progress of this Nation. We appreciate the fact that, as elders, nursing home residents offer a wealth of knowledge and experience.

It is my regret that I am not able to offer this statement of support in person, but I can assure my colleagues of an excellent reason for my absence. The House Select Committee on Aging's Subcommittee on Human Services, which I have the honor to chair, is celebrating National Nursing Home Residents Day by conducting a hearing in New York City in conjunction with New York's celebration of Nursing Home Residents Day which salutes New York State's 100,000 nursing home residents.

This hearing focuses on a major new report issued by the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Science entitled, "Improving the Quality of Care in Nursing Homes." The 300 page report ordered by Congress in 1983, following attempts by the administration to weaken the Government's system of protecting nursing home residents, represents the first ever independent national review of nursing home care and the role of government in assuring quality.

The overriding conclusion of the Institute of Medicine report confirms concerns that I and many other Members of Congress have had for some time. As the report states:

There is broad consensus that government regulation of nursing homes, as it now functions, is not satisfactory because it allows too many marginal or substandard nursing homes to continue in operation.

A second conclusion from the report states:

New stronger regulations focused on patient well being rather than on facilities and staffing are needed to assure that the 1.5 million residents in our nation's 15,000 nursing homes receive high quality care and experience a better quality of life.

The simple fact is that this administration for the past 5 years has weakened the Federal commitment to protecting nursing home residents when they should have been strengthening it. Additionally, all one has to do is remember the effort by the administration in 1982 to reduce the number of nursing home inspections. This is not satisfactory, and it is our responsibility as the Congress of the United States to work to change this, to go forward and adopt the recommendations from the Institute of Medicine Study, and to begin our quest for nursing home reforms.

Nursing Home Residents Day 1986 is a good day to begin this quest. The legislative and regulatory framework governing nursing homes has remained essentially unchanged for the past decade. It is time for the framework to adapt to modern times and respond to modern challenges.

I wish to take this opportunity to salute the outstanding work of two organizations, one national and one in New York City who have both been leaders as advocates for nursing home residents. The first is the National Citizens Coalition for Nursing Home Reform based in Washington, DC, whose efforts have produced a number of important reforms in place today in nursing homes. At the New York City level, I would like to salute the Coalition for Institutionalized Aged and Disabled and its executive director, Vic Rosenthal, who for the past 13 years have been in the forefront of leadership on behalf of nursing home residents in the New York Metropolitan area.

Finally, I would like to pay homage to the residents of nursing homes themselves who have enriched our lives and warmed our hearts. Passage of this resolution would symbolize the Nation's concern, admiration, and respect for these very special people.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in celebrating April 28 as "National Nursing Home Residents Day." This special day is aimed at the over 1.5 million older persons who reside in 15,000 nursing homes across the country.

While only about 5 percent of older persons live in nursing homes at any given time, about 1 in 5 will reside in a nursing home at some point in their lives. Most of these residents are disproportionately very old, female, and without a spouse. It is crucial that we work to assure their continued participation in the community and that we develop mechanisms by which to ensure that their rights and freedoms are extended despite institutionalization.

Beginning in 1983, because of growing concern over the process of certifying the eligibility of nursing homes, the Institute of Medicine [IOM] of the National Academy of Sciences undertook to study nursing home regulations. Their goal was to "ensure that any person requiring nursing home care be able to enter any certified nursing home and receive appropriate care, be treated with courtesy, and enjoy continued civil and legal rights".

While there are many fine, well-run nursing homes, if there is even one which provides inadequate or deficient care, then there are too many. For this reason, as the IOM study indicated, there must be greater, not less, regulation.

With that notion in mind, on February 27, 1986, I introduced H.R. 4279, the long-term care patients' rights bill of 1986. Nineteen of my colleagues joined me in taking this important step in protecting the rights of those who are most vulnerable—residents of long-term care facilities.

It is incredible that there are no Federal statutes which ensure the rights of residents in long-term care facilities. Currently, the only protection of rights for nursing home residents is found in regulations. Furthermore, it is difficult for residents to have their rights enforced when a violation occurs. H.R. 4279 establishes a multitiered mechanism of enforcement which includes the facility, the State, and oversight by the Secretary of HHS. In addition, there are provisions to prohibit discrimination by nursing homes against Medicaid recipients and to strengthen the role of the ombudsman with respect to access to records and individuals. In order for a State to receive Medicaid funds, the State must develop a plan whereby it will assure these minimum rights. By linking rights and enforcement to Medicaid, oversight is placed with the State rather than the individual facility. In this way, the enforcement of rights will apply to all long-term facilities regardless of the method of payment of the residents.

Nursing home residents continue to play an important role in the family and in the community. Thus, it is with great pleasure that I salute nursing home residents on their special day.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SEXUAL MOLESTATION OF MINORS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3826) to amend section 1153 of title 18, United States Code, to make felonious sexual molestation of a minor an offense within Indian country, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3826

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR FELONIOUS SEXUAL MOLESTATION OF A MINOR IN INDIAN COUNTRY.

Section 1153 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "felonious sexual molestation of a minor," after "involuntary sodomy," in the first undesignated paragraph.

SEC. 2. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

Section 1153 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by section 1, is further amended by—fense was committed as are in force at the time of such offense.".

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3826 addresses a problem of great concern to Indian tribes and organizations and to Indian people living on reservations. The problem is sexual abuse of Indian children. Under the present statutory scheme, to use the words of the Navajo Nation, "Indian children residing on reservations are not accorded the same protections as other American children."

A provision of Federal law known as the Major Crimes Act authorizes Federal prosecution of an Indian who commits certain "major crimes" against Indians in Indian country. The crimes listed in the Major Crimes Act include a number of sex crimes—rape, assault with intent to commit rape, "statutory rape," and involuntary sodomy. It does not include child sexual abuse, however. Thus, unless the offender's conduct constitutes one of the listed offenses, only the tribal court can try the Indian offender, and the maximum punishment that the tribal court can impose, no matter how aggravated the conduct, is 6 months imprisonment and a $500 fine. For this reason, the National Congress of American Indians last year adopted a resolution stating that "it is necessary and crucial to effective law enforcement on Indian reservations and to protect the mental health and physical well-being of Indians" that the Major Crimes Act be amended to permit Federal prosecution of serious child sexual abuse offenses. H.R. 3826 does just that.

The bill adds to the list of offenses in the Major Crimes Act the offense of "felonious sexual molestation of a minor," a term that is to be defined by incorporating State law. Since the term "felonious sexual molestation of a minor" is used in a generic or descriptive sense, the State law does not have to have that precise title in order to be incorporated. Thus, a State law called "indecent liberties," for example, would be incorporated. The bill also makes a number of technical changes in the Major Crimes Act that do not affect substance.

H.R. 3826 is supported by the National Congress of American Indians, the Navajo Nation, the American Indian Law Center of Albuquerque, NM, and the Quinault Indian Nation. It is also endorsed by the Department of Justice. A bill identical to H.R. 3826 except for the technical amendments unanimously passed the other body late last year. I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3826.

This bill, which is similar to legislation passed already by the Senate (S. 1818), would add sexual assault against a minor to the Indian Major Crimes Act (18 U.S.C. 1153), the law denominating several serious assaultive offenses occurring on Indian reservations as subject to Federal jurisdiction.

Crimes which are not listed in the Major Crimes Act are punished according to State law unless both the offender and the victim are Indian, in which case the offense is subject to punishment by tribal courts. Tribal courts, however, are limited to imposing incarcerative sentence of no more than 6 months.

Adding this offense to the Major Crimes Act would allow Federal courts to prosecute Indian as well as non-Indian sexual molesters of Indian children. The definition of, and penalties for, that offense would be as prescribed by respective State laws.

H.R. 3826 addresses a problem of great concern to Indian tribes and Indian people living on reservations; namely, the sexual abuse of Indian children. Under current law, Indian children are not accorded the same protection as are non-Indian children, making this bill necessary.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3826 is noncontroversial. It has the support of the administration and it deserves the support of this body. I urge its adoption today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, sexual abuse of children is, unfortunately, a tragedy of significant proportion in our country. It is a crime that occurs in all segments of the society and cuts across racial, ethnic, and economic lines.

I congratulate Congressman BOUCHER for introducing H.R. 3826, legislation to amend the Major Crimes Act to include the crime of "felonious sexual molestation of minors" on Indian reservations. I congratulate Chairman CONYERS for bringing it before us today. This bill closes an existing gap in the Federal legal system with regard to child sexual molestation, and is an important first step in dealing with this serious national problem. I am pleased to be cosponsor of this important legislation.

Recently, the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, which I chair, traveled thousands of miles, visiting reservations, schools, homes, and clinics. We talked to dozens of native Americans in our continuing effort to learn about families with special needs. At those hearings, we learned that Indian children are also falling victim to sexual abuse.

The Colville Tribe in the State of Washington reported to us that there were 3 child sexual abuse cases in 1983, 25 in 1985. Witnesses from other tribes, including the Pima and Maricopa from the Gila River Indian community in Arizona, reported that child sexual abuse is a growing problem on reservations.

Social service agencies and tribal courts are overwhelmed with cases, and tribal prosecutors, like the one I spoke with at the Yakima Reservation, are frustrated by their inability to impose more than a 6-month sentence for molestation cases not covered under Federal law.

The need to take steps to address the problem of child sexual abuse on Indian reservations was a recurrent theme in the site visits and hearings conducted by the select committee.

In New Mexico, Toni Martorelli, director of the New Mexico Governor's Office on Children and Youth, told the committee that when sexual abuse of Indian children occurs on the reservation, the institutional arrangements and legal authority are not present to deal with the abuse.

Washington State, recognizing the growing problems, recently awarded 3-year grants to three Indian tribes to develop child sexual abuse prevention and treatment projects. Testimony at the committee's Seattle hearing from the director of the Skokomish sexual abuse prevention and treatment project indicates that child sexual abuse occurs as frequently among the Indian population as the mainstream population. As the committee has documented, this means that one out of every four to five Indian girls and one out of every six to eight Indian boys is likely to be sexually abused before they reach the age of 18.

Additional testimony from a Skokomish Tribal Council member, who had been sexually abused herself at age 7, underscored the need to provide counseling services for child abusers. Ms. Lucy Peterson told the committee that the man who had abused her, and his adult son, were arrested for abusing two 7-year-old girls. Charges against the older man were dismissed. His son was convicted under the State court system, given a 6-month jail sentence, and no counseling. Expressing great frustration with this outcome, Ms. Peterson emphasized the need to educate criminal justice personnel at all levels about child sexual abuse, and to provide treatment services to help prevent further abuse once a perpetrator is released to the community.

Currently, those who molest Indian children on reservations can only be prosecuted under the tribal court system. Tribal courts may impose a maximum penalty of 6 months imprisonment and a $500 fine. Those who molest non-Indian children off reservations are subject to State law, which frequently imposes a much stiffer penalty.

H.R. 3826 corrects this inequity by designating child sexual molestation as a Federal crime, and allowing the appropriate penalty to be imposed under existing State law.

While urging select committee members to endorse the legislation under consideration today, Ms. Martorelli also warned that simple prosecution without treatment for victims and perpetrators does not solve the whole problem.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families has learned first hand about the rising tide of child sexual abuse among the Nation's Indian population. H.R. 3826 is an important legislative measure which can do a great deal to address this serious social problem.

In addition, I would hope that Members will also recognize that prosecution of offenders, while important, will not eliminate the problem of sexual abuse. As so many witnesses told the select committee, more needs to be done to prevent abuse from ever occuring, and treatment servcies must be made available to the offenders and their families.

I commend Congressman BOUCHER and Chairman CONYERS for their leadership in recognizing the need to close a gap in the Federal criminal law, and for taking action which will help protect Indian children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3826, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2998

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

The Victims of Crime Act of 1984 is amended by striking out section 1410.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2998 makes nonsubstantive changes in provisions of the Victims of Crime Act and in provisions of title 18 related to crime victims. The bill simply corrects typographical errors and cross-references, changes section and chapter numbers to eliminate duplication, and deletes a provision that makes a conforming change in a section that has been repealed. All the provisions of the bill are consistent with recommendations made by the Justice Department and have been reviewed by other interested parties. I am unaware of any opposition to any part of the bill.

H.R. 2998 bill is a noncontroversial, housekeeping measure. I urge support for it.

□ 1225

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2998.

This bill makes changes merely of a technical nature to the Victims of Crime Act of 1984.

The bill corrects obvious errors in style and cross referencing and is neither substantive nor controversial. The changes made by the bill are consistent with recommendations of the Department of Justice and have not been objected to by any interested party.

For example, it has been discovered that because of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 there are now two sections, 3671 and 3672. This bill would correctly redesignate these duplicate sections.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

There was no objection.

PATRICK HENRY HOME NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 187) designating Patrick Henry's last home and burial place, known as Red Hill, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, as a national memorial to Patrick Henry.

The Clerk read as follows:

S.J. RES. 187

Whereas Patrick Henry was a great orator and leader of the Revolutionary cause in the struggle for independence and in the establishment of a new Government of the United States of America; and

Whereas fifty years ago on August 15, 1935, the Congress authorized establishment of Red Hill, Patrick Henry's last home and burial place, as a national monument in tribute and recognition of his service to his country, and the authorization was repealed in 1944 due to insufficient appropriations during distressful times; and

Whereas the Patrick Henry Memorial Foundation in 1944 acquired Red Hill, located in Charlotte County, Virginia, and has both reconstructed his home and restored his original cottage law office and grounds as a shrine and museum, in commemoration of the entire life of Patrick Henry; and

Whereas Red Hill is listed on the National Register of Historic Places; and

Whereas the Virginia General Assembly, in its 1985 legislative session, has enacted Senate Joint Resolution 82, calling for national recognition and stewardship of Red Hill by the Federal Government; and

Whereas Scotchtown, Saint John's Church, and Hanover County Courthouse are designated National Historic Landmarks, due to their historical significance, integrity and representation of key moments of Patrick Henry's revolutionary contributions; and

Whereas May 29, 1736, was the birthdate of Patrick Henry, and Scotchtown, Saint John's Church, and Hanover County Courthouse and Red Hill are together planning commemorative activities for the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Patrick Henry's birth during 1986; and

Whereas it would be appropriate for Congress, as part of the 1986 commemorative activities, to honor for the benefit of present and future generations the entire life of Patrick Henry by a national memorialization of this American Patriot's burial place at Red Hill, where are also preserved his original cottage law office, his reconstructed home, and museum' articles depicting his life and work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the last home and burial place of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Commonwealth of Virginia, known as Red Hill, is hereby designated as a National Memorial to Patrick Henry, and shall be known as: the Red Hill Patrick Henry National Memorial. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to take appropriate action to assure that this Memorial is announced in the Federal Register, and that official records and lists are amended, in due course, to reflect this addition as being included along with other national memorials established by Act of Congress.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the owner of the property, is authorized and directed to place at the gravesite on or by June 6, 1986, the anniversary of Patrick Henry's death, an appropriate plaque or marker bearing an inscription commensurate with the contributions of Patrick Henry to the American Revolution and with the patriotism his words and deeds continue to inspire in all Americans: Provided, That the ownership of Red Hill remains non-Federal, and that the costs of such plaque or marker, and of its inscription and maintenance, as well as the costs of operations and maintenance for the estate shall be borne from non-Federal funds, services, or materials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 187 commemorates the life and achievements of American patriot and statesman, Patrick Henry, by designating his last home and burial place, located in Charlotte County, VA, as the "Red Hill Patrick Henry National Memorial."

This measure is identical to House Joint Resolution 373, introduced by our colleague DAN DANIEL. In addition to designating Red Hill as a national memorial, the resolution directs the Secretary of the Interior to announce the designation in the Federal Register, amend memorial listings to include the site, and place a plaque or marker at Henry's gravesite. The cost of the plaque or marker is to be borne by private sources.

The resolution before us provides that ownership of Red Hill remains non-Federal and that the cost of operations and maintenance for the estate shall be borne from non-Federal funds, services, or materials. The Patrick Henry Memorial Foundation, which has owned and operated the site for over 40 years, will continue to be responsible for the care and management of the estate under this resolution.

The Red Hill estate contains Henry's grave, original cottage law office and a reconstruction of the home he occupied from 1796 until his death in 1799.

Mr. Speaker, May 29, 1986, marks the 250th anniversary of the birth of this great American patriot. Passage of this resolution will be a timely contribution to the planned celebrations honoring the life and achievements of Patrick Henry.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly comment on Senate Joint Resolution 187, to designate the Red Hill Patrick Henry National Memorial.

This legislation, which has already passed the Senate, pays tribute to the numerous achievements and contributions of Patrick Henry by designating his last home and burial place, Red Hill, as a national memorial. While there are currently three national historic landmarks associated with the American Revolution patriot, Congress has never established a national memorial in his honor.

The bill requires placement of a plaque or marker describing Patrick Henry's contributions to our Nation, at his gravesite by June 6, 1986, the anniversary of his death. Furthermore, the bill requires that the ownership of Red Hill remain private and that no Federal funds be used for any costs associated with the memorial.

Mr. Speaker, Red Hill is currently listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The three historic landmarks associated with Patrick Henry—Scotchtown, St. John's Church and Hanover County Courthouse, have unanimously endorsed Red Hill's designation. Furthermore, numerous commemorative activities are planned for the 250th anniversary of Patrick Henry's birth in May. In addition, the bill enjoys broad, bipartisan support. Therefore, I feel it is entirely appropriate for Congress to honor the great American patriot Patrick Henry, through designation of Red Hill as a national memorial.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, in a day when we are lacking for many national political heroes, Patrick Henry strikes a pleasant memory in the minds of most of us.

His rallying cries in the tension-ridden days prior to the American Revolution brought hope to other colonists of less zeal and vigor and provided encouragement to the timid.

"I know not what course others may take, but give me liberty or give me death," he thundered from Richmond's St. John's Church—and because of his words, others were inspired to do more than they had set out to accomplish.

We live in such an era today, where the stakes are even greater than they were in the 1770's, and badly we need statesmen of his statue to sound the clarion call for action. We need men and women, imbued with his courage, vision, and wisdom, but even more, we need to recapture his singleness of purpose which recognized a job to be done and provided the resoluteness to do it. These were the times when leaders purposed to dedicate their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor—and they did. It required courage to do what they did—and once they begun, that cost ceased to be a factor.

How well the Congress could use some Patrick Henrys today. What an impact we could make—and how much clearer would be our call for rightness in the world.

Two hundred and fifty years have passed since Partick Henry was born, and the purpose of the resolution we have before us today is to establish a national memorial to one of the really great patriots of all time.

Mr. Henry would probably be pleased, too, that the memorial will not require the expenditure of Federal funds. It would be established at his last home and burial place—at Red Hill, in Charlotte County, VA. Each year, thousands of Americans and those from other lands visit the gravesite, his law office, and other points of interest at this historic estate.

Passage of this resolution would allow the placement of a plaque, designating Red Hill as a national memorial, and in so doing, we would further honor this great American on the occasion of his 250th birthday on May 29.

The Senate approved the resolution on December 3d last year and the Virginia delegation has worked in concert to further this cause. Our proposal has been endorsed by the Governor's Patrick Henry Memorial Commission and the governing bodies of the other three nationally-recognized institutions which honor Mr. Henry—St. John's Church, where he made his famous speech; Hanover County Courthouse, where he practiced law; and Scotchtown, where he lived earlier in his life.

Hundreds of Virginians and numerous interested organizations and individuals around the country have expressed satisfaction and support in this endeavor.

I know of no opposition, apart from the technical misgivings expressed by the National Park Service.

Actually, this recognition is long in coming. On August 15, 1935, the Congress authorized Red Hill as a national monument in tribute and recognition of Mr. Henry's service to his country. The late Senator Carter Glass, who sponsored the legislation, intended that the Government would purchase the property and maintain it under the National Park System. However, because there was no agreement on price and the project became bogged down, the authorization was repealed in 1944. The estate then was acquired by the Patrick Henry Memorial Foundation, and that organization has been maintaining it since.

The foundation's primary motivation is to inspire more interest in, and attention to, the life of Patrick Henry. It is felt that public attention which is drawn to his memory on the occasion of his 250th birthday will enhance interest in each of the sites which seek to honor his name.

We all benefit when we revisit the scenes of our former national achievements. Who is to say what the course of this Nation might have been without the leadership of Patrick Henry and others among the patriots who led that noble cause?

Our contribution, in keeping their memory alive, is indeed a vital part in perpetuating the objectives for which they stood.

I urge passage of the resolution.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate Joint Resolution 187.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Funds requested under this section shall be separately stated in the Service budget request as submitted to Congress under section 1104 of title 31, United States Code, and funds appropriated under this section shall not be used to offset or limit appropriations made to the Service under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13), or any other law. Funds appropriated under this section in any fiscal year shall be included in the base budget of the Service for the purpose of determining appropriations under this section in subsequent fiscal years.

"(3)(A) To the extent that all or a portion of the funds appropriated under subsection (h) are required to raise tribes which are below a level II deficiency, as defined in subsection (c)(2), to such level, such funds shall not be available for allocation to service units serving only tribes at or above such level. Funds appropriated under this section shall be allocated on a service unit basis. Apportionment of a service unit's allocation of funds among the health service responsibilities listed in paragraph (1) shall be as determined by the Service and the Indian tribe or tribes whose deficiency level was the basis on which the funds were allocated.

"Level V—81 to 100 percent deficiency,

"(3) The Secretary shall establish by regulation procedures which allow any Indian tribe to petition the Secretary for a review of any determination of the health resources deficiency level of such tribe.

"(d) Upon enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1986, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall take all necessary action, in cooperation with each Indian tribe, to bring current the tribal specific health plans which were developed as a part of the plan required by section 703 of this Act and which formed the basis for such plan in response to the requirements of section 701 of this Act. These plans shall be based upon the methodology submitted under subsection (c), as may be further modified through tribal consultation, and shall form the basis for the health services priority system report to be submitted by the Secretary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989. Such reports shall be submitted to the Congress not more than 30 days after the submission of the annual budget for such fiscal years to the Congress by the President.

"(g) The President shall include with the budget submitted under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for each fiscal year a separate statement which specifies the total amount obligated or expended in the most recently completed fiscal year to carry out subsection (d) and to carry out each of the subparagraphs of subsection (b)(1).

No part of the Fund or its administration shall be subject to contract or grant under any law, including the Indian Self-Determination Act (Public Law 93-638).

"(b) The Secretary shall, through the promulgation of regulations consistent with the provisions of this section—

"(1) establish a definition of disasters and catastrophic illnesses for which the cost of treatment, whether provided under contract or directly by the Service, would qualify for payment from the Fund; and which shall provide that a service unit shall not be eligible for reimbursement for the cost of treatment from the Fund until its cost of treating any victim of such catastrophic illness or disaster shall have reached a certain threshold cost which the Secretary shall establish at not less than $10,000 or not more than $20,000;

"(2) establish a procedure for the reimbursement of service units or facilities rendering treatment or, whenever otherwise authorized by the Service, the reimbursement of nonservice facilities or providers rendering treatment;

"(3) establish a procedure for payment from the Fund where the exigencies of the medical circumstances warrant treatment prior to the authorization of such treatment by the Service; and

"(4) establish a procedure that will assure that no payment shall be made from the Fund to any provider to the extent that the provider is eligible to receive payment for the treatment from any other Federal, State, local, or private source of reimbursement for which the patient is eligible or by which the patient is covered.

"SEC. 203. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary, acting through the Service, may waive any statutory or administrative requirement for competitive procurement of health services if, in the judgment of the Chief Medical Officer who will have jurisdiction over such health services, such competitive procurement would compromise the accessibility, quality, or continuity of health services or would not result in any appreciable competition or savings.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall reject any bid submitted under any statutory or administrative requirement for competitive procurement of health services upon the certification of the Chief Medical Officer who will have jurisdiction over such health services that acceptance of such bid would compromise the accessibility, quality, and continuity of health services.".

"(3) establish a schedule for the provision of such services by the Service; and

"(4) provide such services to Indians in accordance with such comprehensive plan and schedule.".

"(B) Indian people suffer an inordinately high incidence of disease, injury, and illness directly attributable to the absence or inadequacy of such facilities;

"(C) the long-term cost to the United States of treating and curing such disease, injury, and illness is substantially greater than the short-term cost of providing such facilities and other preventive health measures;

"(E) it is in the interest of the United States and it is the policy of the United States that all Indian communities and Indian homes, new and existing, be provided with safe and adequate water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal facilities as soon as possible.

"(2) Congress reaffirms the primary responsibility and authority of the Service to provide the necessary sanitation facilities and services as provided in section 7 of the Act of August 5, 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2004a).

"(b) Beginning in fiscal year 1987, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall develop and begin implementation of a 10 year plan to provide safe water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal facilities to existing Indian homes and communities and to new and renovated Indian homes.

"(c)(1) Within 60 days of the date of the enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1986, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the Service's sanitation facilities priority system. The Secretary, in preparing such report, shall uniformly apply the methodology for determining sanitation deficiencies to all Indian tribes. Such report shall identify the methodology for determining sanitation deficiencies; the level of deficiency for each Indian community or tribe; the amount of funds necessary to raise all communities to a level I deficiency; and the amount of funds necessary to raise all communities or tribes to a zero level of deficiency. For the purpose of such report—

"(2)(A) This section is not intended to diminish the primary responsibilities of the Indian community or tribe to establish, collect, and utilize reasonable user fees, or otherwise set aside funding, for the purpose of operation and maintenance of sanitation facilities.

"(B) The financial and technical capability of an Indian tribe or community to safely operate and maintain a sanitation facility shall not be a precondition for the provision or construction of such facilities and the Secretary may not require a tribe or community to accept a transfer of such facilities where he has determined the tribe or community does not have, or may not be reasonably expected to achieve, such capability.

"(e) Programs administered by Indian tribes or tribal organizations under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination Act shall be eligible for—

SEC. 708. ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS.

Title VII, as amended by sections 706 and 707 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SERVICE TO INELIGIBLE PERSONS

"SEC. 713. (a)(1) The Secretary, acting through the Service, may provide or authorize the provision of medical care, treatment, or benefits by the Service to persons who are not otherwise eligible for such services in health facilities maintained by the Service or contracted under the Indian Self-Determination Act (Public Law 93-638) or through contract health care services, subject to the limitations of this section.

"(2) Persons eighteen years of age or under who are the natural or adopted children (including foster- and step-children), legal wards, or orphans of an eligible Indian person and who are not otherwise eligible for the medical care, treatment, or benefits of the Service shall be eligible for all such services on the same basis and subject to the same rules as apply to eligible Indians until their nineteenth birthday. The existing potential medical needs of such persons shall be taken into consideration by the Service in determining the need for, or the allocation of, its health resources. Any such person who has been determined to be legally incompetent prior to their nineteenth birthday shall remain eligible for such services until one year after the date such disability has been removed.

"(3) Non-Indian spouses of eligible Indians or spouses of Indian descent who are not otherwise eligible for the medical care, treatment, or benefits of the Service shall not be eligible for the medical care, treatment, or benefits of the Service unless they are made eligible, as a class, by an appropriate resolution of the governing body of the relevant Indian tribe. The medical needs of persons made eligible under this subsection shall not be taken into consideration by the Service in determining the need for, or allocation of, its health resources.

"(b)(1)(A) At the request of the Indian tribe or tribes included within the service area of any service unit of the Service, the Secretary may authorize the medical care and treatment of otherwise ineligible persons residing within such service area in health facilities maintained and operated by the Service.

"(B) Persons receiving medical care and treatment under this subsection shall be liable for the payment for such services under a fee schedule adopted by the Secretary which, in the judgment of the Secretary, shall result in reimbursement in an amount not less than the actual cost of providing the service. Fees collected under this subsection, including medicare or medicaid reimbursements under titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act, shall be credited to the account of the facility providing the service and shall be used solely for the provision of health services within that facility. Fees collected pursuant to this subsection shall be available for expenditure within such facility for not to exceed one fiscal year after the fiscal year in which collected.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), where the governing body of an Indian tribe or, in the case of a multitribal service area, any Indian tribe revokes its concurrence to the provision of services under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary's authority to provide such service shall terminate at the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which such revocation was adopted.

"(B) In California, in the case of a multitribal service area, unless 51 per centum or more of the Indian tribes in the service area revoke their concurrence to the provision of services under paragraph (1)(A), the authority to provide such service shall not be affected.

"(3)(A) In the case of health facilities operated directly by the Service, such medical care and treatment may be provided under this subsection only where the Secretary and the affected tribe or tribes have jointly determined that—

"(i) the provision of such service will not result in a denial or diminution of services to eligible Indian persons; and

"(ii) there is no reasonable alternative health facility or service, within or without the service unit area, available to meet the medical needs of such person.

"(B) In the case of health facilities operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination Act, the governing body of the Indian tribe or tribal organization providing health services under a contract with the Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act is authorized to determine the eligibility for such services of persons who are not otherwise eligible for such services. Such determination shall be in accordance with the requirements of this section.

"(4) The Service may continue to provide medical care, treatment, and benefits to persons not provided service under subsection (a) or (b) to achieve stability in a medical emergency, to prevent the spread of a communicable disease or otherwise deal with a public health hazard; to provide care to non-Indian women pregnant with an eligible Indian's child for the duration of the pregnancy through post partum, or to immediate family members of an eligible person where such care is directly related to the treatment of the eligible person.

"(5) Hospital privileges in health facilities operated and maintained by the Service or operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination Act may be extended to non-Service health care practitioners. Such non-Service health care practitioners shall not be regarded as employees of the Federal Government for purposes of the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code relating to Federal tort claims except in the course of providing services to eligible persons as a part of the conditions under which privileges are extended under this subsection.

"RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 714. (a) Unless otherwise specifically provided, any restriction placed on the use of appropriations for Indian health services shall not be interpreted—

"(1) to apply to the use of funds other than such appropriated funds by an entity with a contract with the Indian Health Service;

"(2) to prohibit the support of litigation with such other funds; or

"(3) to prohibit the promotion of public support for or opposition to any legislative proposal with such other funds.

"(b) The Service may not offset or limit the amount of funds obligated to any entity under contract with the Service because of the use of funds, other than funds appropriated to the Indian Health Service, by such entity for the purposes described in paragraphs (1) through (3) of subsection (a).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4600, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the central purpose of H.R. 4600 is to deal with the critical health problems of Indian tribes and their members and to mandate badly needed reform in the administration of Indian health programs.

In carrying out this purpose, H.R. 4600—

Reauthorizes funding for the very popular and effective Indian health manpower programs and the urban Indian health programs;

Establishes a few new programs and efforts to improve Indian health conditions; and Makes basic reforms in the administration of Indian health programs by the Indian Health Service.

H.R. 4600 is the result of a compromise between the Interior Committee and the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Both committees considered and reported H.R. 1426 after a joint referral. However, each of the committees reported that bill with differing amendments. Those differences have been resolved in H.R. 4600.

In addition, H.R. 4600 makes significant reductions in the authorization levels contained in H.R. 1426. As reported, H.R. 1426 had an overall authorization level of $352 million over a 4-year period. H.R. 4600 has reduced that to $99 million over a 2-year period.

These reductions have been adopted for two reasons. First, it is a responsible action in light of existing budget constraints. Second, the authorization levels in H.R. 4600 are more realistic in terms of the historical level of appropriations for these programs.

Mr. Speaker, this Nation has a moral and legal obligation to deal effectively with the health problems of the Indian people. Despite that obligation, the health conditions among Indians are deplorable. One health professional appearing before our committee has likened health conditions among the Indian people to that of underdeveloped, Third World nations. That is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4600 is not a complete answer to the problems of Indian health and health administration. But it will, if enacted and honestly implemented, bring about positive improvement in Indian health.

I urge the members to support passage of H.R. 4600.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4600, the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1986.

As mentioned by my colleague, the gentleman from Arizona, H.R. 4600 is a compromise introduced by Chairman WAXMAN and Chairman UDALL containing authorization levels significantly less than either of the 2 committees put together last year.

The legislation reported out of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs had numbers about three times what are now in the bill.

During the markup of the Indian health care legislation, I introduced several amendments to reduce authorization for several of the titles of the bill. Some of these amendments were adopted by the committee, others were not. One of the amendments which I offered which was not adopted would have stricken the new authority for a catastrophic fund. I am not convinced that a catastrophic fund makes any sense. I am encouraged that the authorization of the fund has been reduced from $12 million to $3 million in this version, and other aspects of the bill have been reduced considerably, so the total funding is much less.

I do support the bill at the present time because they have made more sacrifices in other areas to make room for this new program. It is a revolving-fund program and if it does not work we can always drop it out of further versions later on.

Several of the new authorities contained in title VII of H.R. 1426 have been striken from H.R. 4600, which makes it a better bill. I do not think this is the time to introduce new programs into our operation and our fiscal restraint.

H.R. 4600 authorizes under $100 million over the next 3 fiscal years. In contrast, the Energy and Commerce Committee version was $212 million for the same fiscal years. This is a very significant reduction. In my memory, in the short time I have been here, this is the most conservative health care bill ever put out and brought to the floor.

The Indian Health Care Improvement Act, however, was first enacted in 1976. It was designed to bring the health status of American Indians and Alaska natives up to a level equal to that of the general population. We have made some progress in reaching that goal but must continue to fund specific programs to completely succeed. Passage of H.R. 4600 will go a long way in helping that process.

There is only one area about which I am disappointed, and that is in the funding of the Indian health programs. We had proposed in the Energy and Commerce Committee to give priority in funding to those States where Indians have received very little in the way of health care. In some States, the per capita care is very much lower than other States. That was taken out of the compromise bill. I am sorry that happened. I think we should have an equitable formula for funding our Indian health care needs.

I do, however, applaud Chairman WAXMAN and Chairman UDALL for recognizing the current fiscal climate and preparing legislation as responsible as this is.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the distinguished subcommittee chairman, without whose help we would not be here today.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4600, the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1986.

First let me thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Mr. UDALL, for bringing this bill before the House. This is yet another example of his longstanding leadership in assuring that the Federal Government fulfills its moral and legal responsibilities to the Indian people.

H.R. 4600 would revise and extend, for 3 years, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act. This legislation was first enacted in 1976 to raise the health status of American Indians and Alaska Natives to the level of the general U.S. population.

While there has been an improvement in the health status of Native Americans over the last 10 years, much remains to be done. In a recent report, the Office of Technology Assessment found that Indians still suffer from mortality rates that are higher than the national average. According to OTA, the most recent available data show that death rates were higher among Indians for liver disease, pneumonia, diabetes, kidney disease, homicide, suicide, among others. The Indian death rate from tuberculosis—a preventable disease that is almost unknown except among the homeless and Asian refugees—is seven times that of the U.S. population.

Clearly, this is an unacceptable situation. H.R. 4600 offers some remedies. It creates a framework within which the Federal Government can help the tribes to improve the health status of their people.

H.R. 4600 represents a compromise between bills reported out last May by the Interior Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee. It contains most of the provisions reported out by each committee, with one major exception: the authorization levels have been cut by 70 percent. Total authorizations in H.R. 4600 for the 3-year period are only $99.1 million.

This is the absolute base minimum that both committees can, in good conscience, recommend. The Native American population is desparately poor. The poverty rate among American Indians is more than twice as high as that among the U.S. population as a whole. In 1980, a staggering 45 percent of Indians living on reservations were poor. While some tribes may be the beneficiaries of oil or mineral wealth, this is a population that for the most part lacks the resources necessary to assure decent health status.

Chairman UDALL has already summarized the provisions in this bill. I would only note that the provisions authorized by the Energy and Commerce Committee are more fully explained in House Report 99-94, part 2.

I want to take a minute to highlight one provision of particular consequence.

First, the bill would extend current programs for health professions recruitment and education, in order to increase the supply of Indian physicians, dentists, nurses, and other health professionals. The OTA study found that the Indian Health Service is already badly understaffed, with 1,500 health professions positions unfilled in 1985. Without continued development of Indian health professionals, it will be even more difficult for the IHS to provide needed care to Indians living in remote areas where medical personnel are in short supply.

Second, the bill would establish a Health Care Improvement Fund, authorized at $10 million in fiscal year 1988 and $10 million in fiscal year 1989. The purpose of this fund is to identify the tribes with the greatest deficiencies in health care resources, and to target additional funds to those tribes. The OTA study found that the current allocation of IHS hospital and clinic funds among different tribes and different areas is inequitable. H.R. 4600 will not remedy this misallocation. It does not authorize any reallocation of base funding. However, it does require the IHS to rank the tribes by level of deficiency, and it does allow the Appropriations Committee to begin to direct additional resources to those that are worst off.

The bill would reauthorize the urban Indian health program, which provides outpatient health care and referral services to some 400,000 Indians through clinics in 37 different cities throughout the country. Eight of these projects are in California, which has the largest urban Indian population of any State, and more than one-fourth of all the urban Indians in the country. While the urban projects get much of their funding from other sources, such as private insurance, Medicare, and Medicaid, they would not be able to survive without the core funding that this program provides. H.R. 4600 would reauthorize the program at basically current services levels: $10 million in fiscal year 1987, $10.5 million in fiscal year 1988, and $11 million in fiscal year 1989.

Before concluding, I want to respond to the administration's criticism of section 704, which clarifies the eligibility of California Indians. The sole purpose of this section is to codify current IHS policy and practice with regard to who is eligible for IHS-funded services in California. This provision does not, and is not intended to, expand the number of Indians eligible for services in California. It is, however, explicitly designed to prevent the Department from stripping over 45,000 California Indians of their eligibility for health care by administrative fiat.

The numbers say it all. According to the Census Bureau, there are about 215,000 Indians living in California—more than in any other State. Of these, the IHS now considers only about 72,000 eligible for its services in California. That's only about one-third of all the Indians in the State. The proposed IHS regulations, which I understand are soon to be published, would deny even more Indians access to IHS-funded services, by limiting eligibility to roughly 24,000.

The IHS gives only one rationale for this drastic change in policy: Indian health funds are limited, so eligibility must be tightened. This is flatly unacceptable.

In its study, the OTA found that more specific eligibility criteria are needed. It is precisely that specificity that section 704 of this bill provides. Four discreet categories of California Indians are identified as eligible for IHS services: First, members of federally recognized tribes; second, descendants of California Indians who are members of the Indian community served by the IHS and who are regarded as Indians by that community; third, holders of certain trust interests; and fourth, individuals listed for distributions of certain rancheria and reservation assets. Those who meet these criteria are eligible for IHS services. Those who do not, are not.

The language of this provision is exactly the same as the language that was approved by both the House and the Senate 2 years ago.

The provision does not increase the number of Indians eligible for IHS services in California.

It will not require an increase in the amount of IHS funds allocated to the California area office.

It does not increase the cost of the bill.

All that it does is codify current eligibility policy and practice in order to prevent the Department from denying some 45,000 California Indians access to IHS-funded services.

Let me conclude with a few observations about this bill.

It has bipartisan support, because the health of Indians is not a partisan issue.

This bill has the support of Indian tribes.

Its cost to the Federal Government is trivial, but its importance to the Indian people is great.

Finally, this bill is long overdue. The Indian Health Care Improvement Act expired in 1984. The Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, under the committed leadership of Mr. YATES, has nonetheless continued funding for some of these authorities. Obviously, we cannot expect this arrangement to continue indefinitely. The time for moving forward with this reauthorization is now.

I urge you to vote to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4600.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I rise in strong opposition to the placing of H.R. 4600 on the Suspension Calendar. The Indian Health Care Improvement Act was enacted in 1976, and I quote, in "response to documented deficiencies in the health status of the Indian people * * *. In the view of the committee, the Federal Government has a legal and moral responsibility to assure that the health status of the Indian people is at parity with that of the general U.S. population." Mr. Speaker, those are lofty sentiments which I share. Those words are from the Committee on Energy and Commerce report on H.R. 1426—the bill we should in all good conscience be considering today. Instead, for several reasons I shall outline, we are considering H.R. 4600, a mere shadow of H.R. 1426, and of the original Indian Health Care Improvement Act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must adamantly oppose consideration of this legislation on the Suspension Calendar.

As chairman of the Republican Task Force on Indian Affairs and from firsthand experience visiting Indian reservations, I know all too well the health status of Indian tribes and their people. Based on the Constitution, historical development, treaties, and statutes, the United States has a legal obligation to provide adequate health care and services to the Indian tribes and their members. It is an obligation we have not fulfilled. Instead, H.R. 4600 would actually send a signal to Indian tribes—a message that Congress no longer believes it has a duty to Indian tribes.

I don't believe that this is the intent of Chairman UDALL and the members of the Interior Committee. We reported out a responsible piece of legislation, H.R. 1426, which clearly delineated what we believed were the priorities in Indian health and directions for the administration to follow in providing health care of Indian tribes. H.R. 1426 is a fine piece of legislation based on over 3 years of hearing, markups, and floor consideration. It is an improved version of the legislation vetoed by the President in the last days of the 98th Congress.

H.R. 4600 is a "gutted" version of the Indian health care amendments, and was done only for the purpose of meeting the House rules for getting on the Suspension Calendar. Let me illustrate—H.R. 1426 elaborately authorizes $352 million for Indian health programs over a 4-year period, H.R. 4600 authorizes $99.2 million over 3 years, and some authorizations are much too low to address real problems. For example, under the provisions of H.R. 4600, $6 million are authorized for the catastrophic fund. H.R. 1426 authorizes a fund of $12 million and amounts necessary to annually maintain the fund at $12 million. The purpose of the fund is to meet "extraordinary medical costs associated with the treatment of the victims of disasters or catastrophic illness." Again, I am quoting the Energy and Commerce Committee report. Mr. Speaker, the catastrophic provision in H.R. 4600 is a joke on the Indian people—it provides no catastrophic protection for these emergencies.

The question I have to ask, Mr. Speaker, is why? Why gut a bill to be on the Suspension Calendar? Why not allow the House the opportunity to debate and vote on any disagreements Members may have concerning different versions of H.R. 1426?

Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 4600 was formulated to avoid debate and a vote on what are referred to as the California eligibility issues. It is not a minor issue, as certain Members would have it. And the "Dear Colleague" letter put out by Messrs. WAXMAN and UDALL was incorrect about the administration's opposition to H.R. 4600. They stated that the President's veto statement cited two provisions as the reason for the veto in the 98th Congress. The President cited two major items and five other contributing items, including the California eligibility issue and please note that the administration has again sent a veto signal.

Let me briefly state why I oppose a change in the current law on California eligibility:

Indian tribes oppose the provisions—the National Tribal Chairman's Association and Indian tribes from Arizona, New Mexico, New York, Montana, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Washington, Oregon, North Carolina, and even California have contacted me about their opposition to these eligibility issues.

The Waxman provisions would allow Federal health benefits to thousands of persons who are not truly Indians and thus make it difficult for real Indians and tribes to achieve the stated goals of this legislation and the committee reports.

The Waxman provisions would provide a precedent for many individuals nationally to receive Federal funding without a historical or legal claim to those services, unlike tribes.

The Waxman provisions would change the basis for Federal/tribe relations from a political government-to-government basis to one based on race, which may, as a suspect classification, be subject to a constitutional challenge. I greatly fear that a "Bakke type" decision of reverse discrimination may result. Such a decision could endanger all Indian programs.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of my objections to the Waxman California issues and provisions. My objection today is that we, as a deliberative body, will not have the opportunity to debate and vote on these issues. In the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee we did debate and vote—and we voted these provisions out of H.R. 1426. I believe that the House would do likewise, if allowed to. However, we are not allowed such a debate. I strongly object to avoiding this issue. We are doing a disservice to the Indian people. We are giving the majority of Indian people only half a loaf to protect a group of people that do not have Federal recognition. In doing that we make a mockery of everything we do concerning Indians in which we require that there be Federal recognition. It is an insult to the intelligence of Indian tribes across the Nation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I oppose H.R. 4600 and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4600, the "Indian Health Care Amendments Act of 1986." As chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I would like to focus my remarks on title VII, section 702, "Juvenile Alcohol and Drug Abuse."

Drug and alcohol abuse among our adolescent population has reached epidemic proportions. The National Institute on Drug Abuse's annual survey of high school seniors indicates that more than 60 percent of the students surveyed had used drugs. While only a few studies have focused on subgroups of minority students, the available evidence indicates that drug involvement among Indian youth is very high, particularly for marijuana, alcohol, inhalants and stimulants.

Moreover, although the treatment admission information available is also very limited, indications are that the ratio of treatment in the Nation per 100,000 population is greater for American Indians than whites. The most commonly reported drugs of abuse are heroin, marijuana, PCP, and "other"—usually designating inhalants.

The need for drug abuse prevention and education programs—now commonly referred to as "demand reduction" strategies—across the Nation is generally accepted. I have attempted to address this problem in H.R. 4155, the "Drug Abuse Education Act of 1986." In order to provide such programs for Indian youth, several additional obstacles must be addressed. Section 702 begins to address the problem of providing drug and alcohol education and prevention programs for Indian youths by responding to some of those barriers.

First, no agency is designated to provide alcohol and drug abuse education for Indian youth. Rather, the responsibilities are dispersed among three agencies—the Department of Health and Human Services (Indian Health Service), the Department of the Interior (Bureau of Indian Affairs), and the Department of Education. Section 702, addresses the problem of coordination by mandating that the Secretary of Health and Human Services enter into an agreement with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Education to coordinate the efforts of their Departments related to alcohol and drug abuse among Indian juveniles. The agreement will provide for the identification and coordination of available resources and programs to combat Indian juvenile alcohol and drug abuse through prevention, education, counseling, and referral.

A second barrier to drug and alcohol education and prevention programs for Indian youth is the lack of teachers and counselors trained to deal with these problems. Section 702 also requires the three Secretaries to develop a program to provide training in preventive education, identification of abusers, and counseling techniques. This training would be made available to teachers and counselors in BIA schools, schools under BIA contract, and public schools on or near Indian reservations.

Third, essential to good programming and an effective response is an understanding of the problem and an awareness of what has worked. Accordingly, section 702, requires that the BIA, in consultation with the Indian Health Service review the relevant literature, including the literature on school curricula. This information would then be made available to the appropriate schools.

Fourth, section 702, addresses the problem of implementation. It provides for the establishment of an Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse within the Service. This office would be responsible for all Indian Health Service alcohol and drug abuse programs.

I would, however, emphasize that section 702 is just a first step in the fight against drug and alcohol abuse among Indian youth. Accordingly, it does not eliminate the need for comprehensive legislation such as H.R. 1156, the "Indian Juvenile Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act." This legislation, which I am proud to cosponsor, was introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska. It provides not only for drug and alcohol abuse education for Indian youth, but for treatment and rehabilitation, family services, and crisis intervention. By addressing the problems of resource coordination, teacher training, and the assessement of available information, section 702 lays the groundwork for such a comprehensive approach.

At this time, I would like to endorse strongly section 702 of H.R. 4600. Drug and alcohol abuse education and prevention programs for Indian youth are a special and critical need. Section 702 provides the necessary foundation from which we can begin to confront this problem. I would urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 2578.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, last May I introduced H.R. 2578, the Young Astronaut Program Medal Act. The legislation authorizes the U.S. Mint to strike medals commemorating the Young Astronaut Program. The medals would be sold to the nonprofit Young Astronaut Council at cost, plus a 10-percent surcharge. The council in turn will sell the medals to raise money to help fund the program.

The Young Astronaut Program seeks to prepare young people to meet the vast challenges that a technological future presents. Its curriculum stresses math and science concepts and is a valuable tool for elementary and secondary school teachers. The program will help make them better citizens and increase their skills in math and science.

As a former teacher in the Chicago high schools, I wholeheartedly agree with the objectives of the program. I am sure that the American people will continue to cooperate with the Young Astronaut Program, and that its achievements will reach the highest level.

Last September the council launched its "decade of discovery." This marks an exciting period during which the council will help our Nation's schoolchildren meet the challenges of today's emerging technology. The program will assure that America maintains its position as the world leader in science and technology.

Unfortunately, our children are woefully ill prepared for the future. They must master computers, lasers, robots, and microwaves: They must understand advanced math, physics, electronics, and the rest. This will be absolutely essential in the next decade: Otherwise they won't be able to operate the everyday equipment of the future.

We trail other industrialized nations in our relative lack of emphasis, curricula, and teaching of math and science. The National Institute of Education has concluded that the United States has less higher-skilled manpower than an information based, high technology society requires for the future. The Young Astronaut Program will help correct this deficiency.

To assist the council in meeting this goal and to commemorate the "decade of discovery," H.R. 2578 authorizes the U.S. Mint to strike up to 750,000 gold, silver, and bronze medals for the council to sell to the public. The council will pay the Mint for the cost of manufacture plus a 10-percent surcharge. The proceeds from the sales to the public will help the council fulfill its goal of having a Young Astronaut Program in every elementary and junior high school in America.

The terrible disaster that befell the Space Shuttle Challenger on January 28 was particularly disturbing to our Nation's schoolchildren. They had eagerly looked forward to hearing the first teacher in space give science lessons in space from the shuttle. Though their sense of loss is deep, their interest in space remains unquenched.

These medals and the program they commemorate and support are an appropriate memorial to the six astronauts and the teacher who rode with them on the brief and tragic final journey of the Challenger.

H.R. 2578 is cosponsored by 223 Members of the House. One of the House sponsors is the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] who serves as honorary vice chairman of the Young Astronaut Council. As we all know, Congressman NELSON has flown on the space shuttle, and I commend him for the time and effort he has put into the Young Astronaut Program. All the cosponsors recognize that this program, at no cost to the Federal Government, will help meet an important national educational goal.

Our children still look to space and space exploration for inspiration and wonder. The Young Astronaut Program capitalizes on that excitement to give them the math and science skills to reach the stars they gaze at. Passage of H.R. 2578 will help them fullfill the dream.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman ANNUNZIO in support of H.R. 2578, the Young Astronaut Program Medal Act.

This bill provides for the U.S. Mint to strike up to 750,000 medals for the Young Astronaut Council. The council will use these medals to raise additional funding for the Young Astronaut Program, as well as to help establish the credibility of the program. Since the Young Astronaut Council will purchase these medals from the Treasury at cost plus a 10-percent surcharge and will put up sufficient collateral to cover costs, this medal program will not cost the American taxpayer a cent.

Mr. Speaker, the Young Astronaut Council has embarked on an important mission that deserves our strongest support. The Young Astronaut Program, which the council administers, encourages American schoolchildren to reach for the stars through mastery of the science and math skills necessary to meet the challenges of a high-tech society.

Many American children now shrink away from math and science classes. Like the ostrich that hides its head in the sand to escape something it does not want to face, many of our young people hide their heads in the easy school courses to escape the rigors of math and science. This attitude on the part of our youth cannot be allowed to continue. If we do not adopt initiatives to encourage the mastery of the academic skills that underpin a high-tech society, our Nation will cease to prosper in a world increasingly dominated by technology.

The Young Astronaut Program is an important initiative which seeks to turn around this untenable situation. And although the program is less than 2 years old, it appears to be making progress toward realizing this goal.

I was particularly impressed by the testimony of a schoolgirl from Takoma Park, MD, who recently appeared before the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee in support of the Young Astronaut Program Medal Act. This young lady recounted how she used to dislike the study of science. Math was not one of her favorite subjects either. Then through her school, she become involved in the Young Astronaut Program, which uses the excitement of the space program to generate interest in the study of math and science. As a result of this program, science actually become her favorite subject. She now feels better about math too. I am confident that as this program is extended throughout our country, many other schoolchildren will have similar stories to tell.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the U.S. Congress is not the only Government entity taking an interest in this meritorious program. For example, in my own State of Indiana, Gov. Robert Orr proclaimed September 30, 1985, as Young Astronaut Day. This day was selected because it is the anniversary date of the establishment of NASA.

And so today, I call upon my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join Chairman ANNUNZIO and me in support of the Young Astronaut Program Medal Act. The launching of this medal program represents a small step toward preserving and promoting our prosperity in a world pervaded by technology, but it is an important one.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding.

Both the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois have spoken about the enthusiasm that is pervasive in the schools, and this is such an accurate statement. We were concerned right after this national tragedy that we all participated in whether or not it was going to have some kind of psychological scar on the school students all across this Nation.

My own personal experience, having been into a number of schools all across this land, is that it is exactly the opposite. The fact is just what the gentleman has said; the enthusiasm has come to the fore, and that is bound to have an effect as we realize we must make up for the deficiencies in math and science and the production of numbers of engineers that we have to have for the future of America, so much of which that future is going to depend on high tech.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to be here to join in helping to support this legislation.

My colleagues, Senator JOHN GLENN, Senator JAKE GARN, and I, are the honorary vice chairmen of the National Young Astronaut Program, so it is my delight to be here to thank both of these gentlemen for their initiative and their leadership in striking this medal in commemoration of the Young Astronaut Program.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2578.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1300

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1952) to provide for the striking of medals to commemorate the Young Astronaut Program.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

FEDERAL WORKERS, MEMBERS FACE DUAL RETIREMENT DEDUCTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to alert my colleagues to the fact that Federal employees—and Members of Congress as well—will, in effect, have their pay cut midnight Wednesday unless there is an agreement between this body and the Senate on a new supplemental retirement plan.

If we are unable to agree, those Federal employees hired after December 31, 1983, and Members will be covered both by Social Security and the Civil Service Retirement System. In effect, this will amount to a pay cut of almost 6 percent.

Congress, in 1983, passed legislation to extend Social Security to all Federal employees hired after December 31 of that year. The extension of Social Security coverage required that Congress develop a new retirement system for new workers and coordinate it with Social Security.

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service moved quickly and responsibly to develop such a plan, realizing that here was a golden opportunity to create a new pension system with the best features found in the private sector.

With this in mind, the committee employed Hay Associates, one of the Nation's most prestigious consulting firms in the area of private pension plans. At the same time, the committee asked the Congressional Research Service to conduct an exhaustive analysis of the key issues involved to help us put together this new system.

Next, the committee held several days of hearings and heard testimony from dozens of pension experts, personnel managers, and union representatives.

The result was H.R. 3660, the Federal Civil Service Supplemental Retirement System Act, which passed the committee last fall.

As chairman of the committee, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I believe that the understanding we have with the Senate on this bill is eminently fair and reasonable and a sound approach to melding two separate retirement systems into one. To achieve this, the committee worked long and hard, with able assistance from Congresswoman MARY ROSE OAKAR and Congressman GENE TAYLOR.

For months now, our committee has had discussions with the other body in an attempt to reconcile our differences.

The reason we are in this dilemma, I am told, is that the administration, which, for 5 years, has waged a war on Federal employees and retirees, insists on further reducing the cost—and hence the benefits—of the retirement system, ignoring the fact that Members of both the House and Senate with many, many years of experience in these matters have reached an informal agreement.

I want to point out that we already have reduced the cost. The plan we have under consideration would be less than 23 percent of payroll, compared to 25 percent under the current system.

Moreover, the cost to the Government will be 31 percent if we fail to reach agreement by midnight Wednesday.

This is indeed a complicated issue. And this is why, early on, we sought the assistance of Hay and the Congressional Research Service. I think now for the administration to play the role of obstructionist in an area that we have explored carefully and responsibly is unconscionable.

We have done our job. We have developed a fair and sensible plan. And we have reached an informal agreement with the other side. Given both the economics and the politics of the problem, this was no simple task.

Outside of the administration, there simply is no consensus to cut economic corners anymore.

Mr. Speaker, I bring up the matter only to alert my colleagues—and to remind them that whatever onus there is rests entirely on the shoulders of the administration.

I include here a copy of a letter I have written to Senator WILLIAM ROTH. I certainly hope that, before the deadline, we can resolve this problem.

COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE,
Washington, DC, April 23, 1986.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you know, our committees have been working diligently for several months trying to reach an agreement on a new retirement system for Federal workers whose service after December 31, 1983, is covered by social security.

Even though we have an informal understanding concerning most of the major provisions of the new retirement system, the conferees have not yet been able to meet and finalize an agreement. I am informed that the main reason for the continuing delay in resolving this issue is the Administration's desire to further reduce the cost of the retirement system.

The cost to the government of the retirement plan we have under consideration would be less than 23%, lower than the 25% cost of the current system and significantly less than the 31% of pay it will cost the government if we fail to reach agreement by midnight April 30, 1986.

Both the House and Senate Budget Committees are anticipating significant savings of $9 billion dollars over five years if we enact the new system under consideration. All of these savings will be lost if we do not meet our deadline and hundreds of thousands of Federal employees, including Members, will have their salaries reduced dramatically to pay for "double coverage".

I, therefore, request a meeting of the conferees so that both sides can have an opportunity to vote on a new system before the deadline.

A temporary delay or extension of the interim system is not a desirable option as we have expended an enormous amount of time and energy on our agreement.

Therefore, dual coverage will take effect on May 1 unless we can reach a final agreement in the next few days. I think you will agree that double coverage would be a most unfortunate result after all our efforts.

I feel constained, therefore, to alert the House leadership that double coverage at this point appears to be a very real possibility.

With kind regards,
Sincerely,
WILLIAM D. FORD, Chairman.

CHILD ABUSE—A NATIONAL PROBLEM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the month of April has been designated as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month." Too often we hear of incidents of child abuse occurring in our Nation today. Just one episode of child abuse is one too many, and it is our duty, as responsible adults, to make our children aware of this abhorrent problem so that they may protect themselves from this atrocity.

Child abuse occurs regardless of one's economic, race, and ethnic boundaries. Often the abusive parent was an abused child and, therefore, it is critical to provide help to the parent as well as to the abused child in order to break the cycle of abuse.

Now more than ever we are hearing about incidents of child abuse, because for the first time, the problem has been formally identified due to the long awaited attention it has received. Self-help groups have been formed around the country so that parents as well as abused children can receive much needed assistance. Parents can receive guidance from Parents Anonymous, a self-help group with a 24-hour hotline for parents in crisis. The toll-free number is 800-663-3520. In addition, the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse has chapters throughout the country. The main address is 332 South Michigan Avenue, Suite 1250, Chicago, IL 60604, telephone 312-663-3520.

In my own State of Florida, the 1985 legislature passed the Child Abuse Prevention Training Act of 1985, to provide assistance to school personnel in the identification and prevention of child abuse. This act also provides for training centers to provide information on prevention and assistance to local community personnel. I think it is vital that our Nation's schools and community officials be aware of this problem, for school officials spend quality time with our children, and should be trained to assist in the prevention of child abuse. Mr. Speaker, I am a cosponsor of several bills which would enforce strict penalties on child abusers and enact child protection reforms in our legal system for the abused child. In addition, I will continually offer my support, as should my colleagues, to the needs of the abused child.

SENATE—Monday, April 28, 1986

The Senate met at 11 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

I will sing to the Lord for He is highly exalted. The Lord is my strength and my song. He has become my salvation. He is my God and I will praise Him. My father's God and I will exalt Him.—Moses' prayer, Exodus 15:1-2.

God of Abraham, Isaac and Israel, on this fifth day of Passover, we remember Your great salvation and deliverance. We celebrate the liberation of the Old Testament people of God, and we worship You O Lord Who delivers all who seek You. We thank You, Lord, for the benefits which have accrued to the world through that emancipation. We thank You for the incalculable contribution the Jewish people have made to history, in music, art, drama, literature, education, science, technology, finance, and commerce. We thank You for their moral and spiritual influence in giving us the Bible, the Ten Commandments, the centrality of the family, and the Savior. We thank You for their resilience and perseverance century by century. Thank You, Mighty God, for what Passover means to all of us.

As we close this prayer, Heavenly Father, we pray for President and Mrs. Reagan in their travels. Protect them from danger, keep them healthy, prosper the purpose of this journey, and return them safely home. Likewise, we pray for those who accompany them—their support team, the press and media. We pray this to the glory of Your name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now recognizes the able majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND].

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each, followed by special orders in favor of Senators HAWKINS, CRANSTON, and PROXMIRE, with routine morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes.

Following morning business, the Senate will resume the unfinished business, Senate Concurrent Resolution 120, the budget resolution, and pending is the DeConcini amendment No. 1803.

By previous consent there will be no rollcall votes today, but we hope to be able to debate at least four or five amendments and have votes occur on those no eariler than 11 a.m. tomorrow, and I hope the votes would start tomorrow morning. We have 25 hours left on the budget resolution. It would be my hope that we can complete action on the budget resolution this week. We have a lot of work to do before the recess which starts in late May, May 21, and I will try to compile a list of what I consider to be must legislation which I will give to the distinguished minority leader so we will have it tomorrow when we have our discussions in both Republican and Democratic policy luncheons. So I would hope that we could have the cooperation of all of our colleagues.

One question I have been asked by a number of colleagues is, will we be required to come back Thursday, the 29th and Friday, the 30th, and I guess, as I have tried to indicate, the answer would depend on whether or not we have completed some of the legislative musts before that time. I know there is a great deal of interest, after the budget resolution has been disposed of, in a number of items I would hope to bring up. One is a simple sense-of-the-Senate resolution that is being blocked by someone, sponsored by 52 Senators, 31 Republicans and 21 Democrats, which simply indicates that the Farm Credit System should do certain things to help not only the System but to help borrowers, farmers, and I, for the life of me, cannot understand what has blocked that for about 3 weeks.

In addition there is a little bill pending which would provide opportunities for the two sons of the two pilots who lost their lives in Libyan raids to attend the Air Force Academy. That is being held up by someone. I am not certain whether we can move to that. But hopefully we can dispose of it.

There are other items that have been held for some time. We have the Newman nomination, which I think may be resolved. I have met this morning with the nominee, along with Senator HELMS, who has been holding that nomination. So there are a number of rather minor items that I hope we can dispose of between now and the end of the week.

There are some who would like to bring up the Saudi arms sale and there are just as many who would like to bring up the gun bill following the budget resolution. They are both privileged matters so perhaps we can work out some understanding with all the parties about when we might do these things.

I am advised the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Senator GOLDWATER, would very much like to take up the military reorganization bill. He believes that will take 2 or 3 days. There is still an interest in a trade bill before we recess and, of course, the supplemental appropriations bill and perhaps the Malt Beverage Act if we could do that quickly. I am not certain that can be done quickly. Senator GORTON, Senator MITCHELL, and others would also like a vote on daylight saving time. And also there is the drug export bill.

So I would suggest there are probably some things we cannot do, maybe other things will crop up we can do, but it is my hope that we can leave on the 21st with a feeling that we are pretty much on schedule. I assume we will be having a number of both authorization and appropriation bills when we return. It has also been the hope of the chairman of the Finance Committee that we would be in position to take up the tax bill following the Memorial Day recess, which would mean that we would have to complete committee action on the tax bill, of course, before the recess and give the drafters a couple of weeks, I would guess, to put that together.

In any event, I will try to furnish the distinguished minority leader a list no later than, say, 4 o'clock this afternoon.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRESSLER). Under the previous order, the minority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have listened to the distinguished majority leader. He has indicated that there are questions on both sides of the aisle as to whether or not the Senate will be in session on May 29 and May 30, Thursday and Friday, the last week of May.

It would be my hope that the distinguished majority leader could announce at a time soon that the Senate will not be in on those 2 days. There will be a number of Senators on both sides who will be traveling on official business of the Senate, and I would imagine that the attendance will not be the best on those 2 days.

So I think the earlier that the leadership on both sides can announce to our respective sides that those 2 days will be clear, the better it will be for Senators as they attempt to accommodate their schedules to the Senate program.

Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader also indicated that he might want to take up the nomination of Donald Newman. As he indicated, there are no objections on this side to proceeding with that nomination. So, at his convenience, we could move to that.

INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM AND CIVIL AVIATION SECURITY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the advent of international terrorism underscores the necessity for effective security at airports in the United States and abroad. The international community must act to prevent the sacrifice of the lives of innocent travelers at the hands of terrorism. Too often, in the aftermath of another bloody terrorist episode, we discover that lax airport security provided the opportunity for terrorists to carry out their grim mission of vengeance and death.

However, the problem of providing effective security for air travelers is not simply limited to airports outside the United States. It is a problem which has been given inadequate attention in the United States as well. Indeed, it is a problem of no small significance right here in Washington, DC. If we are not vigilant, this city, and the buildings in it, could easily become a prime target for terrorist activities.

For example, in January of this year, the Washington Post reported that the FAA police force at National and Dulles International Airports is understaffed, inexperienced, and suffering from severe morale problems. Low pay, according to the Post story, is one of the principal reasons for this situation, and has been attributed as the principal reason that the annual turnover rate for the FAA police had climbed to 66 percent.

Indeed, FAA police are paid less than members of seven other police forces in the Washington area. For example, the starting salary for the National Zoological Park Police is almost $3,000 per year more than the starting salary for FAA police. The starting salary for Alexandria police is about $6,000 higher. In other words, Mr. President, Federal police at the National Zoo are paid more to guard monkeys and snakes there than the FAA police officers who are responsible for the security of an estimated 50,000 ticketed passengers per day at the two Washington area airports.

According to a recent Washington Post story, the situation was corrected to some extent earlier this month when FAA Police were granted a pay raise of up to 22 percent. This action brings the starting salary for FAA Police within $500 of the starting salary for National Zoo Police. The new starting salary is still about $3,500 less than the starting salary for Alexandria Police. This special pay increase is not, however, permanent and must be reviewed annually.

Mr. President, there is an old saying which is well known to us all—you get just what you pay for. It would appear that bit of wisdom has been ignored for too long in this case.

With the increased concern over terrorism, the FAA has indicated a greater appreciation of the need to provide improved security for civil aviation in the United States. Following the hijacking of TWA flight 847 in Athens, Greece, last June 14, the FAA began to require pilots and flight attendants to undergo 8 hours of training in procedures to use against terrorists. Starting next year, pilots and flight attendants must undergo such training on an annual basis. Unfortunately, Mr. President, there may be less to this new initiative than meets the eye.

According to a recent story which appeared in the Dallas Morning News, the antiterrorist security training being provided airline pilots and flight attendants is a source of concern and derision. Furthermore, the effectiveness of the training program in preparing its students to handle a crisis involving terrorists is seriously questioned.

The FAA now requires that all pilots and flight attendants serving on international flights undergo 8 hours of initial antiterrorist training. Crew members on domestic flights must undergo such training by September 1. However, the Morning News reports, the security training program consists primarily of watching more than 5 hours of videotapes and working with written material for 2 hours. In addition, there is some discussion time and an open book examination. This security training package was approved by the FAA and put together by the Airline Transport Association, an airline industry group.

Accounts of the training sessions provided in the Morning News story indicate that needlepoint, reading books and newspapers, doing one's fingernails, or sleeping are the primary activities at many of the courses. One pilot indicated that his so-called instructor for the required course entered the room only to change videotapes.

Even though the Airline Transport Association now recognizes that there are problems with the program, an FAA spokesman is quoted in the Morning News story as saying that the quality of the program is very high, and that the FAA has "no reason to think that it wasn't very effective."

Mr. President, if the Dallas Morning News report is an accurate account of the situation, this is simply unacceptable. My colleagues, I am sure, share my conviction that the Federal Government should play a lead role in ensuring that American air travelers are protected from the attacks of international terrorists.

Mr. President, as we now know, there is a need for increased vigilance and attention to enhancing the security of major airports in the United States and abroad. This is another area of FAA responsibility which has been growing in importance as a result of recent events. Accordingly, I have written to FAA Administrator Donald Engen and asked him to conduct a thorough review of FAA Civilian Aviation Security Programs in light of the heightened risk of terrorist attacks at airports around the world, including major airports in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my letter to Mr. Engen and the articles from the Washington Post and the Dallas Morning News, to which I referred in my remarks, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
OFFICE OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER,
Washington, DC.

DONALD D. ENGEN,
Administrator, Federal Aviation Administration, Independence Avenue, SW., Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ENGEN: I am writing to ask you to conduct a thorough review of FAA's civilian aviation security programs in light of the heightened risk of terrorist attacks at airports around the world, including major airports in the United States. Such a review would be timely because there is speculation that the aftermath of the American action against Libya may involve an escalation of terrorist actions against innocent air travelers by those who direct such attacks.

I have been concerned by recent accounts in the media which indicate that there may be significant weaknesses in the FAA's efforts to provide civilian aviation security. For example, in January the Washington Post ran a story regarding the low pay of FAA police at Dulles and National airports, and the impact of the pay scale on the security at those airports. A recent Post article indicates that a special pay increase for FAA police at those airports has been approved. However, it appears that the new starting pay levels may still be below that of other police forces in the area. In addition, the Dallas Morning News recently ran a critical story on the FAA-sponsored anti-terrorist training program provided to pilots and fight crews.

I understand that these stories do not provide a full account of the work underway at the FAA in the area of civil aviation security. However, they do highlight some problems which should be examined closely. In view of increased tensions arising from the possible escalation of terrorist violence, it would seem that prudence would dictate a thorough review of FAA aviation security programs. Such a review should seek to ensure that FAA programs dealing with security personnel, procedures, and equipment are being implemented and developed in a timely manner to enhance the effectiveness of civil aviation security in the near-term, as well as the longer-term future.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

ROBERT C. BYRD.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 14, 1986]

FAA POLICE: LOW PAY, POOR MORALE

(By Michael Specter)

The FAA police force at National and Dulles International airports—responsible for ensuring the safety of more than 50,000 ticketed passengers each day—is understaffed, inexperienced and suffering severe moral problems, according to police officers, government officials and a recent General Accounting Office report.

With recent terrorist attacks at airports in Rome and Vienna, new demands have been placed on airport security forces in the United States. But this week there were 39 vacancies in the police staff that guards Dulles and National, said Federal Aviation Administration officials. Currently there are 100 active officers.

FAA officials and congressional sources agree that low pay has made it difficult to keep a qualified staff up to its appropriate level, but the FAA denies that there is any security problem at either airport.

"For years and years we have had such a bad pay scale that we just can't keep those jobs filled. . . . We have said it so long we sound like a broken record," said James A Wilding, director of the FAA's Metropolitan Washington Airports organization that operates Dulles and National. "But I would really like to make a sharp distinction between that frustration and anything I believe could be called a security problem. We feel very strongly about the security posture of these two airports."

Others, however, say that without a larger police presence, the FAA cannot adequately protect two of America's most prominent airports—facilities used daily by dignitaries.

Under FAA regulations, airlines handle screening of passengers and carry-on luggage at all airports in the country. But the airport operator—it is usually a city but in the case of Dulles and National it is the FAA—is responsible for other security measures, such as preventing people from gaining access to parked planes, enforcing laws and arresting people suspected of committing crimes.

A 1983 letter from four prominent members of Congress asked the GAO to investigate pay and staffing levels at the two airports because "we have received information indicating that public safety at National and Dulles airports is threatened by an underpaid, understaffed and overworked police force serving those airports."

The FAA and its critics agree that more than a year after that request was made and at a time when new demands are being made on airport security forces, pay and staffing problems for FAA police officers have persisted.

"When you talk about Dulles and National you are talking about a tragedy that is just waiting to happen," said Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-N.Y.), who said last week he soon will introduce legislation that would exempt the FAA police from budget cuts mandated by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget act. "Those airports have such high public visibility it is just outrageous that we allow this to continue."

Biaggi and others say the reason the FAA cannot recruit and retain an adequate force is that police officers are paid far less than they would receive in any neighboring jurisdiction. A 1985 GAO report also found that FAA police officers were paid less than members of seven other federal police forces with officers in the Washington area.

"You've got people guarding monkeys and snakes that make more money than we do," said Robert Tyng, a sergeant who has worked for the FAA for 13 years and now earns an annual base salary of $19,606. "The government looks at National Airport like it was a quiet little out of the way place where nothing happens. But the 1940's are over."

In 1985, the minimum starting salary for an FAA police officer was $14,298. By comparison, the starting pay for an officer with the National Zoological police was $17,221. In the nearby city of Alexandria, minimum starting pay for a new police recruit is $20,262.

Last fall, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole requested a pay increase of more than 10 percent across the board for FAA police officers.

The Office of Personnel Management cut the request, saying FAA police are not underpaid, but that other federal police officers are paid too much.

OPM has agreed to increase pay for low-ranking officers between 6 and 10 percent in the coming fiscal year. But as the GAO report points out, that will not nearly keep pace with other area police forces.

Interviews with many current officers at both airports confirm a finding of the GAO report: Morale among FAA police is poor. "Of 95 officers interviewed for the report, 76 percent said morale was "very low," 22 percent said it was "low," and 2 percent said they were "uncertain." No officer interviewed for the GAO report or by The Washington Post said morale on the force was good.

To compensate for the staff shortages, officers have been working vast amounts of overtime. In 1985, the police at the two airports earned almost $900,000 in overtime compensation, according to the FAA.

"We do not like to have people work that kind of overtime," said Wilding. "Those are nerve-racking jobs and we don't want people working double shifts. Right now, it seems the lesser of available evils to us."

Although many of the officers welcome the extra income, they say that in the long run that kind of overtime may cause more harm than good.

An incident last week at National frightened and angered several officers. A man was about to board a People's Express flight to Newark when a search of his carry-on luggage made officers gasp.

"It looked exactly like a bomb, it had fake dynamite, a clock and wires," said Lt. Alan Fahey, a day shift supervisor with the FAA police at National. "We were shocked and scared. We are spread so thin. This time it was a sick joke. Next time it won't be."

The man was arrested and later released.

"It's a very demanding job," said Lt. Thomas Holderness. "And then some jerk comes along with a wooden bomb. There is a feeling that something bad is going to happen.

"At Dulles, we are responsible for protecting about 12,000 acres. We also patrol many of the roads that come toward the airport. We want to do our job well, but it's hard when you work every day of your life. I have men who practically live on food stamps working at Dulles."

The number of passengers using Dulles has grown more than 100 percent in the past year and arrests there have increased as well. In 1985; there were 200 arrests at National and 100 at Dulles, according to rough figures kept by the police. Sixty-two people were charged with weapons violations at National in 1985. Statistics for Dulles are not yet available from the FAA.

There were 1,750 reports of incidents requiring FAA police investigation at the two airports in 1985, according to the station commander at National.

The FAA officers, who undergo eight weeks of training at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in southeast Georgia, are armed with .38 caliber revolvers.

"These are like little towns with transient populations," said Lt. Fahey. "Robbery, murder, theft and drugs. If you have it in America aren't you going to have it at the airport?"

"I know it sounds bad asking for more money," said one veteran of the FAA police at National Airport. "But we need it and if we don't get it we are not going to be able to protect the people who go through this terminal. I enjoy my job, but every once in a while I ask myself how much longer I can let this happen."

U.S. CITING SECURITY NEEDS, RAISES NATIONAL AND DULLES POLICE PAY

(By Michael Specter)

The Reagan administration, citing serious concerns over security at National and Dulles International airports, announced substantial pay increases yesterday for the federal police officers charged with ensuring the safety of passengers at both airports.

A senior administration official, who asked not to be named, said White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan personally endorsed the pay increases of up to 22 percent for the Federal Aviation Administration police force. Officers on the force long have contended they are so poorly paid that airport security is questionable. Tuesday, the day before a bomb exploded aboard a TWA flight over Greece, they mounted a renewed media campaign on the issue.

Administration officials said the decision to grant the pay increases came in response to a Tuesday letter from Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole and was not prompted by concerns over terrorism or the TWA bombing.

"Everyone in this administration from the president on down wants to assure that travelers at those airports are safe," Constance Horner, director of the Office of Personnel Management, said as she announced the raises.

The increases, ranging from $727 to $3,360 a year, have been sought for years by the FAA. Dole has said that low pay—no police force in the metropolitan area pays its officers less—has made it nearly impossible to retain qualified staff members for more than a year or two.

There are 97 officers and 37 vacancies on the force charged with guarding National and Dulles, the only two commercial airports in the nation owned and operated by the federal government.

Yesterday, in part because of new security measures that have been adopted to counter potential terrorists, police at National evacuated part of the North Terminal after bomb-sniffing dogs reacted positively to an unclaimed package in a bathroom. Police said the package turned out to be a pound of cocaine, surrounded by nitrate—an ingredient in gunpowder.

"We have been working hard on this security and pay issue for a long time," said Stephen Hayes, the FAA's assistant administrator for public affairs. "Of course, by itself the pay raise is not the whole answer to security, but it's an important step and we're very pleased."

Tuesday, the same day several FAA police officers called a news conference at Dulles to complain about security, Secretary Dole wrote Horner asking for immediate response to what Dole called "the critical staffing and pay problems that continue to exist" for police at the airports. She wrote that despite a small pay increase that became effective in January for FAA police, the turnover rate had climbed from 55 percent to 66 percent.

"The vacancy rate which FAA continues to experience despite the January salary increase clearly is unacceptable with the increased emphasis on security at our airports," the letter stated.

Yesterday's increases, most of which were for the maximum amount allowed under present law, are not permanent, according to OPM. As a rule, special pay increases are reviewed once a year and can be adjusted at that time.

In 1985 the minimum starting salary for an FAA police officer was $14,298. In January that figure rose to $14,578, and yesterday's announcement will put the salary at $16,723. By comparison, the starting pay for an officer with the National Zoological police is $17,221. In Alexandria minimum starting pay for a new police recruit is $20,262.

Under FAA regulations, airlines handle screening of passengers and carry-on luggage at all public airports in the country. But the airport operator, most often a city, is responsible for other security measures, such as protecting aircraft and enforcing laws.

"The men who guard these airports and the thousands of people who use them each day are finally being recognized," said Lt. Thomas Holderness, the FAA station commander at Dulles. "The stress and the overtime have been overwhelming and this should help."

At her news conference Horner said, "There is something wrong with the federal pay structure" when the law interferes with security needs.

ANTI-TERRORIST TEDIUM—AIRLINE CREWS DISDAIN REQUIRED SECURITY TRAINING AS BORING, UNHELPFUL

(By Tom Howlett)

At his government-required anti-terrorist training session recently, a captain for a major airline says, "the bits of information were so few and far between that people weren't even paying attention."

His instructor for the eight-hour course entered the room only to change videotapes.

"People were talking, they were doing other things . . . including reading the paper," the captain recalled. "I'd leave for 20 minutes at a time and take care of business. I'd come back into a bull session, with tapes running."

At her anti-terrorist training course, a senior flight attendant remembers, colleagues did needlepoint as some videotapes on terrorists from the early 1970s rolled.

It was kind of like sitting in your living room watching your favorite TV show. You could be doing your nails, you could be doing your needlepoint, or you could be reading a book," she said. "It's kind of sad, isn't it?"

Required for the first time this month "to protect U.S. civil aviation against international terrorism," the security training being given by airlines is a source of concern and derision among many pilots and flight attendants, who say they doubt they are now better prepared to handle such a crisis.

"Captains, are supposed to be the in-flight security coordinator and give a briefing to flight attendants. I don't even know what to tell them," said Roger Brooks, a Frontier Airlines captain. "It's a poor deal."

Recalling his required anti-terrorist training session, Braniff pilot Bill Burke said: "It was just kind of an insult when you've been flying for 28 years and somebody says, 'If you see someone with a gun coming down the ramp, don't let them on the plane.' Well, there's not a great deal you can do to stop the dang thing.

"You say, 'My gosh, what am I doing sitting here and getting this kind of nonsense.' "

The Federal Aviation Administration ordered the new training requirement last July after the June 14 hijacking of Trans World Airways Flight 847 in Athens.

Starting this month, all pilots and flight attendants serving on international flights need to have received eight hours of initial anti-terrorist training. Crew members on domestic flights must receive the training by Sept. 1.

In addition, airlines must give pilots and flight attendants recurrent training against terrorists on an annual basis starting next year.

FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said the quality of the new program has been "very high." "We have no reason to think that it wasn't effective," he said.

But the Air Transport Association, the airlines' major lobbying group, recommends the rule be withdrawn and revised and many pilots and flight attendants describe some training information as stale and the prevalent videotape approach to teaching unsatisfactory.

"We're the ones who are going to suffer the brunt of any terrorist activity, and I think there's something the airline industry could put together that would be far more informative and protective," said Lana Holmes, an Eastern Airlines flight attendant. "I found the videos were really not up to date as they should have been."

One flight attendant for a major airline said her anti-terrorist training session "was without a doubt the worst class in any area in any subject I have ever had. I am a college graduate, and that was the worst thing."

Complaints center on the common format for the training, which falls short of expectations of role-playing, drills and lively discussions.

Instead, most major airlines show crew members slightly more than five hours of videotapes and two hours of written material combined with discussion time and an open-book test, airline officials said. This FAA-approved security package was put together by the Airline Transport Association, which make it available to airlines for about $450.

Although video segments on bomb identification and terrorist profiles are engaging, much of the information is dated, too long and uninteresting, pilots and flight attendants said in interviews.

Classes often lack live instruction or discussion, and test-taking can become a group effort with answers shared, they said.

One problem lies with an overlong interview of a hijacker in prison, according to those who have received the training, and another film discusses a code word for terrorist situations that only applies to a couple of carriers.

At many airlines, pilots and flight attendants receive their antiterrorist training separately despite the need for coordination in the event of such a crisis.

"There isn't that discussion or opportunity to interact as a crew," said Nancy Garcia, director of health and safety for Teamsters Local 2077, representing flight attendants at Northwest, PSA and World Airways, "I think what people are really groping for is an opportunity to talk about the issues."

Airline representatives acknowledge problems with the program.

Tom Tripp, spokesman for the Air Transport Association, said his group collected videotapes from a wide range of sources simply to meet the eight-hour requirement established by the FAA, which has not offered guidance on what is needed.

"We've had absolutely no specifications or instructions or input from the FAA," Tripp said. "The truth of the matter is we still don't understand what is deficient in current flight crew member training."

The FAA denied it has failed to help, but would not elaborate.

At Southwest Airlines, which uses the Air Transport Association's combined video and homestudy program, Training Coordinator Jim Federer said. "Some of the good was probably lost because there was so much garbage in the information.

"Some of them (videotapes) are horrible, and others are excellent," he said.

But Southwest and other airlines use the association package despite its shortcomings because the costs of developing a new program and then seeking FAA approval make alternatives impractical, he said.

The key, he said, is lively instruction to supplement the videotapes and written work.

Braniff's Fred Stauffer, a captain who serves as director of training, agreed, saying the success of antiterrorist training depends on "getting them pumped up to see it."

Shortly after the airline started its security effort last November, one pilot "was so bored he laid down on the floor and slept."

Stauffer met with the pilot and sent him through the course again.

"We wouldn't put up with any foolishness because it's too serious to take lightly."

SHOULD SOVIET CHEATING END ARMS CONTROL PACTS WITH THE U.S.S.R.?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the charges of deliberate and wholesale cheating by the Soviet Union on arms control treaty agreements are becoming an increasingly serious threat to rational American military and foreign relations policies as well as arms control policies. If the Soviets are cheating as willfully and flagrantly as some Members of Congress and some Defense Department spokesmen contend, this country cannot and should not continue to negotiate arms control treaties. We should directly renounce the treaties with the Soviet Union we have signed. We should sharply increase our military buildup and raise our taxes heavily to pay for it. We should prod our allies to increase their military strength. We should recognize and accept the cruel and painful fact that arms control is dead and rely entirely on military strength.

On the other hand, if the Soviet Union has been generally complying with the arms control treaties, if the agreements have limited their military buildup significantly then our policies should be quite different. In the latter case we should honor and abide by the treaties. We should also push aggressively to negotiate new agreements that would limit the military buildup on both sides. If the Soviets are complying with the arms control agreements, the prospects for world peace and for relief for the immense burdens and dangers of the arms race are much greater.

WHAT IS IT?

So which is it? It is critical that we know the truth. We shouldn't permit our yearning for peace and reduced military spending to lure us into wishful thinking that the Soviets have been abiding by the terms of the nuclear weapons agreements, if they have not. On the other hand, we should not permit the understandable suspicion and distrust of our Soviet adversary, or our hatred of communism to push us into an automatic, kneejerking, flag-waving condemnation of Soviet behavior that ignores the facts. Regardless of our bias we can only serve the interests of our country if we insist on the truth and the whole truth. So what are the facts? Have the Russians been cheating so flagrantly that we should abandon arms control negotiations and concentrate on a military buildup? The heart of this problem, Mr. President, is whether Russian violations have had any real military significance.

SENATOR NUNN'S JUDGMENT

Fortunately, Mr. President, we have what I think most Members of the Congress will accept as a competent and reasonably objective authority on the facts. Senator SAM NUNN has earned the respect of all Members of this body as a military expert. On April 15, Senator NUNN wrote a letter to the President of the United States. Senator NUNN attached to that letter a chart summarizing the record of Soviet compliance with strategic arms control treaties. In that letter Senator NUNN specified three "clear violations" by the Soviet Union of strategic arms control treaties in the judgment of Senator NUNN. They were Krasnoyarsk radar, the SS-25 missile and encryption of telemetry.

KRASNOYARSK RADAR

In each of these cases the Russians vehemently deny that they violated an arms control treaty. I agree with Senator NUNN they did violate a treaty in each instance. But the violation in each case has little or no military significance. Furthermore in each case there is at least an element of ambiguity in the treaty that explains the Russian contention that they did not technically violate the treaty. The Krasnoyarsk radar is a violation because of its location. Such radars are only permitted under the ABM Treaty on the perimeter of each superpower. This Russian radar is nearly a thousand miles inside the Russian border. The Russians claim its purpose is not for detecting ICBM's which would be prohibited by the ABM Treaty. They claim it is designed only to detect satellites in orbit. At any rate the Soviet has not backed up the radar with anti-ICBM hardware capable of intercepting or otherwise stopping an ICBM attack. So the radar has little military significance.

SS-25 "NEW" MISSILE?

We construe the SS-25 as a "new" missile and therefore a violation of the SALT II Treaty. We so construe it because of its reentry-vehicle to throw-weight ratio, its concealment of its launcher and the use of the remaining SS-7 ICBM support system. Again I agree with Senator NUNN that this is, indeed, a technical violation. The Russians claim it is not a new missile. They argue that it is simply a replacement for the SS-11. They contend U.S. estimates of the SS-11 RV-throw-weight ratio was underestimated. They disagree on our charges regarding the use of the remaining SS-7 ICBM support facilities. Is this Soviet violation militarily significant? No. Whether the SS-25 is a replacement or a new weapon system adds little to Soviet strategic power.

ENCRYPTION OF TELEMETRY

Finally, how about the encryption of telemetry from Soviet weapons tests? Senator NUNN calls this a clear violation of the SALT II Treaty. Is it? Consider. The Second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) explicitly prohibits any encrypting (which is concealing by using a secret code) their telemetry (which is the transmission of testing data from weapons tests,) if that encoding prevents verification of compliance with arms control treaties. The Soviets argue that although they have encoded much data from tests, they have not encoded test data relating to verification. I agree with Senator NUNN that here again the Soviets have violated a treaty. I also agree with Senator NUNN's solution. He proposes that our response should be to put more resources into independent monitoring of their test performance, so that we don't have to rely on Soviet test data. It seems likely that we can verify testing data, independently of Soviet telemetry. If we cannot, we should insist on renegotiating the treaty to flatly and completely ban the encoding of telemetry period.

So in summary it appears that while each of these three Soviet actions appear to be a violation. None of them constitute a militarily significant advantage for the Soviet Union that this country cannot overcome.

SOVIET COMPLIANCE RECORD

In contrast to these three instances of violations, Senator NUNN provides no less than 11 examples of significant compliance by the Soviets with strategic arms control agreements. Most of these have serious strategic implications. Here they are: Reduced backfire bomber production rate to below 30 per year; removed prohibited SS-16 equipment at Plesetsk; observed the 150-kiloton nuclear testing limit; agreed to a new common understanding on concurrent testing of air defense and ABM components; complied with the 62/950 SALT I limit on SSBN's/SLBM's; complied with the SALT I limit of 1410 ICBM's; complied with the SALT II limit of 820 MIRV'd ICBM's; complied with the SALT II limit of 1200 MIRV'd ICBM's and SLBM's; complied with the SALT II limit of 1320 total MIRV'd SNDV's; complied with SALT II warhead fractionization limits; dismantled older SNDV's to remain within 2504 cap.

CONCLUSION: ARMS CONTROL IN U.S. INTEREST

Mr. President, it is clear from this record, as presented by Senator NUNN, that overall the Soviet Union's compliance with nuclear arms control treaties overwhelmingly outweighs its violations. It is clear that these arms control treaties emphatically serve the national security interests of the United States. This record provides the chapter and verse proof that it would be a tragic mistake from every standpoint for this country to renounce these strategic arms control treaties with the Soviet Union. On the contrary on the basis of the clear experience with the treaties we have negotiated to date, we should press ahead with further agreements to limit the nuclear arms race. In doing so we will save hundreds of billions of dollars. We will serve the interest of American freedom. We will make the world a safer place.

MYTH OF THE DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my myth of the day is that the vast majority of our Nation's nearly 8½ million unemployed workers are receiving unemployment compensation benefits.

Losing a job is a terrible blow to an individual and his or her family. Even under the most generous unemployment compensation programs, only a portion of a worker's salary is replaced by unemployment benefits.

Even with these benefits, the families of unemployed workers are often forced to postpone all but absolutely necessary spending and may have to go into debt. How much tougher the situation becomes if no unemployment compensation benefits are available while a worker seeks a new job.

This is why we should concern ourselves with the fact that there has been an astonishing decline in the percentage of those unemployed individuals who are collecting unemployment insurance benefits. If we look at the most recent statistics, we see that only 3.2 million of the unemployed, or a mere 38 percent, are currently receiving these benefits.

The declining coverage of unemployment compensation benefits is the result of a number of factors.

First, many States have severely tightened their eligibility rules for receiving UI benefits.

Second, the Federal Government has discontinued certain national programs for the long-term unemployed.

Third, two back-to-back recessions in the early 1980's left many workers without enough weeks on the job to qualify for coverage.

Fourth, a growing number of workers, especially women, are finding employment in temporary or other jobs which are not covered under the current unemployment insurance system.

Clearly, there are gaping holes in the unemployment insurance system safety net, and these gaps appear to be growing frighteningly larger.

SENATOR HAWKINS' SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand that the distinguished junior Senator from Florida Mrs. HAWKINS has a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] be permitted to use her time in her behalf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am speaking in behalf of Senator HAWKINS and delivering a statement prepared by her, entitled "Panama, the Giant Money Laundering Machine."

PANAMA—THE GIANT MONEY LAUNDERING MACHINE

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, Panama—known to every American schoolchild as the site of the Panama Canal, one of the great engineering marvels of our time—has emerged as the drug laundering capital of the western hemisphere. The enormous profits churned by narcotics trafficking require safekeeping, circulation, investment and sporadic movement from one location to another to accomplish specific objectives. Sometimes the money is used to invest in legitimate businesses or real estate, sometimes to buy more drugs or sometimes to oil the transportation machinery needed by the drug fraternity, things such as planes, boats, warehouses, or simple bribery of public officials. At other times the money is simply deposited in banks to earn interest, which later will be plowed into various enterprises. At times, it figures in foreign currency exchange or as a means to buy weapons and ammunition earmarked for terrorists or insurgent groups.

Panama's drug abuse problem centers on marijuana, cocaine, and paint thinner. Marijuana is grown locally and also is imported from Colombia. Colombia is the major source country for cocaine, consumption of which is increasing and causing concern to Panamanian authorities. Panama serves as a transfer point for narcotics moving from South America to the United States and for chemicals used in drug processing enroute from the U.S. and Europe to South America. Drugs come into Panama from light planes and small coastal vessels, and then are switched to other aircraft or vessels for movement to the U.S. Panama also serves as a warehouse for storage of drugs prior to shipment somewhere else.

Panama's main role in the murky world of international narcotics trafficking is as a giant money laundering machine. Some 120 banks operate in Panama with total deposits of more than $30 billion. Financial institutions are attracted to Panama because of favorable banking conditions, notably that profits earned outside of Panama are exempt from local taxation. In addition, Panama has strict banking secrecy laws, stricter even than those of Switzerland. Corporations can be set up quickly and easily and the American dollar is the currency of the day. All of these factors add up to a very favorable climate for money laundering of all kinds, particularly laundering the ill-gotten proceeds of the illicit narcotics trade. Most of the money enters Panama in bulk cash and leaves via electronic transfer. That marvel of the high-tech age allows for a lot of financial hanky-panky.

Other banking centers with tight secrecy laws, such as the Dutch Antilles, Cayman Islands, or Switzerland, have agreements with the United States to reveal financial records in major criminal cases. But with Panama, there are no agreements, and secrecy is absolute. Many of the bank accounts are numbered. And many bankers do not ask questions when armored cars pull up to their doors with suitcases or crates of $20 bills or larger denominations. Small wonder that drug traffickers are drawn to Panama's banking system.

The arrogance of drug traffickers has no bounds. In one instance, they brazenly set up their own bank. Gilberto Rodriguez Orjuela, a notorious Colombian drug smuggler, acquired controlling interest in the First Inter-Americas Bank of Panama. But his luck ran out. Spanish authorities jailed him and he is awaiting action on extradition requests filed by both Colombia and the U.S. The Panamanian Banking Commission, responsible for overseeing liquidation of bank assets, took control of the bank, which was literally awash in millions of narcotics dollars. A Banking Commission official remarked whimsically, "It's the first time in history that a bank was closed down because it was too liquid."

Another factor that makes Panama a haven for money laundering is the anonymity with which a company can be organized and the laxity of its financial reporting requirements. There are more than 150,000 corporations on file. It is easy to go into business. For a fee of $1,200, a local law firm will set up a paper corporation and name directors to the board to camouflage the identity of the real owners. The net result is that Panama is virtually a magnet for narcotics dollars looking for a place to hide.

Many of the large drug deals are made in Panama hotels, bars, and law offices. One senior law enforcement official observed recently that Panama "is not only the center of laundering proceeds, but it's a center for cutting the deals, for making payments, for meetings. It's like the corporate center for drug trafficking."

Mr. President, more and more I am convinced that we are not going to gain ground in the war against drugs unless Panama tightens up on its banking practices and banks are compelled to accept their social responsibilities in helping combat drug money laundering.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

TRIBUTE TO DR. LOUISE BRANSCOMB

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am proud to rise today to congratulate Dr. Louise Branscomb of Birmingham, AL, for her selection as one of the outstanding 100 women in Mission for the 20th century. Dr. Branscomb was one of 38 living honorees selected by the 1.2 million members of the United Methodist women organization for both pioneer and significant accomplishments through the organization. She has been recognized for the advancement of women in medicine, in the church, and in the community.

Dr. Branscomb graduated from Johns Hopkins University and practiced gynecology in Birmingham from 1931 to 1975. In 1944 and 1945, she served as a surgeon with the U.S. Public Health Service in North Africa and Greece. Then, during the 1960's, she initiated meetings on integration between church women and educators in Alabama, and served on the county interracial council and the mayor's interracial committee.

Throughout her life, Dr. Branscomb has labored to ensure that people are judged for their capabilities and contributions. Her efforts have been essential in guaranteeing that all people are given the opportunity to accomplish all that they can. Because of her excellent work and involvement many doors are now open which would be shut—countless people are contributing to society and their communities who might have been excluded. We are all at an advantage because of her labor. I commend Dr. Branscomb's courage, and dedication. She has set a great example for her State and her Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the United Methodist Christian Advocate be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the United Methodist Christian Advocate, April 18, 1986]

DR. BRANSCOMB HONORED AS OUTSTANDING WOMAN IN MISSION

NEW YORK.—Dr. Louise Branscomb of Birmingham has been nominated as one of the outstanding 100 Women in Mission for this century by the 1.2 million members of the United Methodist Women organization.

The honor, which is part of the organization's Centennial Era Celebration, was awarded to women active in United Methodist Women or its predecessor women's missionary societies.

According to the selection committee, "Limiting the number to only 100 does not obscure, but rather, emphasizes that those selected are representative of hundreds, perhaps even thousands, of other women very like them." The committee explains that the number 100 was set to emphasize the century of mission involvement." Those honored included pioneer "firsts" in mission and women with significant accomplishment through the organization.

Ms. Branscomb, one of the 38 living honorees, is a pioneer for women's rights in medicine, in the church and in the community. A graduate of John Hopkins University, she practiced gynecology in Birmingham, from 1931 to 1975 and served as surgeon in the United States Public Health Service in North Africa and Greece from 1944 to 1945.

During the 1960's, Ms. Branscomb initiated meetings on integration between church women and educators in Alabama. She also served on the County Interracial Council and the Mayor's Interracial Committee.

Currently, Ms. Branscomb is active in community institutions and organizations related to health, education and housing. Her biography will appear in They Went Out Not Knowing, an encyclopedia on the 100 Women In Mission, scheduled for release this month.

Dr. Branscomb has served as a member of the North Alabama Annual Conference from her church, McCoy United Methodist Church, for many years and was a delegate to General Conference in 1984.

TRIBUTE TO PATRICIA PATTERSON McKENZIE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is with a heavy heart that I rise today to share with my colleagues the passing of Patricia Patterson McKenzie, the mayor of Atmore, AL. Her death is a sad blow to the many, many people who knew her and who benefited from the great work that she did.

Throughout her life, Mrs. McKenzie was devoted to people. She once said that, "I've always tried to have empathy for all different groups of people and their problems." It was this concern for others and the ability to understand their needs that enabled Mayor McKenzie to bring them together, and to lead them to accomplishments which would have been impossible if attempted alone. She said that, "People can accomplish so much when they work together." Mayor McKenzie, however, was able to provide these people with guidance and leadership that was essential to the success of each goal that was set, of each objective that was undertaken.

Patricia McKenzie graduated from Murphy High School in Mobile, AL, and then earned degrees in psychology and sociology from the University of Alabama. She dedicated herself to public service from an early age. During World War II, she worked for the Air Warning Service in Mobile, and did volunteer work for the Air Force. Since then, she devoted her talents to many different causes and organizations. She was a sustaining member of the Junior League of Mobile, was an advisory member of the Atmore Junior Service League, was actively involved with the American Cancer Society, the March of Dimes, and was president of the United Fund of Atmore. In her service with each of these organizations, Mayor McKenzie added an interest and a zeal that insured results. Her contribution was great. Her participation was crucial.

After so many tremendous contributions, after helping in so many different areas, Patricia McKenzie ran and was elected to the Atmore City Counsel in 1972. Again, her energy and participation was immediately apparent, and her presence in municipal government was a great asset to her city. In addition to this service, she became involved in the Alabama League of Municipalities, serving as a director for 8 years, and was active with the National League of Cities. Then, in 1976, she became the first woman to be elected mayor of Atmore.

Mayor McKenzie was one of the most capable, competent government officials that I have ever known. Her popularity among her constitutents was evident from her three successful bids for reelection. Her accomplishments demonstrate her great effectiveness as a mayor. During her tenure, the city built a new library, improved and expanded their water system, installed a natural gas pipeline to guarantee uninterrupted gas to industry, provided for better parking, built a sewer treatment plant with 85 percent grant money, and spent $8 million in grant money to improve an ailing section of town. Additionally, Mrs. McKenize was instrumental in both persuading the Escambia County Industrial Development office to locate in Atmore, and in improving the industrial park. High on her list of contributions is the building of a new civic center. Construction has just begun on a center to be named in her honor which will provide facilities for entertainment and recreation for the city of Atmore. I am very sorry that she was unable to see it completed, for I know that it would have given her great pleasure.

Mr. President, each of Mayor McKenzie's tremendous accomplishments has greatly improved the condition of Atmore and enables the citizens to enjoy a better lifestyle. Additionally, these achievements have helped the city compete for new industry. Atmore is, thus, better prepared to face the future, to grow, and to prosper.

Throughout her life, Patricia McKenize possessed an indomitable spirit and an invincible optimism. She took great joy in life, and in helping others. When faced with the cancer that took her life, she demonstrated immense courage and perseverance. She never relented in her struggle, but tirelessly labored to enhance the welfare and well-being of all that she could. The city of Atmore, and the State of Alabama have lost a great citizen. I, and many others, have lost a great friend. However, her example remains to persuade others to become involved and to contribute to organizations, communities, and government. We should all strive to work as Patricia McKenzie did—to selflessly give of ourselves for the benefit of others.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the attached articles be included in the RECORD. They tell of Mayor McKenzie's life and achievements.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COURAGEOUS BATTLE OF ATMORE'S FIRST LADY

(By Kathy Jumper)

After 14 years in politics, Atmore Mayor Patricia Patterson McKenzie has finally slowed down. But not by choice.

She's been battling cancer since last June.

Her clear, blue-gray eyes shine with optimism. She props herself up in a hospital bed set up in her home. Blooming azaleas and family photos fill the room. A telephone, her link to the office, is a reach away.

Not being able to go to work hurts the most.

"That's what's so frustrating," says the 68-year-old Atmore native. "To be confined to bed and not be able to go to work and do any of those things. But you just have to live one day at a time; and make up your mind that you won't let it get you.

"I've had an extremely full life. But I don't think anyone's ever ready to turn loose."

In her third term as mayor, she learned she had cancer in her lungs and liver last summer. She had a remission in late September and promptly went back to work. But the day before Christmas 1985, she discovered the cancer had spread to her spinal cord. Today, she can't sit up or walk without help. Her stylish gray hair has fallen out from the chemotherapy.

But her spunk and fighting spirit remain. She keeps in constant touch with her office.

"I'm running things from my bed and with the mayor pro-tem, Eddie Staff," she said. "When it came time, when I couldn't do anything, I would resign.

"If I were well now, I'd be right down there, getting ready to go to Washington, D.C."

She's been on the go since her school days in Mobile. After graduating from Murphy High School, she earned a degree in sociology and psychology at the University of Alabama. She made her debut here and began a lifetime of volunteer work with the Junior League, Cancer Society and other organizations.

She came back to Atmore to nurse her ailing parents. She married an Atmore native and they had three daughters. Her family owned land and mineral rights there and after her brothers died a year apart, the family business became her responsibility.

"I missed Mobile a lot at first," she adds. "The many years I've made my life up here, I've enjoyed. I'm happy.

She was a 54-year-old grandmother when she decided to run for city council in 1972. "I didn't want to just play cards all the time," she said, smiling. "I thought I'd try it and see how I liked municipal government. I ran for council and really got interested. I started going to national conventions. I really got involved in the Alabama League of Municipalities. I've been a director for eight years."

The next step was mayor.

"I've worked hard in running for mayor," she recalls. "I was the first woman mayor of Atmore and there were not many women mayors in Alabama at the time.

Running a town was never a problem. "It depends on your attitude, whether you're reasonable and able to work things out," she said. "Sometimes, the worst mistake women make is to rush into a situation and prejudge things. And then hang onto that judgment and not be willing to give and take and see what the other side is talking about. I really tried to look at all sides and do what's best for the town as a whole."

The town of 10,000 has prospered with their lady mayor.

She—and the council's pluses include: improving the industrial park and bringing in new industry; building a sewer treatment plant with 85 percent grant money; persuading the Escambia County Industrial Development Office to locate here; constructing a new library; spending $8 million in grant monies to improve a predominantly black section of town; and gaining recent approval from state Highway Director Ray Bass to build the Jacks Spring Road interchange.

The city's most recent project is the building of a new civic center, which will be named after the mayor. "I think they thought I'd be dead by now," she quips. Construction starts next month. "Hopefully, I'll see the start of it and, hopefully, maybe the end of it," she adds.

Her most satisfying moments? She hesitates, not wanting to sound as if she's patting herself on the back. "I guess being reelected as many times as I have, it makes you feel good, she said. "You feel you've undoubtedly pleased your constituents.

"The fact that we've been able to work well with the school board, county school board and county commission has also been an upbeat kind of thing. People can accomplish so much more when they work together.

"I've always tried to have empathy for all different groups of people and their problems."

She's proud of her city. "You'll find Atmore a very friendly, warm town." she said, "There's a good cross section of population. Almost anyone can find a niche or group of people they can enjoy."

No regrets?

"No, not really," she says. "Sometimes, I think I neglected my five grandchildren a little bit. I don't guess I really did because they enjoyed having a grandmother that was a mayor."

ATMORE MOURNS THE LOSS OF ITS FIRST LADY

The City of Atmore suffered a great loss Wednesday with the death of Mayor Patricia Patterson McKenzie.

The 68-year-old mayor had been battling cancer of the lungs and liver since last June. In December, she learned that the cancer had spread to her spinal cord.

Mayor McKenzie died Wednesday at 4:05 a.m. at her home on Alexandra Drive.

Mayor pro-tem Eddie Staff Jr. said that she has "done an awful, awful lot for this town. She's irreplaceable." U.S. Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., described her as "a lovely, gracious lady and an effective, efficient government official. She was one of the finest city officials of the state and she will be sincerely and truly missed by many, many people including the people of Atmore and far beyond Atmore."

She was born December 5, 1917 in New Orleans, La. She was a graduate of Murphy High School in Mobile and attended Prep School-Ogantz in Pittsburgh, Penn., Sweet Briar College, and received her degree in sociology and psychology at the University of Alabama.

During World War II, she worked for the Air Warning Service in Mobile and did volunteer work for the Air Force.

She was married to John Albert McKenzie.

Mayor McKenzie was the first woman appointed to the Board of Directors at the First National Bank of Atmore which her father, Harry Howard Patterson, helped to establish.

In 1972, at the age of 54, she was elected to the Atmore City Council. She became involved in the Alabama League of Municipalities in which she served as a director for eight years.

She was elected the first woman mayor of Atmore in 1976. While in office she and the city council were involved in the improvement of the industrial park and the locating of new industry, the building of a sewer treatment plant with 85 percent grant money; spent $8 million in grant monies to improve a section of town; pursuaded the Escambia County Industrial Development Authority to locate its office here.

Other achievements by Mayor McKenzie and the city council include the improvement and expansion of the water system throughout the entire city and the lowering of fire insurance rates; the installation of a natural gas pipeline to guarantee uninteruptable gas to industry; the construction of the Brushy Creek Watershed to improve drainage in Atmore; the provision of more and better off-street parking downtown; improved railroad crossings at several streets; and the construction of new library.

Recent accomplishments were the gaining of approval from the state highway director to build an interchange at Jack Springs Road and the building of the new civic center which will be named after Mayor McKenzie.

The mayor was active in the community and state belonging to such organizations as the South Alabama Regional Planning Commission as a board member; the Planning and Advisory Board Community Action Agency; and the Policy Committee of the National League of Cities.

She was a board member of the Atmore Area Chamber of Commerce, an honorary member of the Atmore Pilot Club, a member of the Atmore Country Club, an advisory member of the Atmore Junior Service League, and a sustaining member of the Junior League of Mobile.

She served as chairman of the March of Dimes in 1970 and was the 1976-77 president of the United Fund of Atmore.

Mrs. McKenzie's personal philosophy was "Try to be tough and able to take it, but also be compassionate, and above all not vengeful. When things get really difficult, just stop and thank God for giving you one of the most interesting and challenging jobs in the world."

She was recognized as the "Citizen of the Year" by the Atmore Area Chamber of Commerce in 1979. In 1984, she received the Outstanding Community Leadership Award from the Alabama Cooperative Extension Service, and just recently she was awarded a Certificate of Recognition from the Alabama State Council on the Arts and Humanities at Montgomery.

Her hobbies include gulf fishing, bridge, hunting, and swimming in the gulf.

Services were held Friday, April 4, at Trinity Episcopal Church with Rev. Albert Kennington, Rev. Dave Dabria and Rev. Tim Kluppfenstein officiating.

Burial was in Oak Hill Cemetery with Johnson-Quimby Funeral Home directing.

Active pallbearers were John Garrard, Eddie Staff, Jr., Eldred Pritchett, Ralph Smith, Dr. J.B. Thomas, Ben Haley, Robin Swift, Jr., Hugo Esneul, James Dixon, and Billy Duffield.

Survivors include her husband, John Albert McKenzie; three daughters, Celine Wood Meador (Mrs. Aubrey Allen Meador) of Birmingham, Emilie Wood Mims (Mrs. John Clifton Mims) of Atmore, and Clarice Wood Horton (Mrs. Lowell Clinton Horton) of Gulf Breeze, and seven grandchildren, Ashley Alexandra Robinson, Jason Tucker Mims, Rachael Howard Mims, Alexandra Celine Givens, Celine Cathering Givens, Lowell Clinton Horton II, and Helen Anne Horton.

FUNERAL FRIDAY FOR ATMORE'S MAYOR PATRICIA MCKENZIE

ATMORE, Ala.—Funeral services for three-term Mayor Patrica Patterson McKenzie, 68, who died Wednesday morning at home with her family, will be held at 11 a.m. Friday at Trinity Episcopal Church on Carney Street in Atmore. The wake will be held at church from 2 p.m. until 9 p.m. Thursday.

Burial will follow funeral services at Oakhill Cemetery here.

Eddie Staff Jr., who served as mayor pro tem during Mrs. McKenzie's 10-month illness, said Wednesday the late mayor had "done an awful, awful lot for this town. She's irreplaceable."

Ann Staff, Mrs. McKenzie's secretary, said a Patrica Patterson McKenzie Fund for the Needy/Elderly has been established at the First National Bank of Atmore. Contributions may be made at the bank or at Atmore City Hall, c/o Ann Staff, fund director.

Mrs. McKenzie, an Atmore native, was told in June 1985 that she had cancer in her lungs and liver. On Christmas Eve she discovered the cancer had spread to her spinal cord. She was in her third term as mayor.

She was born Dec. 5, 1917, in New Orleans, La., and graduated from Murphy High School in Mobile. She earned a degree in sociology and psychology at the University of Alabama. She made her debut in Mobile and began a lifetime of volunteer work with the Junior Leauge, Cancer Society and other organizations.

She moved back to Atmore to nurse her ailing parents. She married an Atmore native.

In 1972, at the age of 54, Mrs. McKenzie was elected to the Atmore city council. While on the council she became involved in the Alabama League of Municipalities and was a director for eight eight years.

She was the first woman mayor of Atmore. She and the city council improved the industrial park; brought new industry to Atmore; built a sewer treatment plant; and built a new library.

The city's most recent project is a new civic center that will be named after the mayor.

In addition to serving as mayor for three terms, Mayor McKenzie served for many years on the First National Bank's Board of Directors. She also headed her family's mineral leasing business.

She is survived by her husband, John Albert McKenzie of Atmore; three daughters, Celine Wood Meador of Birmingham, Emilie Wood Mims of Atmore, and Clarice Wood Horton of Gulf Breeze, Fla.; and five grandchildren.

Mrs. McKenzie was the subject of a story published Sunday, March 30, in the Press Register's magazine, Port City.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the unfinished business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 120) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Pending:

DeConcini Amendment No. 1803, to increase budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 1987 for functional category 730, administration of justice.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself time off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it will be my intention to once again ask for a quorum call and ask that it be charged equally to both sides. I do want to call to the Senators' attention that while there is some time remaining on the DeConcini-Abdnor amendment, we will attempt to work out consent with the minority so that the remainder of the time will take place tomorrow morning immediately before 11 o'clock, to be followed by a vote.

That means we are going to open for other amendments this afternoon. It was the Senate's intention that amendments could be called up, even though they could not be voted on until tommorrow. Tomorrow's votes will be stacked in the order that the amendments came to the floor, or in an agreed upon order if such be different. We know there are some 12 to 14 amendments. We clearly would like to have some of them come up today. But in any event, we will be using time off the budget resolution, which I understand was 25 hours when we started 2 minutes ago.

Having said that, I urge Senators who have amendments to contact us to see if there is some way we can accommodate them this afternoon. By the time we get started tommorrow we will be down into the 18-, 19-hour range for all the amendments and for all remaining debate on the budget resolution.

Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1300

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside so I may call up an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1805

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress that funds deferred under deferral D86-37 and deferral D86-10A should be obligated immediately)

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICE. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. BOREN proposes an amendment numbered 1805.

Mr. BRADLEY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

SEC. . It is the sense of the Congress that the Congress intends to disapprove the deferral proposed in D86-37 and D86-10A.

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, the amendment I am proposing simply expresses the Senate's intentions to pursue an active policy with respect to the U.S. Strategic Petroleum Reserve. The amendment is cosponsored by Senators JOHNSTON, METZENBAUM and BORAN. The amendment would add to the budget resolution nonbinding language which would reflect the Senate's intentions to disapprove two deferrals of SPR funds totaling over $600 million. Last Tuesday, I introduced a sense-of-the-Senate Resolution which had the same goal. Senators MCCLURE, FORD, and WARNER were also cosponsors of that resolution and I hope they will join me in support of this amendment.

The Senate has voted repeatedly and consistently to support a substantial SPR stockpile. Quite simply, continuing to expand the SPR is good energy policy, it is sound national security policy, and it is prudent budget policy.

The U.S. oil market is a reflection of the world market: as world oil prices move, so do U.S. prices. This market orientation is the keystone of U.S. energy policy. U.S. prices no longer depend on the level of oil imports, they fluctuate based on the conditions in the world market. The danger we face from a free market policy is that sudden swings in price or supply—caused by panic, speculation or some natural disaster—can have severe economic impact.

The best way we have to cushion our economy from sudden changes is an adequate stockpile of oil in the strategic petroleum reserve.

This stockpile is an essential component of a sound national security strategy. As we have seen in the past, a swing in the market can also result from hostile action. Oil is a strategic commodity necessary for our military capacity as well as our industry. We have seen in the Iraq-Iran war that oil fields, refineries and tankers are prime targets for attack. A large SPR counters this threat to national security. Again, however, our confidence in the reserve is directly related to its size.

Investment in the SPR is a prudent budgetary decision. In today's oil market, with prices at an historic low in real terms, it makes no sense that the United States forgo this opportunity to increase our long-run security and add to the reserve. As an asset, the value of oil will only increase. I would not be surprised if future analysis showed that the taxpayer actually made money on SPR Oil purchases made today.

Finally, expanding the SPR will have a salutary impact on the economy of a number of hard-pressed States. We are all aware of the effects that the recent drop in oil prices has had on domestic producers: the layoffs in the oil-producing States, the shut-in marginal producers and the declining expenditures for oil exploration and production. We are also very aware of the immense beneficial effects of low oil prices on the U.S. consumers: heating oil and gasoline prices well under $1 per gallon, a Dow Jones average heading toward 2,000, and an enormous boost in our economic growth and low inflation—all stemming from the low oil prices.

This amendment puts President Reagan on notice that the Senate intends to take the one action which can benefit both consumers and producers. The over $600 million being deferred by the President could buy over 50 million barrels of oil. Such a large purchase would help stabilize oil markets. It would show producers that the U.S. Government recognizes a bargain and can act accordingly. Additionally, a larger SPR means increased energy security for domestic consumers. With over 70 percent of the world's proven reserves in the Middle East or Communist nations, the value of such security should be as obvious to the President as it is to the Congress.

The arguments are many, and the conclusion is not subtle. We need a large SPR and now is the time to fill it. President Reagan has the funds available to add to the SPR and he should use them. This amendment tells the President that, absent his decision to spend the funds Congress has already appropriated, the Senate will join the House in rejecting the deferral of funds for the SPR.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1350

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Later, the following occurred:)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand that Senator BRADLEY would be willing to dispose of his amendment at this time without a rollcall vote. Instead, we will adopt it by a voice vote.

While I may agree with the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey with reference to two strategic petroleum reserve deferrals that are alluded to in his sense of the Senate resolution, I was reluctant to proceed on the budget resolution because you cannot overturn deferrals in a budget resolution. An overturn of a deferral requires an act of Congress that must be signed by the President. So, on overturn of a deferral requires a legislative vehicle—normally, as the distinguished Presiding Officer knows, as part of an appropriations bill.

The distinguished Senator from New Jersey wants to use the budget resolution for a sense of the Senate resolution, establishing an intent that these two deferrals should be overturned. Since I do not think we should use the budget resolution in this manner, I obviously was reluctant to accept it, and I still am. But I understand that we have many things to do and that probably Senators may like to express themselves in favor of overturning these deferrals. As we proceed with a supplemental appropriation bill or other appropriate legislative vehicle, the Senate can decide whether to accept or reject the SPRO deferrals.

If we adopt this resolution, I am concerned other Senators would want to adopt similar amendments on other deferrals and hundreds of accounts that are handled by the administration one way or another. Therefore, I am reluctant to agree to adopt this amendment.

However, looking at it from the standpoint of the Senator from New Jersey and his persuasiveness—he probably would win tomorrow if we had an up-and-down vote—I have decided that, while I will oppose it, I would like to let it move through the Senate today.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee for his comments.

This is a statement of intent that when a vehicle does come along, we will move to essentially reject the deferral that the President has made in this area, thereby allowing over $600 million that Congress has already appropriated to fill the strategic petroleum reserve to be spent to put oil in stockpile, to hedge against the danger of an oil supply disruption, to be able to purchase that oil when it is very cheap, at $10 a barrel, and to provide for the national security of our country.

Mr. President, I am very pleased that the distinguished Senator from New Mexico has seen fit to accept this amendment. It is a very clear declaration of congressional intent.

I yield to the distinguished minority manager.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

I just want to say that I intend to vote with him on the amendment. I know he has long felt that now is the time we should do something. While it is not a binding amendment, I think it is an expression of the Senate, and at times when we have an opportunity to buy oil at a cheap price, the best protection this country could have would be to fill the strategic petroleum reserve.

I congratulate the Senator on the amendment. I intend to vote with him.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the Senator from Florida.

I expect that sometime in the next several months, there could be a consumer-producer coalition that could come behind this, when these funds are needed to assure the energy security and national security of our Nation, as well as provide a market for oil producers in this country.

So, Mr. President, with that stated, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 1 minute on the resolution.

Mr. President, I say to the Senator from New Jersey that if we could find some money to pay for increased funding for the strategic petroleum reserve, I not only would be in favor of overturning these deferrals but also buying more oil, not less. I have constantly favored the development of a strategic petroleum reserve. But, as Budget Committee chairman, I can state that we do not have enough money to pay for many of our programs unless we borrow it.

Frankly, with oil at the price it is and our producers in this country feeling the effects of this tremendous drop in price, just as the American people felt the tremendous consequences of the surge in price, I think everything ought to be done to minimize the long-term negative effects of the recent price decline.

I would not even be averse to raising new money to buy strategic petroleum, and I want the Senator to know that. He does not come from an oil-producing State, as I do, but he has been a staunch advocate of getting ready for the inevitable. I believe that the inevitable is not only an oil shortage some day but also that the time will arrive in the near future when the price of oil will be much, much higher than it is today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment (No. 1805) was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(Conclusion of later proceedings.)

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further time on the quorum call that I will put in at the conclusion of this unanimous-consent request be charged not against the Bradley amendment but rather be charged against the bill equally divided so that no further time will be charged against the Bradley amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1530

(During the call of the roll Mr. BOSCHWITZ occupied the chair.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk dispense with the further reading of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have been discussing with the minority and with the majority leader a unanimous-consent proposal that relates to the DeConcini amendment, and I would like to propound it at this time.

Mr. President, following morning business at 10:30 a.m. on tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time agreement on the DeConcini amendment, which has been temporarily laid aside, amendment No. 1803 to the budget resolution, as follows: Five minutes under the control of Senator RUDMAN, 5 minutes under the control of Senator DOMENICI, and 20 minutes under the control of Senator DECONCINI. I also ask unanimous consent that no amendments be in order to the DeConcini amendment, and following the conclusion of the 30 minutes above on the DeConcini amendment the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the DeConcini amendment No. 1803.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Reserving the right to object—I do not expect to object—are we to understand then that the amendment by Mr. DECONCINI will be the first matter of pending business immediately after the conclusion of morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair, and I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object for purposes of an inquiry, I had told the distinguished Senator from Arizona that I might table his amendment when it was appropriate. I understand there is no misunderstanding that a tabling motion would be in order under the unanimous-consent proposal as presently pending.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if I may respond to that, there is no misunderstanding on this side.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

GARRISON DIVERSION UNIT

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now turn to H.R. 1116, the Garrison diversion unit reauthorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not think there will be much time used. I do not intend to object. Will this time be charged against the time on the budget resolution?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed for 3 minutes not to be charged to the budget resolution.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1116) to implement certain recommendations made pursuant to Public Law 98-180.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the Garrison diversion unit is a reclamation and water supply project for the State of North Dakota that was authorized by this Congress in 1965. Since that time there have been some environmental questions and some questions from the Canadians. This body passed last year, Mr. President, a resolution calling for the setting up of a commission to restudy the report. That commission has acted. The report has been studied by the other body, and while the final results in the other body after 7 long months are not what we in North Dakota nor perhaps too many others would like, it is a compromise. It is the best package we can get and we would hope that we can pass it through the Senate because we are long behind the time that we needed to get it. There is a drop-dead date of March 31 on it. I appreciate the cooperation on our side of the aisle and I assure, Mr. President, the Senate that the senior Senator from North Dakota, my colleague, Senator BURDICK and I have worked, when I was in the other body and now here, together solidly for this project which has the bipartisan support of the people of North Dakota and is now supported by the environmental groups as well as the Canadians and the rest. I urge its passage and yield to my colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. The passage of this bill today means a great deal to water development in North Dakota and to the entire Missouri River Valley. The fact that it will pass by consent indicates the support this Senate will give to water development throughout this Nation. This is really a great day for North Dakota. It is a great day for the Nation. It is a great day for conservation and development of our water resources.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I move passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 1116) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDREWS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BURDICK. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The Senate continued with consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself time off the resolution. As I understand it, we are presently talking with Senator BRADLEY about his amendment, which is pending, because we have temporarily laid aside the DeConcini amendment. The Bradley amendment is a sense-of-the-Senate proposal, and I understand that he is either on the way here so that we might dispose of his amendment today without the need for a rollcall vote. Because of that and if I might have the understanding of my friend, Senator MELCHER, I am prepared to join him in asking that the Bradley amendment be temporarily laid aside so that the Senator might proceed with his amendment. If the Senator from Montana would agree with us that, in the event we can work out something to dispose of the Bradley amendment expeditiously and without a rollcall vote today, we would then return to the Bradley amendment.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will yield——

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. MELCHER [continuing]. I would be perfectly agreeable to such an arrangement and I am ready to offer my amendment now.

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I ask the Senator before we proceed with his amendment, is the Senator amenable to a unanimous-consent agreement with reference to reducing the 1-hour time which the Senator has on the amendment? We are clearly willing to waive a substantial portion of ours. Perhaps we can do that after the Senator has discussed the amendment a bit. I understand that we would be willing to reduce the time that would remain tomorrow before the vote to 10 or 5 minutes on our side. If the Senator would also agree to reduce some of his time on the amendment tonight, we would save that much more time.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, if the distinguished chairman will yield, I would be delighted to only use about 15 minutes today and relinquish all of my time other than reserving 15 minutes for tomorrow just prior to the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will work that out and propound the unanimous-consent request as soon as we have heard from Senator BRADLEY.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Bradley amendment be temporarily laid aside so that Senator MELCHER may proceed with his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1806

(Purpose: To transfer $21 million from function 50 (national defense) to function 270 (energy) to fund research and development of magnetohydrodynamic [MHD] generators)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] proposes an amendment numbered 1806:

□ 1540

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, line 10, strike "$295,100,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$295,079,000,000"

On page 6, line 11, strike "$280,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$279,979,000,000"

On page 9, line 16, strike "$4,900,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,921,000,000"

On page 9, line 17, strike "$5,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,021,000,000"

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to transfer $21 million from function 50, which is national defense, to section 270, which is energy. While this is a rather modest amendment transferring $21 million from the Defense Department to the Department of Energy, it is a very important amendment.

This amendment deals with magnetohydrodynamics. It is 20 letters in 1 word, which is always abbreviated to MHD. MHD is a method of generating electricity by burning fuel at a very high temperature in an electromagnetic field.

Farrady, in the last century, established the principle. Researchers have pursued its application since then, to make it practical, to make it feasible.

The pursuit of research in MHD has been principally in Russia, Japan, and the United States. Russia pulled ahead about 20 years ago, and it remains ahead now.

Their research and development and engineering applications in MHD are far ahead of ours. They have on line MHD generators which can generate electricity to be used commercially. We are behind in this regard; and while we have had probably the second spot in research and development for MHD, it is regrettable that we are behind the Soviet Union.

MHD is a highly efficient method of generating electricity. This process recovers about 50 percent more electricity out of a single unit of fuel than you can get out of conventional methods that are now used. The fuels that are used as feed stock in the MHD process are oil, natural gas, or coal.

Most of the research in the United States has been on the generation facilities for the use of electricity for commercial uses. This continues to be a very important part of our basic research for better utilization of fuels to create more electricity per unit of fuel.

But now MHD is becoming very significant for national defense as well, particularly in developing laser weapons to be used in space.

I must add right here, Mr. President, that the MHD units for this purpose would probably be much smaller than we have worked with to date. We are thinking in terms of 15 megawatts, and we are thinking of using solid fuels.

Returning, in general, to where the research has been conducted for MHD, let me list some of the institutions and some of the localities where MHD research has been carried out. The Department of Energy has Component Development Integration Facilities for MHD in Butte, MT. The University of Tennessee has done significant work on MHD research. The University of Mississippi had been involved in MHD research for about 30 years. Generally speaking, there have been contracts for MHD research in many other research institutions.

Some of the contractors that have been involved in MHD research are Avco, General Electric, Westinghouse, and TRW.

A few days ago, to be exact, on April 14, the Senator from Utah, Senator HATCH, brought to the attention of the Senate the MHD gap in national defense. The University of Tennessee Space Institute for a number of years worked with both the Army and the Air Force in the Department of Defense in pursuing MHD research applications that would be prudent and wise for national defense.

The MHD pulse generator is the one that the Air Force and others are most interested in developing. The Air Force continues to pursue it but without much vigor.

What Senator HATCH demonstrated in a statement on April 14 is that the Soviet Union, on the other hand, has pursued it with vigor in its own basic research and development for laser weapons in outer space. That is where the 15-megawatt pulse generator reference that I made earlier comes from. We believe, from information that we have from the Department of State and the Department of Defense, that the Soviet Union has been quite successful in building such a pulse generator.

So far, we have not. In fact, our research and development for MHD, in general, has waned during the past several years. We now see that it has no place in the President's energy budget for several years. It has been zero budgeted. In other words, there is no more research and development for the MHD process of any size, at least through the Department of Energy. That is a regrettable situation and one that must be reversed.

Congress itself has always appropriated money, about $30 million a year, during the past 3 years so that our basic research in MHD will not go completely out the window. We would continue it even though under a very limited amount of funds.

I think that, too, is a mistake. I believe it is absolutely essential that we heed the advice of Senator HATCH and others who have raised the question of why we are not pursuing it more vigorously for national defense purposes; that is, pursuing the basic research for MHD application for pulse generation to be utilized in laser weapons in outer space. This is basic research and one that should not be neglected.

I believe it is time that we take note of this in this budget resolution. The purpose of my amendment, although a very modest amendment, is to show the intent of Congress in adopting the budget resolution, that we want this work to be pursued by the Air Force, Army, and others in the Department of Defense, and to be carefully done under the auspices of the Department of Energy.

Let me explain. The Department of Energy is the body that should continue to have jurisdiction over this type of research and development because they have had jurisdiction over what has been done in MHD research to date. The Department of Defense would work with DOD and contract out the type of research and development application that should be carried out.

The research itself would be done through a number of different research institutions, and undoubtedly the University of Tennessee Space Institute would be involved, the University of Mississippi would be involved, and other research institutions in other parts of the country.

What is essential is that we renew our efforts as vigorously as possible and as soon as possible to see what application could be made of this process which is the most promising of energy research and development for certain applications of any that are before us now.

The MHD principle, well over a century old, simply has not yet come into practice as far as being practical, properly engineered, properly designed for purposes here in the United States. National defense is one of its important applications in terms of the pulse generator of a small size to be used with lasers, but there are many more applications to pursue, most of them of a peaceful nature.

We can no longer afford to ignore any of them but surely in a budget with $295 billion for national defense we can afford to take $21 million of that to direct at the proper application and proper use for research and development from the Department of Defense, transfer that to the Department of Energy, and pursue the goals for MHD.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself as much time as I use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from Montana, Senator MELCHER, that we are shortly going to propose a unanimous-consent agreement that will reserve 15 minutes for him and 15 minutes for the Senator from New Mexico in opposition, which will follow immediately after the disposition of the DeConcini amendment on tomorrow. We are waiting to clear that.

I do not want to use more than 15 minutes, at which time I will indicate why I oppose the amendment.

If the Senator from Montana needs additional time, I am delighted to yield the floor at this time. If he does not, while we are waiting for the unanimous consent, I would seek a quorum call and charge it to the resolution equally.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, if the chairman will yield, I seek no more time to discuss the amendment today. The proposal that the distinguished chairman has made for tomorrow is perfectly agreeable with me.

Mr. DOMENICI. I might just say to my friend from Montana, the unanimous consent that we will propose will leave the latitude for either an up-or-down vote or a tabling vote on his amendment. I hope the Senator understands we have made this arrangement on all the amendments and we make a similar arrangement on his amendment also.

With that, he does not have to wait here. The unanimous consent will be consistent with what I have told him. We will reserve him 15 minutes and we will have 15 minutes in opposition.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the chairman.

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that it be charged equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself time off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

U.S. DEBT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, sometime back I spoke here on the Senate floor about the tremendous growth of debt in the United States, individual debt, consumer debt, corporate debt, and last but not least, public debt of the United States in behalf of her people, that debt which now has surpassed $2 trillion.

I called the speech which I gave "Borrowed Money on Borrowed Time." I noted with interest that the distinguished Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Mr. Paul Volcker, testified before a subcommittee of the U.S. House, the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection, and Finance. In that testimony, which was delivered on April 23 of this year, the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System followed the same theme and the same thesis, using the most recent records and evidence at his disposal. His testimony expands on this tremendous phenomenon, which has occurred in the United States in the past decade, of increased corporate, individual, and public debt.

A number of interesting observations were made by the distinguished Chairman of the Board of Governors. While his entire testimony is not related solely to that issue, I find no way to separate out the part which is relevant to borrowed money and borrowed time. I think it is testimony of such relevance with reference to our debate here on the floor in terms of fiscal policy and the Federal Government's requirements to borrow money to pay for the things that we as policymakers, Congress and the President, determine that our people need. I ask unanimous consent the testimony of the distinguished Chairman of the Board of Governors as I have described it be made a part of the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY PAUL A. VOLCKER, CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

I appreciate this opportunity to discuss the rapid growth of debt in the United States and its possible implications for our financial markets and economy. As you know, this is a subject about which I have expressed some concern from time to time over the past few years, and I welcome an exploration of the many difficult and complex issues it raises. Given those difficulties and complexities, no single hearing can do more than identify tendencies, raise questions, and point to areas for further study. In that sense, this testimony is more descriptive than prescriptive, but I think it does suggest the importance of the subject.

The increase in indebtedness since the early 1980's certainly has been extraordinary.[1] The debt of domestic nonfinancial sectors—the measure of credit monitored by the Federal Open Market Committee—has increased at rates ranging from around 11 to 14 percent in each of the three years of the current economic expansion. This growth has been much faster than the nominal increase in GNP and income, breaking a pattern that had persisted through most of the postwar period.

Until the early 1980s debt and income expanded at roughly comparable rates over time, and the ratio of debt to income fluctuated at or just below 140 percent. Since then, however, as debt expansion far outpaced the growth of income, this ratio has risen sharply to almost 170 percent at the end of 1985. Historically, changes of that magnitude, up or down, are unusual except in highly disturbed economic circumstances—depressions, wars, or major inflations—not just in the U.S. but also, so far as comparable statistics are readily available, in other major countries. That itself raises questions as to what is different now.

In that connection, I should emphasize that there is nothing particularly significant or alarming, in itself, about one or another ratio of debt to income. Even if the statistics were fully comparable and accurate through time, there are a number of reasons why the ratios might change over time or between countries. One major influence, for instance, is the amount of financial intermediation characteristic of an economy. The data I just cited nets out debt of defined financial intermediaries—banks, thrifts, finance companies and other "financial" firms. But "non-financial" firms and governments both lend and borrow, more today than before, and, from one point of view, the related debt is double counted in the data. Stated another way, offsetting borrowings and loans on balance sheets of firms may not suggest the same risks and "leveraging" as borrowings not matched by comparable financial assets.

However, even after allowing for identified areas of double counting or greater intermediation—for instance, the spate of advance refundings late last year by state and local governments—the overall data do strongly suggest greater "leveraging" among borrowers; that is a larger burden of interest and principal payments relative to net worth and income streams. In the corporate sector, the same conclusion is implicit in the massive net retirement of equity recently, amounting to some $150 billion over the last two years, even though retained earnings have been rising.

The willingness to take on large volumes of additional debt certainly has not impeded the economic expansion. To some degree, the high levels of borrowing have helped support the spending needed to keep the economy growing. However, at some point a rising debt load is not sustainable. Debt cannot rise without limit relative to the income needed to service it, and increased leveraging implies smalls safety margins to deal with economic adversity. Consequently, continuing rapid growth of debt has disturbing implications for the fragility of the financial system over time, and the question is especially apropos at a time when certain important groups of borrowers are already under severe financial stress. The vulnerability of the economy to unanticipated increases in interest rates or a shortfall in income appears to be increasing, rather than the reverse. Surely we must be concerned about achieving a better balance in the sources of our economic expansion if we wish it to be sustained.

SOURCES OF CREDIT GROWTH

The very structure of the growth of debt in the last few years reflects underlying imbalances in our national economy. To a considerable extent, the unusually rapid growth of debt in recent years directly reflects the borrowing by the Federal Government to finance an unprecedented string of budget deficits. Usually, budget deficits and federal borrowing decline as the economy recovers from recession, boosting tax receipts. In the last three years, by contrast, the budget deficit has remained extraordinarily high during the expansion, and federal debt held by the public has grown by more than 15 percent each year.

The Federal Government is our strongest borrower, and an increase in the federal debt ordinarily would not connote greater weakness in our credit structure. Even then, however, the need to service that debt requires higher taxation than would otherwise be necessary—with consequences for economic efficiency—and pressure of government debt service have historically sometimes led to excess money creation and inflation.

Viewed from an economy-wide perspective, large borrowings by the Federal Government have typically been accompanied by small increases in private debt. In the current setting, however, borrowing by nonfederal sectors also has been unusually strong, with household, business, and state and local government indebtedness all rising relative to GNP.

In that sense, it's hard to see direct evidence of "crowding out" of private borrowing. In substantial part, the simultaneous rapid expansion of both federal and private debt has been a reflection of the relative ease with which this country has attracted savings and capital from other countries in recent years.

In effect, there has been a massive imbalance between the generation of loanable funds at home and the amount of borrowings. The resulting pressures on interest rates have been moderated by the capital inflow from abroad. But that inflow exacts a price. The net transfer of financial resources has been accompanied by a similar transfer of real resources to the U.S.—or to put it in more comprehensible language, record trade deficits. And we have, in the space of a few years, reversed our position as the largest world creditor (net) and are in the process of becoming the largest world debtor.

We don't want those developments to continue indefinitely—ultimately they are both politically and economically unsustainable. The willingness of foreigners to advance credit to the U.S. is not inexhaustible, and the capital inflow and related trade deficit has been maintained at the expense of our own manufacturing industry.

Moreover, for a country as well as an individual or business, rising debt levels imply greater obligations to make interest payments out of future income. This would be less of a concern if the foreign savings could be seen as being used to build up our domestic productive capacity, improving our prospects for growth and giving us a stronger base from which to make interest or dividend payments abroad. But with domestic investment spending relatively modest in recent quarters, it seems evident that in large measure the foreign lending is going, directly or indirectly, to fill the deficiency in domestic saving created by federal deficits. In a real sense, the rapid growth of federal debt and imbalance in foreign transactions has placed a mortgage on our future.

Perhaps the most striking evidence of greater willingness to incur debt can be found in the substitution of debt for equity associated with the wave of mergers, leveraged buyouts, and stock repurchase programs over the last few years. These activities resulted in the gross retirement of around $100 billion in outstanding equity of nonfinancial corporations in 1984 and again in 1985, funded in the initial stages primarily by new debt issues, amounts not nearly offset by new sales of equity.

The unusual volume of equity retirements may have accounted for roughly one percentage point of debt growth each of the last two years. While some of this debt may subsequently be paid down through sales of assets, or with equity obtained by sales of stock or internally generated cash flow, it seems clear that at least for some time a significant number of businesses will be carrying more debt, and therefore greater financial exposure, than if these corporate restructurings had not occurred.

These concerns are mitigated by the substantial profits and cash flow of many businesses, so that equity and cash cushions have been better maintained than debt data alone might suggest. Moreover, the recent surge in stock prices has greatly bolstered the market value of corporate equity—ratios of market valuations of corporate debt to equity have actually declined in the past year. Declining interest rates also moderate the debt burden. Nonetheless, the trend in debt creation, if extended, would imply some increase in financial risk for the economic system.

[1] The attached charts and tables illustrate various aspects of recent debt growth.

In the household sector, savings rates have been unusually low and both consumer and mortgage indebtedness has risen much more rapidly than disposable income. Some part of the rise in the ratio of debt to income for households—which stands at a postwar high—undoubtedly reflects lengthening debt maturities, shifting demographics, and greater convenience use of credit, rather than an underlying increase in debt burdens. Even so, it appears that households, like businesses, have become more willing to take on debt, at the expense of more vulnerable financial positions.

SHIFTING ATTITUDES TOWARD DEBT

The reasons for the apparent shift in attitudes are not easily identified and quantifiable. It is evident that the tax system favors debt over equity sources of funds for businesses through its differential treatment of interest and dividend payments. It also encourages household borrowing by allowing unlimited deductions for interest expenses. However, these provisions and their incentives have not substantially changed in the 1980s, and lower marginal tax rates tend to reduce the incentives.

The inflation experience of the 1970s probably had a profound effect on attitudes toward debt. During much of that period, inflation rates outstripped interest rates, making leveraged buying a seemingly attractive economic strategy. Some borrowers may have expected inflation to pick up again as the economy expanded after 1982, inducing them to buy in advance of price increases and in anticipation of repaying debts in dollars of lower real value. Perhaps they looked to some degree to the borrowing patterns of the Federal Government as justification of a view that debt creation is benign.

This tactic might have seemed quite risky and unattractive if borrowing had to be done at the high long-term rates prevailing over this period. But the greater availability of short- and floating-rate instruments reduced the risk considerably, since if inflation did not rebound, short-term rates would be expected to move lower.

The shift to floating rate instruments is but one example of innovations in financial markets that have played a role in supporting, if not encouraging, the growth of debt. The proliferation of techniques such as interest rate swaps, securitization of loan portfolios, and third-party guarantees may have given borrowers access to sources of funds that might otherwise have been closed to them, and reduced preceptions of risk. Many smaller or growing companies have long used low or unrated bonds as an important financing technique, and those securities clearly have a legitimate role in finance. But recent innovations, relying on the use of such bonds to finance large takeovers of well-established companies, seem to have opened new channels from lenders to borrowers, increasing the flow of credit for particular uses.

For intermediaries, the rapid development of secondary markets at home and abroad for loans of various types has enabled them to originate a far larger volume of credit than would be consistent with their own command over resources. In addition, concerns over exposure to interest rate fluctuations probably do not constrain asset growth at banks or thrifts to the degree they once did, given the greater opportunities to structure both assets and liabilities to manage the degree of interest rate risk.

At the same time, elimination of most deposit rate ceilings allows depository institutions to compete for funds for lending under a variety of circumstances, even if interest rates were to rise sharply. And the lifting of many usury ceilings has meant that lenders would continue to be willing to make credit available under such conditions. Thus, deregulation has substantially diminished the threat of constraints on credit availability as credit markets tighten, though it may also imply a wider swing in interest rates over the cycle.

From one perspective, these developments have increased the efficiency of our credit markets and improved the distribution of saving among competing uses. The greater variety of instruments available enables borrowers to tailor the maturity and other characteristics of debt to their specific needs or expectations. And with deregulation, borrowers probably feel a greater sense of assurance that funds will be available to roll over existing debt, even if interest rates should rise. On the supply side of the credit market, the ability of intermediaries to reduce interest rate risk, to compete for funds without regulatory constraint, and to replenish lendable funds through sales of assets probably has encouraged a more aggressive pursuit of lending opportunities and an eager embrace of innovative techniques to appeal to borrowers.

CONSEQUENCES AND CONCERNS

On balance, the net effect of shifting attitudes and financial innovation appears to have been to increase the expansion of private debt. Many of the particular techniques developed are designed to reduce risks for one or more of the parties directly involved. The larger question remains as to whether risks have, in fact, been reduced on balance for the financial system and the economy as a whole. The increase in total debt burdens, the longer and larger chain of transactions between ultimate borrowers and lenders with a diffusion and possible widening of credit judgment, the greater internationalization of the system all raise questions.

One thing seems reasonably clear. More of the risk of unexpected movements in interest rates has been shifted onto borrowers. Most recently, borrowers have benefitted from this shift, as declining interest rates have reduced their interest costs and enabled them to extend debt maturities at considerably lower rates than if they had been using long-term credit all along. But the strategy can, and does, carry considerable risk that an unanticipated rise in interest rates could sap the financial strength and creditworthiness of a substantial number of borrowers.

My general concern relates primarily to the degree to which the continuing buildup of debt may, as a by-product of eroding financial positions, leave a substantial number of borrowers so extended that they would have great difficulty dealing with unanticipated financial setbacks. Of course, borrowers ordinarily do not take on debt they expect, with any high degree of probability, will cause them problems ahead (although even that assumption may not be valid with respect to a relatively few depository institutions in hard-pressed financial circumstances that have been willing, in effect, to make high-stake gambles with insured depositors' money). Nonetheless, the larger the share of income devoted to debt servicing in relatively prosperous times or the smaller the equity cushion—and that has been the trend over rather a long period of time—the more likely is it that an unexpected shortfall in income or rise in interest rates will lead to problems in meeting obligations.

For individual borrowers, income could weaken owing to factors beyond their control, reflecting conditions in a particular region or industry as well as a general downturn in the economy. A substantial rise in interest rates could prove especially troublesome, given the still heavy reliance on short-term or floating-rate debt. Many borrowers may minimize such possibilities—and economic policy typically works to limit the risk. But all of history suggests it would be short-sighted to behave as if such possibilities did not exist.

The agricultural sector of our economy provides ample evidence of the effect of unexpected developments on highly leveraged borrowers. Those farmers who went deeply into debt in the late 1970s in anticipation of maintenance of higher land and crop prices are experiencing the most agonizing difficulties as these expectations are not fulfilled. Their problems in turn have serverely weakened a number of agricultural lenders.

Potential vulnerabilities are suggested not only by elevated debt-to-income ratios throughout the economy, but also by the deterioration or disappointing performance of certain more direct indicators of financial distress at a time of rising economic activity generally. Corporate bond downgradings, for example, have trended sharply higher over the past two years, reflecting in part concerns about the effects of additional leveraging on the financial strength of certain corporations. In addition, problems in the household sector are indicated by some upward tendency in delinquency rates on consumer and mortgage loans or other measures of financial distress during the expansion period.

In another vein, I addressed earlier some of the implications of our growing dependence on capital and credit from abroad. That is hardly a dependable source of financing for years to come, and indeed will shrink as our trade balance improves, as we hope.

I do not suggest that these developments point to some inexorable accumulation of debilitating financial difficulty. Indeed, there are a number of developments currently working in the opposite direction. Recent substantial declines in interest rates and increases on financial positions. The fall in rates by itself will reduce debt servicing burdens, and both firms and households have taken advantage of the considerable downward movement in long-term rates to lengthen the maturities of their liabilities, locking in lower rates and reducing exposure to an unanticipated rise in short-term rates. The higher stock prices are currently strengthening the financial positions of many individuals and companies. New stock issues have picked up. And recent regulatory and supervisory initiatives can help.

At the same time, enough has gone on, and continues to go on, to raise clear warning signals to justify further analytic effort, and to support action in areas where such action is plainly warranted.

ADDRESSING THE CONCERNS

We know enough to understand that disproportionate increases in debt extended over years do not constitute a solid, sustainable base for satisfactory economic growth and stability indefinitely into the future. Ultimately, debt can only be serviced from income. If that relationship is strained, financial pressures will jeopardize further growth in income itself, aggravating the difficulties. The time to act is before the strains become oppressive, not after.

The most direct step that can be taken by the government itself to address concerns about the growth of debt is to decrease, and eventually eliminate, the federal budget deficit. Such a course will reduce pressures on domestic credit markets, freeing domestic savings to be channelled into domestic investment and encouraging further restructuring of balance sheets through greater reliance on long-term debt and equity. By promoting better balance between spending and income domestically, it will also work to reducing dependence on foreign capital.

Some of these effects already were discernible as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation moved toward passage late last year; the improved outlook for budget balance appeared to contribute materially to the decline in rates on bonds and fixed-rate mortgages, in an environment in which the dollar was also depreciating toward levels more consistent with restoring the international competitive position of U.S. products. Concrete actions to implement the law will provide a constructive background for financial markets over coming years, partly by its direct effects and partly by reducing the chances of a resurgence in inflationary pressures.

Beyond that step, I believe the time has come for Congress to also address those elements of our tax code that so strongly favor debt finance. While that "bias" has long existed, other changes in the economic and financial environment seem to have had the effect of making it more important in decisionmaking.

The original Treasury tax reform proposal had some limited elements that moved in the right direction; they have subsequently been dropped or sharply diluted. One lesson, I suppose, is that no strong constituency has emerged for a reform with such diffuse and seemingly indirect benefits. But I also believe that other efforts to reduce excessive insignificance so long as that basic bias imbedded in the tax system exists.

I noted that deregulation and innovation may encourage growth of debt. Those changes respond to basic technological and competitive forces that cannot be denied. We can, however, respond in constructive ways, strengthening when necessary oversight of key markets and intermediaries so that they do not become the unwitting vehicles for the spread of problems through the economy.

To this end, the Federal Reserve, working in concert with other regulators of depository institutions, has stepped up its examination of banks and bank holding companies, tightened capital standards, and proposed keying those standards to the risk profile of the banks. We and the other bank regulators are also acting to deal with present points of strain, particularly in the agricultural and energy areas, through a variety of techniques. We have also joined with the other regulators in requesting that Congress extend and liberalize legislative authorization for interstate acquisition of troubled institutions.

These are essentially defensive measures, designed to keep immediate problems from infecting the financial system more generally by easing adjustments by individual institutions and local areas. They are not, and cannot be, a substitute for forward-looking structural change.

In that connection, it seems to me imperative to clarify and modernize the laws governing the structure of our depository and financial systems. Too often in recent years, old legislation has clashed with new market facts. Accommodation is achieved more by the exploitation of perceived loopholes in existing law than by a well-considered design of how we want the financial system to evolve. Distinctions among banking, other financial institutions, and commercial firms are fast eroding with little considered debate—and less action—to guide the process.

For a long time, as the result of the lessons of the past financial crises, the unique role of banking and the payments system in our economy has, in concept, been recognized through provision of a federal "safety net," backed up by special oversight and supervision. Today, the distinctions underlying that approach are rapidly eroding, raising new questions about our ability to maintain the stability of the whole. The situation cries out for review and for new laws, adapted to the problem of today and tomorrow.

Nor can we evade a review of the basic safeguards and trading practices in other key sectors of financial markets, given the complex interdependencies that exist. One specific example came to your attention last year, and the Committee responded by providing a legislative framework for limited surveillance and regulation of the government securities market. As you know, action has not yet been completed on that matter.

CONCLUSION

In one sense, the extraordinary volume of credit flows in recent years is a tribute to the efficiency and innovative instincts of financial intermediaries, borrowers, and lenders alike. There has been rapid and effective response to new technological possibilities.

Those same developments also highlight the complex interactions involved and the new interdependencies created. And, in the end, credit creation is constructive only to the extent the obligations are manageable in relation to income.

It is in those areas that questions arise.

I must emphasize that the government can take a number of basic steps to address concerns about the rapid growth of debt. These include, most importantly, a balanced approach to economic policy, including cutting excessive budget deficits and a fresh look at some important provisions of the tax code. Government must also provide a supervisory and regulatory structure to promote a sound financial system.

Ultimately, and quite properly in our free market economy, the strength of our financial system must also ultimately rest on the prudent decisions of private parties. Borrowers and lenders must recognize risks and act to manage them. In such a context, the growth of debt would hold no concerns for us, but rather would be seen as an integral part of a healthy and active economy.

THE BUDGET RESOLUTION

(By request of Mr. BYRD, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, this year marks the 40th anniversary of the Employment Act of 1946, perhaps one of the most significant attempts by the Congress to write economic policy into the law. The act charges the Federal Government to use "all practicable means" to "promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power." You can quarrel with the aspirations of this law, but it was written with the understanding that this Government can help set a positive course for our Nation's future.

This year also marks the first time Congress will produce a budget under the new procedures mandated by Gramm-Rudman. Gramm-Rudman, in contrast with the Employment Act of 1946, begins from the flawed premise that the Nation's leaders should function as accountants or bystanders, but not visionaries. It's based on a philosophy that the market, and the market alone, is capable of providing improvements we need most—in education, innovation, skills, productivity, global trade, and basic industry—to help our people prepare for the challenges of the future.

Mr. President, it is my belief—a belief that is at the core of what my party represents—that the budget of the United States is more than a list of numbers or an equation of revenues and spending. Fundamentally, it is a mirror of our values and our priorities. The choices embodied in our Federal budgets amount to nothing less than our vision for America's future. The budgets we choose in the late 1980's should be a blueprint for the Nation we want for our children in the year 2000.

Our great and gifted Nation faces difficult challenges: Stubborn unemployment rates; a record trade deficit; the loss of 2 million jobs to foreign competition in manufacturing, information industries, and services; high illiteracy and dropout rates. In candor, we must acknowledge that these are problems that neither the magic of the free market nor the immense goodwill of the American public can solve on their own.

Instead, these are challenges that demand a blueprint for investment in our people, our schools, our factories—indeed, investments in our very survival as a economic power. These challenges cannot be subordinated to reducing the deficit if we are to provide for a strong America in the decades to come.

In the next few days, the country will be able to compare a variety of very different visions for the Nation's future, as expressed in the budget.

Although it will not be a part of this debate, I think someone should acknowledge the administration's budget for 1987.

This proposal attracted 7 votes in the Budget Committee and all of 12 on the floor of the House. It was rejected, like other administration budgets, because it failed to reflect the goals most Americans share for the country. It proposed a 12-percent increase in defense spending, higher debts, more wasteful spending, and diminished investments in the future. CBO said that this proposal did not meet the deficit reduction targets in Gramm-Rudman; or committee determined that it did not meet the requirements of our future. When Senator DOMENICI offered just the 40-plus program reductions and terminations of their budget, his amendment received just 14 votes. This speaks volumes about the relevance of the administration's budget to this debate.

The supporters of the administration's priorities will come forward with a proposal to cut needed investments in education, health, and training for workers and maintain tax giveaways for the wealthy—all to lard on more spending for defense. The resolution already contains a 2.8-percent increase for the Pentagon; this, after 6 years of 7-percent-plus growth in defense. The defense number contained in this resolution, in my judgment, provides budget stability for a strong national defense. But for those who believe that the only measure of our preparedness is now much we are spending, this will not be enough.

There is also the underlying resolution, the bipartisan compromise. It is the first budget in 5 years that uses revenues, defense, and domestic spending restraint in even measure to make some sense of the budgetary chaos created by Reaganomics. Senators DOMENICI and CHILES deserve credit for trying to reverse the flawed priorities that have haunted our budgets since 1981. Given the existence of Gramm-Rudman, this compromise makes the best of a bad situation.

Finally, there is the Democratic alternative which I have coauthored with Senator CHILES. Later in the debate, the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator from Florida, joined by a dozen of our colleagues, will challenge this body to do a little more than rearrange the austerity of Gramm-Rudman. This amendment would commit the country in 1987 to $3 billion in key investments—for education, science, retraining, and basic research. It is a statement by its supporters that our goal shouldn't be cutting a little less; it should be accomplishing a lot more.

Accomplishing more for America will cost more. As the law requires, our amendment will pay for these investments dollar-for-dollar with new revenues. Our amendment makes clear that added revenues to fund essential investments should not, must not, and will not come from the income taxes paid by low- and middle-income Americans.

This amendment is worth the money it costs. Senator CHILES and I believe that our people are willing to spend money to help our economy grow, to create new opportunities, to meet and overcome the challenges we face from abroad. In contrast to the borrow and spend philosophy which has animated the Reagan budgets for 6 years, we are proposing a modest "pay-as-you-invest proposal" to help secure this country's future.

By emphasizing investments in our economy, this amendment does not disregard national security or downplay social justice in America. Rather, it reflects a belief that economic growth is inseparable from both national security and social justice. A strong economy will increase our influence abroad and enable us to meet our global commitments. A strong economy will increase the availability of jobs, opportunity, and hope. Ultimately, no military program strengthens our defense if it bankrupts our economy; and social programs will never be fully compassionate if our economy cannot generate the resources to support a humane public agenda.

These are the visions the country will compare during the debate on the budget resolution. I urge our Senate colleagues, and, indeed, the American people, to ask which vision will create a more competitive economy and a nation stronger in muscle and spirit.

WHY WE NEED A CHANGE IN DIRECTION

Mr. President, during the hearings on the budget resolution, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Miller, testified before our committee. He recited a series of extravagent claims about the performance of the economy which he said resulted from "steadfast adherence to the economic program the President presented in February of 1981 * * *."

We've heard this litany before. But when he said "family income is at an all-time high," Senator MOYNIHAN and I had to object. Of course, this claim, like the others, is not true. Since 1973, real median family income has dropped more than 6 percent.

Mr. Miller's comments reflect an attitude that pervades this administration. Certainly, a President is entitled to have a cadre of true believers who accept the optimism and the hyperbole of the press releases and the advance teams. But the Senate would be shirking its responsibility if it were to base fundamental decisions about our economic future on the jazz age rhetoric of a nostalgic administration.

The decision must be made with the facts. If the facts measure up to the happy-days conclusions offered by this administration, then, they're right—we need not change course. But if the performance of the economy reveals a gap between the rhetoric and the reality, it will be time for a new direction. So, let's look at the record.

Through fiscal 1981, the deficit consumed 2.2 percent of the gross national product. It now accounts for 5 percent of GNP. In real terms, tax receipts are down; interest payments and defense expenditures are way up; and all other Government spending has been slashed. The program that was supposed to balance the budget in 4 years has instead doubled the national debt.

In 3 years, by borrowing $400 billion from abroad, we have gone from being the World's largest creditor to the world's largest debtor. Unprecedented budget and trade deficits have combined to cripple our competitive position in world trade. In spite of promising reductions in the dollar's overvaluation, it will take years for many of our industries to recover; for many businesses and skilled workers, it is already too late.

Over the past 18 months, economic growth has averaged 2 percent. Over the past 4½ years, it averaged 2.5 percent, well below historical averages.

The level of savings and investment in our economy, so critical to productivity, is at the lowest level in 50 years.

In 1981, when the administration submitted its economic program, it predicted that Carter-era policies would generate "only" 9 million jobs. In fact, after a $750 billion tax bonanza, after a trillion-and-a-half dollars in defense; and $240 billion in spending cuts, just 9 million jobs were created between 1981 and 1984. Thus, beyond creating historically high deficits, their program did nothing to create jobs.

But we do have more discouraged workers than before. We do have a 3-year record of stagnant incomes. And thoughout this much-heralded recovery, black teenage unemployment hasn't once fallen below 40 percent. Overall, unemployment is no better than when the prior administration left office.

The President, in his recent State of the Union Address, called this record an "economic miracle." But hear and heed the words of his former Budget Director, Mr. Stockman:

> The fundamentals I look at are not a miracle. Our savings rate is the lowest in modern times. Last year productivity growth was flat when our whole theory was we were going to cause an explosion of productivity growth and rising real incomes . . . . We have conducted the greatest free lunch fiscal policy of modern times. We have doubled the national debt in four or five years. And it'll keep rising unless this policy is changed.

GROWTH AND INVESTMENT: THE ALTERNATIVE

Fundamentally, that is precisely what this debate is about—changing policies. For 6 years, we have been on a borrow-and-spend binge: Borrowing to pay for a wasteful military buildup; borrowing to finance ill-conceived and unproductive tax cuts; borrowing to subsidize leveraged buyouts, so that powerful interests can rearrange the corporate landscape without adding to the productive capacity of the Nation.

And yet, in a time of profound economic danger, we are budgeting like boosters for economic appeasement—determined to ignore or surrender to the tremendous social and technological forces challenging this Nation.

We cannot sustain our economic leadership as long as our major competitors like Japan educate their children 2 months more each year than we do, graduate more engineers, spend more money promoting their exports devote more attention to maintaining their economic circulatory system—their roads, bridges, and ports, and commit more energy to designing the economic circulatory system of their future—supercomputers and fibre-optic cables.

My colleagues can speak for themselves, but I believe that the budget of the United States should have higher goals than obsolete factories, displaced workers, dilapidated schools, and a future for our children of declining expectations.

That's the future sketched between the lines of Gramm-Rudman. The committe resolution might delay that future. But the adoption of the growth and investment alternative will steer us toward an altogether different future—a better future.

Mr. President, I ask that information about this alternative amendment and tabular material detailing the declining commitment in our budgets to programs which invest in our future be made a part of the RECORD.

The material follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 28, 1986.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: This week in the Senate, members will debate the Budget Resolution and will vote on a number of amendments to that measure.

With Senators CHILES, BYRD, and others, I offer an amendment—The Growth and Investment Initiative—which proposes several billion dollars in investments over three years. The investments, funded with new revenues, will be in the areas of science, education, technology development, training and trade promotion.

Cosponsors of the Hart-Chiles amendment include Sens. KENNEDY, RIEGLE, ROCKEFELLER, KERRY, MATSUNAGA, SIMON, BINGAMAN, HARKIN, SASSER, DECONCINI and SARBANES.

The attached materials describe the amendment. I would appreciate your consideration of the proposal. If you have any further questions, or wish to cosponsor this amendment, please contact Mark Steitz (45852) of my staff.

Sincerely,

GARY HART.

THE HART-CHILES GROWTH AND INVESTMENT INITIATIVE

The Hart-Chiles Growth and Investment initiative would invest $3.0 billion more in fiscal year 1987 and $17.1 billion more over the next three years, compared to the bipartisan compromise. These investments would be financed through increased taxes—the amendment includes, however, language expressing the sense that these revenues not come from increasing income taxes on low and middle income Americans.

As the attached table shows, the amendment contemplates three major initiatives: investments in science and technology, in resource development, and in education and training.

The science and technology initiatives include:

New Investment in technology development focused on biomedical and biotechnical research, supercomputers, robotics, fiber optics and other advanced processes; and Increased basic research through the NSF and other research organizations.

The resource development initiative is designed to develop our nation's energy, agricultural, metalurgical and other natural resources.

The education and training initiatives, accounting for roughly two-thirds of the funds in the amendment, aim to restore the nation's historic commitments to our childrens' future and a skilled and flexible labor force. The amendment would:

Invest in skills critical to our growing and changing economy including math, science, and foreign language programs;

Ensure a quality education for the children most at risk—those 14 million growing up in poverty; more will be invested in successful programs with proven track records, such as Head Start, compensatory education and Pell grants, as well as new public/private partnership, demonstration, and educational excellence initiatives;

Combat adult illiteracy and growing high school dropout rates; and

Reaffirm our commitment to training dislocated and disadvantaged workers by increasing participation in current, successful programs and establishing pilot programs to develop new approaches.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 1987

The Senate continued with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have been working with the minority and the distinguished majority leader with reference to our notion this past Thursday to stack some votes for Tuesday, and to use some time today. In pursuance of that proposition I make the following two unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate resumes the unfinished business on tomorrow that 20 hours be considered as remaining on the resolution.

□ 1620

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that after the vote on the DeConcini amendment No. 1803, there be 30 minutes of debate equally divided between the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] on the Melcher amendment; that there be no amendments in order to the Melcher amendment; and, following the expiration of time or yielding back of time on the amendment, that a vote occur immediately in relation to the Melcher amendment to Senate Concurrent Resolution 120, the budget resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, Mr. President, what this means is that if all time is used on the Melcher amendment, a rollcall vote can be expected in relation to the amendment at 11:50 a.m. This may cause us to run over a few moments into the 12 noon to 2 p.m. recess. This has been checked with the majority leader and, I understand, the minority leader, who is here, has no objection.

Mr. President, I did make a commitment on the floor Thursday, because the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, had been waiting a long time to propose an amendment. It is my intention, and I believe the distinguished ranking minority member, the Senator from Florida, Senator CHILES, concurs, that when we dispose of the Melcher amendment we will move to the Kennedy amendment on Medicare, if the senior Senator from Massachusetts is prepared. I hope that he will be advised that this is our intention, to accommodate him in that manner.

I also would ask that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, and the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee which has jurisdiction over Medicare, understand that the Kennedy amendment will, in all probability, come to the floor sometime shortly after the expiration of the 12 noon recess. If they are available to give their comments on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from New Mexico would greatly appreciate that. I will advise their offices personally.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, has morning business been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, and that there be no time limitation for the distinguished minority leader with reference to remarks that he might want to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the manager of the budget resolution and chairman of the Budget Committee.

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby transmit for the consideration of the Congress proposed legislation, entitled "Philippines Assistance Act of 1986," which authorizes supplemental economic and military assistance for the Philippines.

A supplemental appropriation request for fiscal year 1986 is concurrently being transmitted to the Congress.

Through the inauguration of President Aquino, the Philippines has been offered an historic opportunity to effect significant structural and institutional reforms that will bring the benefits of peace and prosperity to all

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-632. Resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of Hawaii; to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESOLUTION 108

"Whereas, termination of the MOD-5B wind project would mean the loss of years of effort to determine the technical and economic viability of large wind turbines as a means of reducing our Nation's dependence on non-renewable fuels; and

"Whereas, Hawaii is extremely dependent on imported oil for more than 90 percent of its energy needs and has a vital stake in research to find alternatives to fossil fuels; and

"Whereas, the U.S. Government already has a contract with Hawaiian Electric Industries to purchase the MOD-5B upon completion and conduct the necessary research to determine the viability of such large wind turbines; and

"Whereas, termination of the MOD-5 program so close to completion would represent the waste of more than $70 million spent to date and several million dollars more that will be required to dismantle the MOD-5B and return the site to its original condition; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the Thirteenth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 1986, That the Congress of the United States of America be asked to maintain the current appropriation for the MOD-5 research program; and

"Be it further resolved, that Congress is asked to make such further appropriation for Fiscal Year 1987 as may be necessary to complete this valuable research program; and

"Be it further resolved, that certified copies of this resolution is transmitted to the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation, the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Governor of Hawaii, and the Secretary of the United States Department of Energy."

POM-633. Joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alaska; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

JOINT RESOLUTION

"Whereas remote sensing of the ocean is playing an increasingly important role in fishery research, fish harvesting, and marine safety along the Pacific Coast of the United States and Canada; and

"Whereas satellite sensors give a unique view of the ocean surface and provide extensive and detailed images of sea surface temperature, color, mixed layer depth, currents, and wave action; and

"Whereas the oceanic measurements taken by the satellite are used in determining variations in ocean conditions that play key roles in causing fluctuations in stocks of fishes and their vulnerability to harvesting; and

"Whereas this timely information on the changing ocean, rather than on average ocean conditions, is necessary to understand and eventually predict the effects of the marine environment on fish populations; and

"Whereas up-to-date weather information can provide the fishing fleet accurate weather data that will increase the safety and efficiency of fish harvesting; and

"Whereas the use of satellite sensors combined with conventional data collection techniques provides a powerful tool toward ensuring the wise use of living marine resources; and

"Whereas this information can provide valuable clues as to where foreign fishing fleets may be targeting certain North American fish stocks on the high seas; and

"Whereas these clues can lead the United States Coast Guard and other enforcement agencies to the precise locations where harmful interception of North American fish are taking place; and

"Whereas several manufacturers have developed oceanographic color displays designed to receive signals from a satellite and to display, in color, an absolute surface temperature distribution for a large water area; and

"Whereas in order to provide this information to fishermen, enforcement agencies, and research facilities, receiving stations need to be established in Alaska to monitor the North Pacific region; and

"Whereas an all-weather satellite is needed to provide this detailed information because it is not dependent on cloud cover conditions; and

"Whereas the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has abandoned the Gilmore Creek Satellite Receiving Station and this station can be used by the National Weather Service to receive satellite data in Alaska; be it

"Resolved that the Alaska State Legislature finds establishment of all-weather satellite and receiving stations would benefit the fishermen, marine researchers, enforcement agents, and merchant mariners of the United States and Alaska; and be it

Further resolved that the Alaska State Legislature respectfully requests the United States Congress to establish an all-weather monitoring satellite for the waters of the North Pacific Ocean; and be it

Further resolved that the legislature respectfully requests that Congress transfer NASA's Gilmore Creek Satellite Receiving Station to the National Weather Service and provide funding for its use; and be it Further resolved that the legislature also requests that funds be allocated for the purchase of oceanographic color displays for the receiving stations and for the distribution of this data to fishermen, researchers, enforcement agencies, and merchant mariners."

POM-634. Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, on June twenty-fifth, nineteen hundred and fifty, Communist forces of the Korean People's Army launched an offensive against the Republic of Korea; and

"Whereas, in response to this atrocious act of aggression against freedom, the President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, on Tuesday, June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and fifty, ordered United States Air and Sea Forces to give the Korean Government troops, cover and support, thus beginning involvement of the United States in the Korean conflict which ended on July twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and fifty-three; and

"Whereas, of the six million Korean era veterans, fifty-four thousand, two hundred and thirty-five Americans were killed in action and eight thousand, one hundred and seventy-seven are unaccounted for, including three hundred and eighty-nine who were prisoners of war; and

"Whereas, these Americans served their country with dignity, displaying the ideals of America, fighting for freedom on foreign territory, far from home and loved ones; and

"Whereas, those Americans who had made the supreme sacrifice, and those Americans who were willing to make the supreme sacrifice of life, remain the only veterans not recognized with a memorial in our country's capital; now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts House of Representatives hereby urges Congress, the President and the Veterans' Administration of the United States to commemorate the Korean era veteran with an appropriate memorial in Washington, D.C.; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, the Director of the Veterans' Administration and to the members thereof from this Commonwealth.

POM-635. Joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

A JOINT MEMORIAL

"Whereas, the Idaho State Legislature recognizes and appreciates the necessity of immediately addressing and reducing the federal deficit, by the reduction of federal spending, including some cuts in transfer payments to the states for public education support and land grant universities; and

"Whereas, Congress has adopted the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act which is estimated to cut federal payments to Idaho by approximately $50 million for the next eighteen months; and

"Whereas, the Idaho State Legislature is willing to accept cuts which equally impact on all of the states and which will require all states to increasingly shoulder the responsibilities for funding of necessary programs, including public education, with state-level revenue; and

"Whereas, the economic and tax base of Idaho is not as fully developed as necessary to provide maximum support for education as is the case in other states which do not experience 64% federal land ownership within their boundaries; and

"Whereas, Federal Forest Reserve Funds and Impact Aid Funds (P.L. 874) payments to Idaho public schools could be reduced or eliminated by Congress or the automatic cuts in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act; and

"Whereas, federal "in lieu of" tax payment funds, which previously supported public education and other state and local government functions based on this federal ownership acreage, are also proposed for reduction or elimination; and

"Whereas, the State of Idaho, through our constitutional Land Board, working with all potentially affected lessees and adjacent owners to avoid or minimize economic, recreational, or other impacts, is prepared to assist the Federal Government in selecting appropriate sections of land for transfer. Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the members of the Second Regular Session of the Forty-eighth Idaho Legislature, the Senate and the House of Representatives concurring therein, that Congress, with the advice of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, authorize the transfer of two additional sections per township from federal lands to the State of Idaho for state ownership and for the sole and exclusive purpose of supporting public schools and institutions of higher education in Idaho.

"Be it further resolved that the Secretary of the Senate be, and she is hereby authorized and directed to forward a copy of this Memorial to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, the congressional delegation representing the State of Idaho in the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States."

POM-636. Resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

"A RESOLUTION

"Whereas, the Mississippi River traverses ten states and has a profound impact on the commerce, tourism, and manufacturing in those states; and

"Whereas, the river's course is abundant in historical sites, natural areas, wildlife refuges, industrial sites, population centers, and other areas that are integral to our national heritage; and

"Whereas, it is appropriate that the federal government undertake significant efforts to retain, enhance, and interpret, for present and future generations, the cultural, historical, natural, recreational, and economic resources of the corridor that are consistent with industrial and economic growth; and

"Whereas, the Congress of the United States is considering the Mississippi River National Heritage Corridor Act of 1986 that, if adopted, will ensure that the above activities in the corridor will be instituted; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota that it urges the Congress of United States to immediately enact, and the President of the United States approve, the Mississippi River National Heritage Corridor Act of 1986.

Be it further resolved that the Secretary of State of the State of Minnesota is directed "to prepare certified copies of this memorial and transmit them to the President of the United States, the President and Secretary of the United States Senate, the Speaker and Chief Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, and to Minnesota's Senators and Representatives in Congress."

POM-637. Resolution adopted by the Borough Council of Stone Harbor, NJ, opposing the research burning of toxic chemicals in the ocean; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POM-638. Joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

JOINT RESOLUTION

"Whereas, a recent administrative decision by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers would require the City of Orofino to compensate the federal government up to $60,000 annually for hydropower loss in order for the Idaho community to divert water from behind Dworshak Dam for municipal and domestic purposes; and

"Whereas, the Corps has in the past taken the position that it does not need a state water right because it only passes water through the dam; and

"Whereas, the Corps should not be entitled to compensation for loss of a water right which it does not claim; and

"Whereas, the policy behind the Corps administrative decision could have a devastating impact for existing and future water use development in Idaho, the Northwest and the Nation, should the Corps require compensation for loss of power for any diversion of water upstream from one of its power generation dams in any river basin, now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the members of the Second Regular session of the Forty-eighth Idaho Legislature, the Senate and the House of Representatives concurring therein that the Secretary of Defense, Caspar W. Weinberger, be encouraged to reverse the decision of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers requiring compensation for loss of hydropower generation resulting from upstream uses of water in the public interest and enunciate a corps policy of compliance with state water allocation statutes.

"Be it further resolved that the United States Congress enact legislation providing that hydropower facilities constructed by the Corps have only such water rights as explicitly authorized by Congress or as have been developed under applicable state law and that compensation is not required for loss of hydropower generation resulting from upstream water use development.

"Be it further resolved that the Secretary of the Senate be, and she is hereby authorized and directed to forward a copy of this Memorial to the Secretary of Defense, Caspar W. Weinberger, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the congressional delegation representing the State of Idaho in the Congress of the United States."

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, Federal and state solar energy tax credits have been an effective stimulus for the development of a new industry in the State of California, providing jobs and otherwise contributing to the state's economic development; and

"Whereas, Since the enactment of the California solar tax credit, the combined federal/state incentive has resulted in the dramatic growth of the solar industry in California; and

"Whereas, The benefits to the citizens of California from this growing solar industry include increased energy supply, a cleaner environment, and new job opportunities; and

"Whereas, The solar energy tax credits have been an effective economic incentive to encourage individuals and businesses to invest in renewable energy technologies; and

"Whereas, The utilization of solar energy offers an opportunity to lessen dependence upon our country's limited energy resources and foreign imports; and

"Whereas, Solar energy is an environmentally clean, safe, and sound form of energy development; and

"Whereas, The interest of the people of the State of California is served by keeping the combined strength of the federal/state solar tax incentives; and

"Whereas, The federal solar tax credit expires on December 31, 1985, and the California state tax credit has been extended on a reduced basis through December 31, 1986; and

"Whereas, The State of California supports a balanced United States energy policy; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to support extension of the federal solar tax credit with a graduated phaseout of the credit; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of the resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Chairpersons of the House and Senate Committees of Ways and Means and Finance, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"JOINT RESOLUTION

"Whereas the Navarin Basin oil and gas lease sale in April 1984, resulted in total accepted bids of $631,200,000, of which $108,174,000 was for an area claimed by the Soviet Union; and

"Whereas the winning bidders for the 17 tracts in the area claimed by the Soviet Union not only are precluded from exploring for oil and gas in these valuable seabed areas, but their bid deposit money is being held in a suspense account by the U.S. Department of the Interior and is yielding only the U.S. Treasury rate of return; and

"Whereas there are hundreds of American jobs at stake at the drilling sites and at industry support sites; and

"Whereas the question of territorial jurisdiction also has implications for bottom fishery operations for American fishermen; and

"Whereas the normal depiction of lines on the globe are by the arc of a great circle, especially when they involve great distances in the open ocean, such as the 1867 Convention Line marking the boundary between the United States and Russia; and

"Whereas the U.S. Department of State's International Boundary Study #14 ("U.S.-Russia Convention Line of 1867"), which was published in 1965, depicted the 1867 Convention Line by arcs of a great circle; and

"Whereas discussions have been conducted between the U.S. Department of State and the Soviet Government over this issue since 1981, with the latest round being held in Moscow on July 23 and 24, 1984, with the American delegation led by Davis R. Robinson, the Legal Adviser of the U.S. Department of State; and

"Whereas Article IV, Sec. 3 of the United States Constitution provides that 'The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and

"Whereas the western-most limit to the oil and gas leasing program of the U.S. Department of the Interior for the Outer Continental Shelf in the Bering Sea has been set by the U.S. Department of State at the U.S.-Russia Convention Line of 1867;

"Whereas the leasing program involving the 1867 Convention Line in the Bering Sea includes the Navarin Basin and the Norton Basin; and

"Whereas there are highly significant oil and gas deposits estimated by the U.S. Department of the Interior in these basins; and

"Whereas these potential hydrocarbon deposits are a vital part of the future energy production for the United States and its goal of energy independence; and

"Whereas the leasing schedule for sales of oil and gas includes the Navarin Basin in April 1984 and March 1986, the St. George Basin in May 1985 and April 1987, and the Norton Basin in December 1985; and

"Whereas the area is estimated to contain approximately 100,000 tons of sustainable yield of pollock that is presently being fished exclusively by foreign fishing fleets; and

"Whereas during the announcement of the Navarin Basin's April 1984 sale, the Department of the Interior revealed that the Soviet Union was demanding part of the Outer Continental Shelf in the Navarin Basin and that the Department of State was requiring that the proposed oil and gas lease sales in the area claimed by the Soviet Government be held in abeyance, that is, the bids received and retained but the leases not awarded until the matter is resolved; and

"Whereas the Federal Register announcement described the dispute as follows:

" 'The differing claims relate to differing depictions of the line established by the 1867 Convention Ceding Alaska between the United States and Russia. The United States depicts the 1867 Convention Line as the maritime boundary by arcs of a great circle while the Soviet Union depicts the 1867 Convention Line as rhumb lines.'; and

"Whereas the area of the Outer Continental Shelf demanded by the Soviet Union between the arc-of-a-great-circle and the rhumbline depictions in the Bering Sea amounts to approximately 18,000 square miles; and

"Whereas an agreement to concede this area to the Soviet Union would contribute to the petroleum production and bottom fishery potential of the Soviet Union;

"Be it resolved that the Alaska State Legislature finds that it is in the best interests of the United States and of the State of Alaska that the U.S. Department of State not yield to the demands of the Soviet Union to set the western-most Outer Continental Shelf limit of the United States in the Bering Sea by a rhumb-line depiction rather than the arc-of-a-great-circle depiction of the U.S.-Russia Convention Line of 1867; and be it

"Further Resolved that this resolution be understood as the sentiments of the State of Alaska concerning the interests of the United States in adhering to the arc-of-a-great-circle depiction in the diplomatic discussions regarding the question; and be it

"Further resolved the United States Department of State is urged to adopt a firm stance and aggressively pursue a resolution of the Bering Sea Boundary dispute favorable to the interests of the government and the people of the United States."

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. STAFFORD (by request):

S. 2373. A bill to encourage the standardization of nuclear powerplants, to improve the nuclear licensing and regulatory process, to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

NUCLEAR FACILITY STANDARDIZATION ACT

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I am introducing the text of a bill that was introduced by request by Senator MCCLURE on February 18. The purpose of my action is to clear up confusion caused by the mistaken referral of that bill, the Nuclear Facility Standardization Act of 1986.

The text of the bill was drafted and transmitted to Congress by the Department of Energy in an executive communication, EC-1114. The bill is intended to encourage standardization of designs of nuclear powerplants and to improve the nuclear licensing and regulatory process.

The executive communication was mistakenly referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, as was the bill incorporating the Department's draft legislation.

The subject matter of the legislation is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. The introduction and referral today should clarify any confusion over the question of appropriate Senate jurisdiction.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2373

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Nuclear Facility Standardization Act of 1986".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress, recognizing that an effective and efficient licensing and regulatory process, for siting, construction, and operation of nuclear powerplants, which meets safety and environmental criteria is in the national interest, finds and declares that—

(1) interstate commerce is substantially affected by the siting, construction, and operation of nuclear powerplants;

(2) opportunity for meaningful public participation in the siting and licensing of nuclear powerplants should be assured;

(3) there is a need to encourage the development and use of standardized nuclear powerplant designs because (A) these designs would benefit public health and safety by concentrating the resources of designers, engineers, and vendors on particular designs, by stimulating standardized programs of construction practice and quality assurance, by improving the training of personnel, and by fostering more effective maintenance and improved operations; and (B) the use of these designs would permit a more effective and efficient licensing and inspection process;

(4) the licensing process will be facilitated by selecting and approving a site for a nuclear powerplant in advance of a commitment to construct a facility at that site;

(5) the licensing and regulatory process will be facilitated if licensing decisions are made as early as possible in the process and if issues resolved in Nuclear Regulatory Commission proceedings are not reconsidered in the absence of a showing required by this Act and the regulations of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission;

(6) consistent with the adequate protection of the public health and safety and the common defense and security, the regulatory process should provide greater stability in licensing standards and criteria for approved designs of nuclear powerplants;

(7) consistent with the paramount responsibility of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to protect the public health and safety, and recognizing that the elimination of all risk is an unattainable goal for any energy source, it is appropriate and in the public interest for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to consider the economic consequences of its regulatory practices, including the cost of safety requirements; and

(8) the Nuclear Regulatory Commission should adopt regulations setting forth criteria to govern all additions, deletions, and modifications to its regulatory requirements; these regulations should require a systematic, centralized, and documented review of the concerns that give rise to the proposed change, the improvement in safety that would result from adoption of the proposed change, estimates of costs or other impacts on potentially affected licensees and the public, taking into account, if facility specific, the remaining life of the facility, and such other matters as the Commission determines to be necessary.

(b) The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to facilitate the development and use of standardized designs and the use of preapproved sites for nuclear powerplants;

(2) to provide for the issuance of a license to construct and operate a nuclear powerplant under conditions that enhance the protection of the public health and safety and are in accord with the common defense and security; and

(3) to improve the stability of licensing standards and criteria for nuclear powerplants and prior Commission licensing approvals.

TITLE I—LICENSING AND REGULATORY REFORM

APPROVAL OF STANDARDIZED DESIGNS

SEC. 101. The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 is amended by adding after section 191 (42 U.S.C. 2241) a new section 193 to read as follows:

"SEC. 193. APPROVAL OF STANDARDIZED DESIGNS.—

"a. The Commission shall establish procedures to permit the approval of standardized designs for a production or utilization facility to be licensed by the Commission and the approval of designs for any major subsystem of such a facility that represents a discrete element of the facility, as defined by the Commission, upon application by any person, after providing an opportunity for public hearing under section 189 of this Act, notwithstanding the fact that an application for a construction permit or construction and operating license for the facility has not been filed.

"b. Notwithstanding section 161 w. of this Act or the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1952, the Commission shall not require an application filing or issuance fee for an application for approval or for an amendment or renewal of an approval under this section. The Commission may allocate the costs that would otherwise have been defrayed by fees required of applicants under this section among applicants for permits or licenses who propose to use the approved design. If there is no application for a construction permit or a construction and operating license within ten years from the initial date of issuance of the approval, then the holder of the design approval shall pay the filing and issuance fees at the end of the ten year period.

"c. (1) After considering the information submitted in the application, and after providing an opportunity for public hearing under section 189 of this Act, the Commission shall issue an approval under this section if it determines that the design will comply with this Act, the rules and regulations of the Commission, and will not be inimical to the common defense and security or to the health and safety of the public.

"(2) Subject to section 187 of this Act, a design approval may be amended or modified in a design amendment proceeding. In a design amendment proceeding, the Commission shall not admit an issue that has been considered and decided in the design approval proceeding or an earlier design amendment proceeding unless the Commission determines that there is a material issue in dispute that cannot be resolved with sufficient accuracy except in a hearing and—

"(A) the issue could not have been considered and decided in a proceeding for the issuance, modification, or amendment of a design approval; or

"(B) a showing has been made that there is a nonconformance with the design approval that could materially and adversely affect the safe operation of a facility using the design.

"(3) A change to the design approval required by the Commission shall not apply to a construction permit or construction and operating license incorporating the design approval unless (A) the licensee requests the change, or (B) the requirements of section 187 of this Act are satisfied with respect to the change.

"d. (1) An approval issued by the Commission under this section may be incorporated by reference in, and shall be conclusive with respect to, an application for a construction permit or a construction and operating license if the application meets the conditions of the approval and is filed within a period of ten years from the date of issuance or renewal of the approval.

"(2)(A) Not less than twelve nor more than eighteen months prior to the expiration of the ten-year period provided under paragraph (1), the holder of the design approval may apply for a renewal of the approval. Upon review, the Commission may renew the approval for additional ten-year periods from the date of renewal.

"(B) Upon application for renewal of an approval issued under subsection c. of this section, the Commission shall renew the approval unless it finds, based on significant new information relevant to the design, that the design will not comply with this Act or the Commission's rules and regulations for protection of the public health and safety and the common defense and security.

"e. (1) The Commission shall approve an amendment to a design approval issued under this section upon application by the holder of the design approval if the Commission determines that the amendment will comply with this Act and the Commission's regulations.

"(2) An amendment approved by the Commission under paragraph (1) shall apply to an application for a construction permit or construction and operating license incorporating the design approval for which the amendment has been granted that is filed after the effective date of the amendment.

"(3) An amendment approved by the Commission under paragraph (1) shall not apply to an application for a construction permit or construction and operating license incorporating the design approval for which the amendment has been granted that is filed before the effective date of the amendment unless (A) the applicant requests that the amendment apply to the application, or (B) the requirements of section 187 are satisfied with respect to the amendment.

"f. The holder of a permit, license, or approval may deviate from any aspect of the permit, license, or approval, without prior Commission approval unless the deviation involves a change in technical specifications incorporated in the permit, license, or approval or an unreviewed safety question. A deviation that involves changes to technical specifications or unreviewed safety problems shall be proposed to the Commission as an amendment to the permit, license, or approval.

"g. A final Commission determination on an application filed under sections 193 a. or d. of this Act is a final order of the Commission for purposes of section 189 b. of this Act.".

EARLY SITE APPROVAL

SEC. 102. The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 is amended by adding after section 193, as added by this Act, a new section 194 to read as follows:

"SEC. 194. EARLY SITE APPROVAL.—

"a. The Commission shall establish procedures to issue a site permit for approval of a site for one or more production or utilization facilities upon the application of any person, notwithstanding the fact that an application for a construction permit or a construction and operating license for the facility or facilities has not been filed.

"b. (1) After considering all information submitted by an applicant, and after providing the opportunity for a public hearing under section 189 of this Act, the Commission shall issue a site permit subject to conditions that it considers appropriate if it determines that the proposed site is suitable for the construction and operation of the facility or facilities described in the application and that use of the proposed site will not be inimical to the common defense and security or to the health and safety of the public.

"(2) In a subsequent Commission proceeding involving use of a site for which a site permit has been granted under this section, the Commission shall not admit an issue that has been considered and decided in the site permit proceeding unless the Commission determines that there is a material issue in dispute that cannot be resolved with sufficient accuracy except in a hearing and—

"(A) the issue could not have been considered and decided in a proceeding for the issuance, modification, or amendment of a site permit; or

"(B) a showing has been made that there is a nonconformance with the site permit that could materially and adversely affect the safe operation of a facility at the site.

"(3) A final Commission determination on an application filed under this section is a final order of the Commission for the purposes of section 189 b. of this Act.

"c. (1) A site permit issued under this section may be incorporated by reference in, and shall be conclusive with respect to, an application for a construction permit or a construction and operating license if the application meets the conditions of the site permit and is filed within ten years from the date of issuance or renewal of the site permit.

"(2)(A) Not less than twelve nor more than eighteen months before the expiration of the ten-year period, a site permit holder may apply for a renewal of the site permit. Upon review, the Commission may review a site permit for additional ten-year periods from the date of renewal.

"(B) Upon application for renewal of a site permit, the Commission shall renew the site permit unless it finds, based on significant new information that the site will not comply with this Act of the Commission's rules and regulations for protection of the public health and safety and the common defense and security.

"d. Approval of a site under this section does not preclude its approval for use as a site for an alternate or modified type of energy facility or for any other purpose.

"e. The Commission may issue a site permit with respect to limited aspects of the suitability of the site for its intended purpose, under rules and regulations the Commission considers appropriate.".

CONSTRUCTION PERMITS, OPERATING LICENSES, AND CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATING LICENSES

SEC. 103. Section 185 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2235) and its catchline are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 185. CONSTRUCTION PERMITS, OPERATING LICENSES, AND CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATING LICENSES.—

"a. An applicant for a license to construct or modify a production or utilization facility shall, if the application is consistent with the provisions of this Act, the rules and regulations of the Commission, and public health and safety and the common defense and security be initially granted a construction permit, after the Commission has provided an opportunity for a public hearing under section 189 of this Act. Upon the filing of additional information by the applicant needed to bring the original application up to date and after the Commission has provided an opportunity for a public hearing under section 189 of this Act, the Commission shall issue an operating license to the applicant upon finding that the facility authorized has been constructed and will operate in conformity with the application as amended, the provisions of this Act, and the rules and regulations of the Commission. For all other purposes of this Act, a construction permit is a 'license'.

"b. (1) The Commission shall issue a construction and operating license to an applicant for a commercial production or utilization facility, after providing an opportunity for a public hearing under section 189 of this Act, if the application contains sufficient information to enable the Commission to determine that there is reasonable assurance that the facility will be constructed and will operate in conformity with the application, the provisions of this Act, and the rules and regulations of the Commission. The Commission shall incorporate in the construction and operating license a phased-approval procedure for construction quality assurance. The Commission also shall incorporate in the construction and operating license the inspections, tests, analyses, and acceptance criteria therefor, that are necessary to provide reasonable assurance that the plant has been constructed and will operate in accordance with the license. The Commission procedure also may provide for inspections by the licensee's designated quality assurance inspectors, designated engineering and inspection representatives, and Commission inspectors.

"(2) Before a facility licensed under this subsection may begin operation, the utility shall notify the Commission of its readiness to operate the facility. Based on this notification, the Commission shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of intended operation of the facility, and shall provide a thirty-day period during which any person may file a written objection to operation on the basis that the facility has not been constructed or will not operate in conformity with the license. An objection must set forth in reasonable detail the facts and arguments upon which the objection is based, and may be accompanied by a request for a hearing. If a hearing is requested, the Commission shall conduct a hearing if it determines that there is a material issue in dispute that cannot be resolved with sufficient accuracy except in a hearing and—

"(A) the issue was not and could not have been considered and decided in a proceeding for the issuance, modification, or amendment of a license, permit, or approval for that facility, its site, or design; or

"(B) a showing has been made that there is a nonconformance with the license that could materially and adversely affect the safe opposition of the facility.

The Commission also shall determine whether the hearing must be commenced or completed before facility operation begins in order to provide reasonable assurance of the protection of the public health and safety and common defense and security.".

MODIFICATIONS

SEC. 104. Section 187 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2237) and its catchline are amended to read as follows:

SEC. 187. MODIFICATIONS.—

"a. The Commission shall not require nor take an action to cause a change to a design approval; a site permit; a production or utilization facility for which a construction permit, operating license, or construction and operating license has been issued; the design of the facility; the procedures under which the facility is to be constructed or operated; or the organization required to construct or operate the facility, unless the Commission determines that the proposed change would result in a substantial improvement in overall safety of facility operation required under this Act and, for a production or utilization facility, is justified when taking account of the remaining life of the facility after considering the following factors—

"(1) the potential reduction in the risk to the public from the accidental off-site release of radioactive material;

"(2) the potential impact on radiological exposure of facility employees;

"(3) the installation and continuing costs associated with the proposed change, including the cost of construction delay or effect on continuity of service;

"(4) the potential safety impact of changes in plant or operational complexity including the effect on other proposed and existing requirements;

"(5) the estimated resource burden on the Commission associated with the proposed change and the availability of the resources;

"(6) the potential impact of differences in facility type, design, or age on the relevancy and practicality of the proposed change;

"(7) whether the proposed change is an interim or final requirement and, if interim, the justification for imposing the proposed change on an interim basis; and

"(8) such other matters as the Commission determines to be necessary.

"b. The Commission shall establish a centralized, systematic, and documented review process to evaluate and consider a proposed change. The Commission may make the proposed change effective, after its determination has been made, only by an amendment to the license or by issuing a rule, regulation, order, or amendment thereof. This section does not apply if the Commission determines that immediate action to impose a proposed change is necessary to protect the public health and safety or the common defense and security. If the Commission determines that immediate action is necessary, it shall document its determination after the fact.".

DISLOCATED WORKERS ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes to commend the Budget Committee for providing $175 million for title III of the Job Training Partnership Act, which compares with a $110 million appropriation last year. This title provides assistance to displaced workers—those unemployed workers who held their previous job for 3 or more years and are unemployed through no fault of their own. The Office of Technology Assessment estimates that there are over 2 million such workers in this country, and the assistance they receive is minimal at best. My reason for taking the floor at this time is to remind my colleagues that many, many regions across the country continue to suffer prolonged unemployment, while money for job training has been reduced by 58 percent over the last 5 years. So when I say to my colleagues that I am pleased there is a little more money in the budget this year than the $110 million appropriated last year, the fact remains that a lot more is needed if we are to return these workers to productive employment.

Mr. President, when we approved the Labor-HHS-Education and Related Agencies appropriation, I took the floor to express my concern that continued lowfunding of the Job Training Partnership Act, and in particular the dislocated worker portion of that act, would dim the future of distressed communities. Since that time, many more communities in the South and West have begun to feel the terrible effects of joblessness. This is not the time to short-fund a program which invests in the future of our cities and towns by making investments in skilled and productive human beings.

In fiscal year 1985, $222 million was appropriated for title III. That amount would aid only 150,000 of the millions who are dislocated in our economy. The budget resolution before us, by providing $50 million less than the 1985 appropriation, means that even fewer workers will receive assistance. There is sufficient budget authority within function 500 to bring JTPA title III back to its proper funding level without denying other worthy programs their money.

Mr. President, a number of people have criticized JTPA title III for spending down its money slowly, and for a disorganized start. I recognize these problems and I intend to introduce—indeed, I shall today introduce legislation to correct them.

This legislation would provide a renewed emphasis on remedial education and vocational skills training in title III, and require the States to report the mix of services they offer to dislocated workers. Effective skills training and job search assistance are the best ways to return productive citizens to full-time employment.

That is not only my personal opinion. It is borne out by an OTA study, "Technology and Structural Unemployment," which Senator DOLE and I requested. I ask unanimous consent that a segment of that study be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the segment of the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DISPLACED WORKER PROGRAMS

Displaced workers are not the only unemployed workers. According to the definition of displacement of the U.S. Department of Labor, displaced workers accounted for about 14 percent of unemployment in January 1984. Displaced workers have the advantage of established work histories and good work habits, and many have some transferable skills. As a result, they are usually more employable than disadvantaged workers or unemployed teenagers, many of whom lack acceptable work habits such as demonstrated willingness to show up on time and put in the requisite number of hours. In view of the greater problems of the disadvantaged and current constraints on public spending, some observers question whether the government should provide special services for displaced workers.

One justification for government programs for displaced workers is that these people bear a disproportionate share of the burden for having a dynamic, adaptable, and generally open economy. Displaced worker programs may be viewed as the price society pays for an open trade policy and for a labor market that permits private employers considerable latitude in hiring and firing—much more than in some other industrialized countries. Another justification is that displaced worker programs can also help society avoid other kinds of expenditure, such as unemployment insurance, food stamps, Medicaid, and welfare that arise during long stretches of unemployment. Little recent information is available on the extent to which displaced worker programs substitute for other kinds of social expenditures, but earlier studies, evaluating the displaced worker program of the 1960s, found that savings in welfare and other transfer payments were large enough to pay back the investment of public funds in 2 to 4 years.

Concern over displacement, and government programs designed to serve displaced workers, tend to wax with unemployment and wane as employment recovers. In 1962, concerned with rising unemployment rates and fearing that automation would aggravate unemployment, Congress provided special funding for displaced workers in the Manpower development and Training Act [MDTA]. Within 2 years, however, a prosperous economy and falling unemployment caused a shift in the emphasis of government employment and training programs, toward assistance for disadvantaged workers. The unemployment rate stayed low through out the 1960s, partly due to the enormous fiscal stimulus of the Vietnam conflict and the Great Society programs. In the 1970s, unemployment rates again edged up. By the late 1970s, unemployment in a nonrecession economy had risen to 7 percent, and it hit a post-World War II high of 10.8 percent in December 1982, at the depth of the recession. Concern over displacement reemerged strongly.

Concern was translated into action with the 1982 Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA, Public Law 97-300]. Title III of JTPA authorized services for displaced workers. In October 1983, State Title III programs to serve displaced workers were initiated. Federal funding of $223 million was provided for a startup period of 21 months. JTPA Title III was the first Federal program designed to serve all groups of displaced workers since the beginning of MDTA, in the early 1960s.

Although unemployment remains high by the standards of the past four and a half decades, it has fallen from its peak in the 1981-82 recession. In mid-1985, civilian unemployment fluctuated between 7 and 7.5 percent for nearly a year, dipping to 7 percent in August. With the unemployment rate falling from recession highs, concern over displaced workers also lessened.

The economic recovery neither stopped nor even greatly reduced displacement. Displacement is an ongoing process, associated with technical and economic change, and the problems of displacement are not the same as those of general or cyclical unemployment. Plant closings and mass layoffs, major contributors to displacement, are continuing during the recovery. Moreover, plant closings and mass layoffs are by no means confined to mature industries such as steel, textiles, and automobiles. For example, in Santa Clara County (California's Silicon Valley) semiconductor industry employment fell by about 2,000 in a few months, from 51,000 in November 1984 to 49,000 in May 1985. In the semiconductor industry as a whole, employment fell by 9,600 between its peak in December 1984 and July 1985.

The need for services to displaced workers does not vanish during economic recovery and growth. There is a continuing need for displaced worker services in an economy that is changing as rapidly as that of the United States. The demand for services may be greater during recessions, when it is more difficult for displaced workers to find jobs on their own. Displacement itself may increase during recessions, as some marginally competitive firms close or permanently cut back production and employment. For example, employment losses in the textile industry have been heavy during recessions, and these losses have not been made up during recoveries. According to the BLS survey, over 1.2 million workers were displaced even in 1979, by most standards a healthy year economically.

PERFORMANCE OF JTPA TITLE III

Judgments about the effectiveness of Title III should be made cautiously at this point. JTPA Title III is the first comprehensive program for displaced workers in nearly 20 years. Most States have had to spend some part of the first 2 years of Title III's existence organizing to serve displaced workers. Few projects have yet learned how to cope with differing economic circumstances and changing populations of displaced workers. As a result, some projects and States have spent their initial allotments of funds quite slowly, leaving $184.5 million in unspent, but probably mostly obligated, funds by June 1985.

Title III served 96,100 workers in its first 9 months, and another 132,200 workers were newly enrolled in the full program year July 1984-June 1985. This is probably less than 5 percent of the eligible population. In 1983 over 3 million adult workers were displaced from their jobs, according to the BLS survey; most of these workers were eligible for Title III services. So far, the number of workers served per year by Title III is about 3.5 times the number of workers served by the Industrial Adjustment Service [IAS] of Canada, while the U.S. work force is almost 10 times larger than Canada's.

IAS and Title III are different: the Title III program offers a broad range of services, including counseling, job search and placement assistance, vocational training, and education. The IAS program is focused on helping displaced workers find new jobs quickly, offering services immediately on notification of mass layoffs or plant closings. The IAS program does not itself provide vocational training or education, but can refer workers to Canada's extensive, free adult training program. However, IAS reaches many more workers, in relation to the size of the Canadian labor than Title III does for the U.S. work force. If a program similar to the IAS existed in the United States, the number of people seeking services from ITPA Title III might well increase.

So far in a number of respects, the Title III program seems to be working in accordance with major emphases in the law. The Federal role is minor, and States are in control of the program. The influence of the private sector is strong, particularly in the emphasis on placement, low costs, and marketing the program to potential employers. The act's limits on administrative and support services have been satisfied.

Whether Title III is an effective and sufficient response to the problem of worker displacement is questionable. One important question is whether the heavy emphasis on placement may divert attention and resources away from training. The limited information available on program spending indicates that vocational skills training in Title III programs is probably sparse. Generally, the majority of displaced workers are much more interested in returning to work than in training or education, although a significant minority of the people may become interested in training opportunities. While retraining for strictly "high-technology" skills and occupations may have been over-emphasized in the past, training is still a very important component of well-run displaced worker programs. For many displaced workers, training is the best route back to a job with reasonable opportunities for advancement. This is particularly true for unskilled or semi-skilled manufacturing production workers, whose former jobs were based largely on routine manual and mental skills. Many of these people need substantial retaining or education to get tood jobs in the service-producing sectors, where most new jobs are being created.

In well-run programs such as the Downriver Community Conference in Wyandotte, Michigan, and the reemployment program at the former Ford assembly plant in Milpitas, California, a substantial minority of workers—20 to 35 percent—are likely to choose and benefit from vocational skills training. It should be emphasized that these percentages would be much lower without these programs' strong commitment to counseling and encouraging workers who are qualified to consider training.

A substantial barrier to retraining for displaced workers who are interested and qualified is that few adults can undertake it without income support. Basic unemployment insurance [UI] benefits, lasting 26 weeks, are the main source of income for most workers in training. Some training institutions and programs have adapted effective courses to fit this constraint, but by no means all. Extensive training, without other sources of financial support than basic UI, is often infeasible.

Judging by available numbers on spending, emphasis on and commitment to training may not be characteristic of JTPA Title III projects. In the initial 9 months of Title III, spending per worker averaged $768 and in the following program year $895, far less than the approximately $3,000 spent on each worker at the Ford Milpitas plant, where training—usually the most expensive service offered in any displaced worker project—was emphasized heavily. However, information on Title III program spending and services are both too limited and too out-of-date to judge the effectiveness and appropriateness of the program's training component.

Another concern is the low priority most State Title III programs give to remedial or brush-up education for displaced workers, even though displaced workers who lack good basic skills will increasingly be forced to take low-wage jobs. A substantial proportion of U.S. workers are poorly equipped to learn new job skills, except for relatively elementary ones, because they have deficiencies in basic education, or use only a narrow range of job skills that do not transfer easily to difficult occupations.

While estimates of adult functional illiteracy are both outdated and misleading, it is clear that large numbers of adults lack adequate skills in reading, writing, mathematics, problem-solving, and communications. These people will find it increasingly difficult to compete successfully for good new jobs once displaced, or to qualify for occupational skills training. Many people require remedial education before they can benefit from other kinds of training.

Lack of basic skills in the work force is a problem for U.S. businesses as well as for individuals. The lack may manifest itself in sluggish productivity growth, increased needs for supervision, and deficient product quality. These costs are difficult to quantify but are probably substantial. While private firms can and sometimes do provide basic education to employees, many employers feel with some justification, that it is the job of the public school system, not business, to make sure that people enter the work force with adequate basic skills.

Retraining programs, which usually stress placement, often do not emphasize basic skills or remedial education. As a result, many people with basic skills problems receive no help at all from Title III projects. Few States have made remedial education an integral part of Title III services, although some with large numbers of non-English speaking workers have given it considerable attention. Most State directors of Title III programs see little need for providing remedial education, because they believe displaced workers have adequate basic skills, because remedial education is available elsewhere, or because of lack of interest on the part of the displaced workers. Project staff who work directly with displaced workers often see the matter differently; a number of projects have reported that one-fifth to one-third of their clients cannot read or figure at the sixth-grade level. Many displaced workers lack the basic skills which would qualify them for good new jobs or for training in skilled occupations. This is especially true of those who formerly held semi-skilled or unskilled jobs—the same workers who are especially vulnerable to displacement. Displaced worker programs can offer very effective remedial education services, as some outstanding individual projects have shown.

Mr. HEINZ. Let me recapitulate for a moment about what OTA found:

First, Mr. President, OTA found that less than 5 percent—1 in 20—of displaced workers ever receive assistance from JTPA—less than 5 percent.

Second, OTA found that most assistance takes the form of low-cost job search assistance. Higher cost items such as life-sustaining stipends, vocational skills training, and remedial education are all but ignored in many parts of the country, including hard-hit areas such as Pennsylvania.

My legislation would provide authority for the Department of Labor to issue $10 million in grants to the States for remedial education. Thus, this important part of job training will be removed from the general service mix of JTPA title III and given its own line of funds. OTA estimated that over 20 percent of the dislocated workers required remedial education before entering job training or job searches. My legislation gives remedial education the priority that it is completely lacking in the present service mix.

In addition, the bill requires the States to report plans for improving vocational skills training to dislocated workers, and requires the Department of Labor to assist the States in developing and implementing vocational education programs, if the States request the assistance.

Lastly, my legislation would require the States to report to us on the number and types of services dislocated workers presently receive, and how much is spent on each service. It is inconceivable that this type of basic information on an important program has never been provided before.

As a case in point, my hometown afternoon newspaper, the Pittsburgh Press, recently ran a detailed series on the empty promises of the Job Training Partnership Act. The articles detailed a sad and terrible story: The lost dollars, workers sent on endless and fruitless job searches, and worse. One of the cruelest aspects of the program is its inability to fund training programs for the poorest of the unemployed. As Charles Kisner of North Versailles Township said, "This program does not work for people with no income." He received $3 a day for his training. It did not even cover his bus fare to the classroom.

I ask unanimous consent that the articles from the Press appear in the RECORD.

REAL HELP ELUSIVE IN JOB TRAINING PARTNERSHIP

(By Paul Maryniak)

As hundreds of unemployed steelworkers protested outside The Pittsburgh Hilton and Towers, Downtown, Ronald Reagan on a dreary day in April 1983 heralded the birth of his $2.9 billion Job Training Partnership Act.

JTPA is the federal government's latest attempt to teach ghetto teenagers to read and write well enough to secure jobs, equip welfare recipients with skills for productive employment and retrain workers affected by factory shutdowns.

Like previous federal programs of this kind, JTPA uses tax dollars to fund full-time classroom instruction, on-the-job training and job-hunting.

Unlike past programs, JTPA asks business leaders to work with government bureaucrats in running it.

That partnership, Reagan said, would ensure JTPA "wouldn't be a bureaucratic boondoggle, but would provide real help."

Three years after Reagan's campaign address, a study by The Pittsburgh Press has found JTPA's "real help" is mired in a bureaucratic tangle that throws millions of dollars into dead-end training programs.

Millions more allocated for JTPA by Congress lie idle in the U.S. Treasury because states, including Pennsylvania, haven't set up programs to serve the unemployed.

An estimated 42 million economically disadvantaged people and 1.3 million dislocated workers who have been bypassed by economic recovery also have been bypassed by JTPA.

Between July 1984 and June last year, the program's first full operating year, it served about 3 percent of the jobless poor and about 5 percent of the victims of plant shutdowns.

Those lucky enough to get into JTPA programs are often teased with promises of jobs that don't materialize or don't last.

The Labor Department reported the placement of 64 percent of 647,300 people who completed programs for the poor and 65 percent of 113,600 who were in dislocated workers programs in 1984–85.

But U.S. Department of Labor officials don't define placement. They count both full- and part-time jobs in the figures they use, to tout JTPA's success. Andy they don't know how long the jobs last.

The Pittsburgh Press study of JTPA was based on a review of hundreds of documents from the U.S. Labor Department, the U.S. General Accounting Office, Congress, the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, Allegheny County and City of Pittsburgh agencies, and various national associations.

More than 150 JTPA participants and officials were interviewed.

Those documents and interviews showed JTPA more often is a multi-billion-dollar illusion offering empty promises to people like Elmer Golock, 51, of North Huntingdon in Westmoreland County.

Golock joined a JTPA job-search club in October 1984 shortly after he lost his laborer's job with Westinghouse Electric Corp., where he worked for 20 years.

"We spent 35 hours a week in a room with free long-distance telephone service, classified ads from out-of-town newspapers and workshops on how to look for a job. It wasn't much of a program," said the unemployed father of five.

Cheryl Boyd, 31, of Pittsburgh's Uptown District also found nothing but empty promises from JTPA.

A single mother who is working a temporary job to qualify for welfare, Miss Boyd found the Pittsburgh JTPA program "a waste of my time."

"I want on-the-job training. I don't care what it pays because I figure I can work my way up if I get my foot in the door. But the city people just keep saying 'Call back.' They seem terribly overworked," she said.

John Ezell, 21, of Oakland just got a job in Florida a few weeks ago—but not through the JTPA-funded electronics school he attended last year. It packed up and left town before delivering its promised job-placement assistance to trainees.

Miss Boyd, Golock and Ezell are among an estimated 2.5 million economically disadvantaged Pennsylvanians and 184,000 workers in the state idled by factory layoffs.

JTPA served 40,071 needy Pennsylvanians and 10,276 dislocated workers in 1984–85. Of those trainees, 17,136 poor people and 3,152 dislocated workers found jobs.

Yet, Pennsylvania failed to spend nearly $56 million in JTPA funds it received last year.

Nationally, federal labor officials said states never used $756.5 million in JTPA funds for the economically disadvantaged and $343.5 million for dislocated workers.

When Congress saw those figures last fall, it slashed appropriations for the dislocated workers program by 69.2 percent.

Pennsylvania reaped a bitter harvest for not spending 62.9 percent of its $21.7 million dislocated workers appropriation within the federal time limit—the state's 1986–87 funds were cut in half.

"The spending figures were distorted by the federal government for its own purposes. All our money was allocated for dislocated workers programs in 1984–85, but might not have been spent until the new program year began," said state JTPA director Mike Acker.

"We're saying the systems are too slow and the money is therefore unnecessary," countered U.S. Department of Labor budget officer Jack Rapport.

"There's some truth to both sides," observed Robert Knight, executive director of the National Association of Private Industry Councils, the groups of business and community leaders who guide local JTPA spending.

"The feds ignore the very large lag time" before allocated funds actually are spent, Knight said. "But the expenditure rate didn't go near what it should to sustain a quarter-billion-dollar-a-year program."

LITTLE PUBLICITY

Many times, dislocated workers and the poor never hear about JTPA.

Only this year has Pennsylvania begun a marketing program to reach them. For almost two years, state officials never put notices about JTPA in the envelopes containing unemployment or welfare checks.

Edward Pepper, 21, of North Braddock wishes he had known about JTPA before he spent $2,000 on tuition for a truck-driving school—which could have been covered by the program had he been enrolled.

He entered JTPA last year after quitting a job with a trucking firm that took $1,200 a month from his pay to cover leasing the vehicle.

"I was getting only about $400 a month for myself after the fee. I got in the hole real fast. Now I've got a student loan to pay and I'm still waiting for JTPA to help me find a job," said Pepper.

Often the needy can't get into JTPA programs because of its strict income eligibility requirements.

Renee Lagrotteria, 21, of Penn Hills is considered ineligible even though she, her husband and child live on only $100 a week.

"I wanted to get some training in the medical field, but they told me I was ineligible because we live with my husband's parents," she said. "They told me to move out. But we can't afford a place on our own."

Dislocated workers don't confront income eligibility standards.

But they, like the needy, often face a no-win situation when they try to avail themselves of training.

They cannot afford full-time instruction in a classroom on the $3 or $9 a day, depending on their need, they get from JTPA.

"This program does not work for people with no income," said Charles Kisner, 44 of North Versailles, who lost his 15-year steel job in 1983.

"I was in a school for a few months, but I quit. The $3 a day didn't even pay my bus fare. I've got a mortgage payment, a wife and two kids and I'm trying to make a go of things on $131 a month in food stamps and working as a bartender for $3.62 an hour 26 hours a week, Kisner said.

Even if they do stay in full-time classroom instruction, many JTPA trainees emerge no better off.

Studies have found JTPA nationally consists largely of short-term, low-cost training programs. It is "an efficient personnel office for businesses," consultant Gary Walker told Congress last May.

The Labor Department, in the Feb. 3 Federal Register, acknowledged that experts "expressed concern that the adult standards were too stringent and that as a result programs would be forced to avoid serving the hard to serve."

"I wanted to get into robotics but they told me I was too old," said Regis Wirkowski, 45, of Etna.

"One guy told me that schools want people who stand to work for 20 years in that field. They told me they'd call me if they thought there was some other kind of training program, but they never did," said Wirkowski, whose family of five children survive on welfare.

Some people like Joseph and Phyllis Brentzel of Westmoreland County, got real help from JTPA.

When Brentzel, 39, of North Huntingdon lost his job as a machinist in November 1984 after 15 years at Westinghouse, he and his 36-year-old wife in March of last year entered JTPA program that taught them how to write resumes and copy letters.

By June, Brentzel found one part-time and a full-time job. And Mr. Brentzel now works as a JTPA counselor in Uniontown.

But William Tomko of West Millin is more typical of JTPA's service.

A 32-year-old ex-steelworker Tomko last year made a 62-mile-round-trip trek to a robotics school five days a week after Allegheny County's JTPA program agreed to pay his tuition.

He has a diploma, but no job to support his wife and three children. "This program helped me get knowledge" said Tomko, "but the JTPA people aren't much help in lining up a job. I've gone on one interview through them and 12 on my own."

When Tom Nestor lost his job with U.S. Steel in September 1983, he hoped the county JTPA program would help him secure a job that would earn him enough money to support his wife and three children.

Instead of help, the 29-year-old Sheraden man found "a game."

"They give you directories of companies and have you call vice presidents to get around the personnel office, but all that happens is you get transferred to the personnel office anyway," said Nestor.

"It's frustrating," he said. "The federal government gives out a bunch of bucks to get us working and the only people who seem to have jobs are these bureaucrats who run these programs. They think nothing of sending you $3-an-hour jobs."

Pennsylvanians who have secured employment through JTPA got jobs that paid an average $4.71 an hour—slightly higher than the national JTPA average wage of $4.61 and well above the federal mimimum wage of $3.35.

In alalyzing 11,544 of the 15,293 jobs obtained by trainees in 1984–85 programs for the disadvantaged, the state found most placements occurred in precision production, paying an average $5.23 an hour. The 2,339 jobs in this field represented 20 percent of all JTPA-filled jobs.

The next-highest number of jobs were in administrative support, mainly secretaries and clerical positions. The 2,147 jobs obtained by trainees represented 18.4 percent of all placements and paid an average $4.71 an hour.

Jobs like fast-food work and janitorial help accounted for the third-highest number of placements—17.9 percent—and paid an average $3.86 an hour.

Six JTPA programs—covering Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, the Johnstown-Altoona area. Lackawanna County and Washington and Green counties—recorded the highest percentage of placements in service occupations.

Average wages in those jobs were less than $3.90 an hour.

"I have no problem with the average wages being paid in those jobs, especially when you consider many of the people never worked steadily before," state JTPA director Acker said.

But many unemployed people like Tom, 42, of Monroeville, do have a problem with the wages JTPA-filled jobs offer.

Tom is a dislocated steelworker who doesn't want his full name published because his 15-year-old son, one of two children, "is embarrassed enough to be going to school with kids who can afford a lot more than I can give him."

In 1984, Tom was laid off from his laborer's post at Westinghouse after 17 years on the job. Tom and his family are living with his father because their only income is $200 a month in food stamps.

Forced to quit a training program because he could not live on the $3 a day he received for full-time classroom instruction, Tom has been offered jobs by JTPA. But he has turned them down because they pay $5 an hour—half his old pay.

"They wanted me to go to Carnegie for a forklift job. Getting out there would run me $25 a week for gas. The job didn't pay any benefits and it meant I'd be taking home $150 a week. How am I supposed to pay for my car insurance, medical insurance and everything else?"

Critics and supporters of JTPA agree that no one can expect any public employment program to place people in jobs that pay what trainees think is an acceptable wage.

But many experts say no one knows enough about the jobs trainees are getting through JTPA.

"Although the data indicate over 9,600 youth and adults were placed in employment, very little is known about the quality of placements," said a report in March of last year by the Michigan Legislative Audit Bureau of that state's program—one of 10 most-heavily funded in the country.

Until recently, the U.S. Labor Department has bent to White House staffers who oppose monitoring how long JTPA jobs last because they felt it was too costly.

But groups like the AFL-CIO and the National Alliance of Businessmen say the information is needed badly.

They echoed the remarks made to The Pittsburgh Press by Robert Knight, executive director of the National Association of Private Industry Councils.

"If you can't address job retention," he said, "you can't do a lot to justify this program from either the perspective of the employer or the perspective of public investment."

Federal labor officials are now developing a monitoring system—but they still won't define placements.

That issue is raising concerns abour fraud and other abuse in JTPA nationally while audits raise allegations of mismanagement in Western Pennsylvania.

PROGRAM DESIGNED TO AVOID REPEAT OF CETA SCANDALS

(By Paul Maryniak)

For two days in January 1979 close to 50 people filed through Common Pleas Court to receive their punishment for pleading guilty to charges in the Allegheny County Manpower scandal.

That scandal—one of the most notorious public corruption cases in recent Pittsburgh history—cost taxpayers at least $300,000 in training funds lost through fraud.

Prosecutors said they could not account for as much as $3 million they said was squandered through mismanagement.

Scandals like the Manpower case were common across the nation when the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act was the primary federal effort to help train the unemployed. It was replaced by the Job Training Partnership Act in 1983.

No one knows how much of the $60 billion in CETA funds appropriated nationally between 1973 and 1983 was squandered or simply stolen.

But even the most conservative government reports say hundreds of millions of dollars annually were lost because of inadequate financial controls and lax management.

In the Manpower case, for example, convicted administrator Robert Hawkins and other aides used phony names of participants to siphon thousands of dollars in funds that were supposed to help poor people stay in school. Hawkins recently completed a six-year prison term.

Two years ago, federal prosecutors in Pittsburgh convicted two administrators of a CETA-funded job training program in McKeesport of embezzling more than $200,000. They used the money to buy fancy cars and jewelry and to throw lush parties for their friends.

To eliminate abuse—and reduce the red tape that engulfed the U.S. Labor Department's job training administration—JTPA shifted oversight and planning for the program from Washington to the states.

But the red tape that swamped federal officials under CETA now swamps the states, according to two separate consultant studies performed for the federal government, in the past two years.

Those studies also suggest JTPA administrators, anxious to avoid CETA's bad image, are focusing on programs that serve only those who need short-term training.

Yet, no study suggests that CETA was any more successful in accomplished the federal mission of providing the unemployed with skills.

Diane, a Penn Hills single mother of two, is so embarrassed about being on welfare she requested anonymity.

A 24-year-old woman, she is a veteran of federal jobs programs.

In the hope of securing full-time employment six years ago, she enrolled in CETA.

"All I got in three years was three government jobs. They each lasted 1,000 hours. I couldn't understand why none of them turned into fulltime jobs. All my employers said I was a good worker," she said.

Two years ago, Diane enrolled in Allegheny County's JTPA program.

Since then, she has been sent on three interviews. Each time, she said the prospective employer had not been told she was coming.

"The biggest difference between CETA and JTPA was at least I had a job for a while under CETA," she said.

Actually the biggest difference between CETA and JTPA is money.

Total funds provided for JTPA today are only a third of the $9.53 billion that went to CETA during the high point in its funding in 1978.

More than half of CETA's funds went to local governments to create jobs that theoretically were to lead to full-time employment.

But the Reagan Administration felt that public-service employment was nothing more than a subsidy for state and local governments that gave people dead-end jobs.

JTPA eliminated public-service employment.

It also drastically limited stipends for training—generally averaging $90 every two weeks under CETA—that gave people an income while they were in full-time classroom instruction.

Those limits to Allegheny County and Pittsburgh translate into $3 or $9 a day, depending on need.

The U.S. General Accounting Office last November said another local JTPA program in Pennsylvania, which it did not identify, provided no support to trainees with a monthly income greater than $87.

Officials say the lack of financial support particularly hurts workers who have lost jobs through plant shutdowns and need to develop new skills. Unlike people in programs for the economically disadvantaged, dislocated workers often can't qualify for welfare.

Bernard Powers, director of the Allegheny County Federal Programs Department, said insufficient support for full-time classroom trainees forces dislocated workers "to make sacrifices at a time when they have already lost so much.

I'm not in favor of government giveaways," Powers said. "But many people leave us because they can't afford to be trained."

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, this is an issue for my colleagues to consider very carefully. I know of few States which do not have large pockets of unemployment, and as we have seen in recent months a boom can turn into a bust very quickly. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a section-by-section analysis of its contents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2374

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Dislocated Workers Assistance Amendments Act".

SEC. 2. Section 3(c) of the Job Training Partnership Act (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and for each succeeding fiscal year to carry out section 309.".

SEC. 3. (a) Title III of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"REMEDIAL EDUCATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 309. (a) Upon application by a State for a grant under this section, the Secretary shall make grants to each State in each fiscal year in an amount not to exceed the State's allotment under subsection (b) for remedial education programs for displaced workers assisted under this title.

"(b)(1) From the amount for each fiscal year appropriated pursuant to section 3(c) of this Act, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated in each fiscal year as the population of the State bears to the population of all States.

"(2) The Secretary may reallot to other States the allotments described under paragraph (1) whenever the Secretary determines that a State has not requested or will not need the assistance authorized by this section.

"STATE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS; TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 310. No later than October 1 of each year, each State administering programs pursuant to this title shall submit a report to the Secretary of the activities of such programs performed in the preceding fiscal year which shall include—

"(1) a summary of the activities such State engaged in pursuant to section 303;

"(2) the relative amount of resources and funds which were used for each such activity from the available resources and funds for all such activities; and

"(3) recommendations and procedures to provide for a more equitable use of funds for vocational skills training.

"(b) The Secretary shall, upon application by a State, furnish technical assistance to that State in the implementation of the employment and training assistance program authorized by this title, designed to assure a more successful placement record for dislocated workers.".

(b) Section 303 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Financial assistance under this title from allocations made under section 301 may not be used for remedial education.".

(c) The table of contents of the Act is amended by adding after item "Sec. 308." the following:

"Sec. 309. Remedial education program.
"Sec. 310. State reporting requirements; technical assistance.".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS, "DISLOCATED WORKERS ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS ACT"

Section 1. Remedial education program:

Section 1 gives remedial education a priority in JTPA. States may apply to the Department of Labor for remedial education grants, which are to be used for education and skills training for displaced workers. $10 million is authorized to be apportioned to each State on the basis of the number of certified title III trainees in the State.

Remedial education is removed from the service mix within the Title III program. The grant program is a separate activity, to be coordinated with the displaced worker program.

Section 2. State reporting requirements and technical assistance:

Section 2 requires the states to provide the Department of Labor with an annual report detailing the services provided to displaced workers. The state must also include recommendations for improvements in vocational training.

The Department of Labor must provide technical assistance in developing job training programs to any state which requests such assistance.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, over 2 million displaced workers remain unemployed. Those who found new jobs are employed part time or have taken substantial pay cuts and many remain at risk of becoming unemployed again. According to OTA, job skills training is the best way to reemploy these workers. Unfortunately, OTA also found that the funding level for an effective Skills Training Program should be $2,000 per enrollee. JTPA seldom provides over $500 per enrollee—when training is provided at all.

Mr. President, I hope I have made my point very clear. The displaced workers need training. They need remedial education; $175 million is not going to provide it. My colleagues must understand that I am prepared to defend JTPA, and will do so later in the year.

By Mr. BENTSEN (for himself and Mr. WALLOP):

S. 2375. A bill to disapprove of certain deferrals of Strategic Petroleum Reserve budget authority, to authorize additional appropriations with respect to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and to increase oil import fees; to the Committee on Finance.

DISAPPROVAL OF DEFERRAL OF CERTAIN STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE BUDGET AUTHORITY

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the oil crisis of 1973 was a searing national event. For the first time in our Nation's peacetime history, a vital raw material was manipulated by foreign producers. And we remember the results all too well: shortages, gasoline lines that stretched around the block, odd-even license plates systems to control fuel use, and massive energy conservation and fuel switching investments that diverted billions of dollars from productive investments.

It took our Nation several years to piece together an effective response. But once we began, a broad national energy policy consensus emerged. It had many components, including energy conservation, mandatory fuel economy standards, the use of coal in place of oil, and many others. All of these steps were taken with one simple objective in mind: To reduce our Nation's reliance on imported oil. And the policy worked. Net oil imports in the peak import year of 1977 reached 8.6 million barrels or 47 percent of total U.S. consumption. By last year, net imports had dwindled to a bare 27 percent of oil use, a dramatic improvement.

A key part of that successful oil policy was establishment of an insurance policy, a strategic petroleum reserve, or SPR. The concept underlying SPR is simple: Our national security is greatly enhanced if this Nation has the ability to be energy independent—to be free of reliance on imported oil—for a limited period of time. The SPR will discourage a repeat of the 1973 embargo when our foreign policy was held hostage to foreign oil. And the larger SPR is, the greater is the deterrent to another embargo. The SPR will give oil producers—be they Iran or Libya or elsewhere—fair warning that oil embargos will not bring the United States to her knees. We will have the will and the means to retain a stout national defense and steady foreign policy.

These high-sounding words were backed by deeds. In 1977, we established a target of a SPR containing 750 million barrels of oil. With net oil imports of 8.5 million barrels per day in 1977, that was enough oil to replace imports for 90 days.

ADMINISTRATION POLICY TOWARD SPR

Progress on meeting the 750 million barrel target has been slow but steady. The Department of Energy estimates, for example, that SPR will contain 502 million barrels or two-thirds of the target by the end of this coming May. The administration in past years has not always worked eagerly to meet the congressional target. This foot-dragging came to a head in January when the administration proposed to freeze SPR at 502 million barrels. It requested no funding for fiscal year 1987 designed to move us closer toward our original target. Indeed, the administration is sitting on some $578 million in deferred congressionally appropriated funds from past years for the purchase of additional crude oil for SPR. And it was deferred an additional $41 million in congressional appropriations targeted to expand SPR capacity beyond the current 519 million barrels. Last week, it released another $157 million in deferred funds under threat of a GAO lawsuit.

The administration is failing to meet the congressional oil reserve target. It says our reserves are high enough. They are wrong. Here is what they say. Last year, net oil imports were 4.3 million barrels a day, exactly one-half the 1977 level. The administration argues that this lower import level translates into more insurance today compared to 1977 with less oil reserves. And indeed, the current 500 million barrel SPR will replace net oil imports for 116 days if oil imports remain at 1985 levels. The administration believes we can get more for less. But I was always taught that you rarely, if ever, get more for less. If the deal looks Too good to be true, that's probably what it is: Too good to be true.

And here is the catch: The administration's policy on SPR assumes that oil producers and consumers will ignore the recent freefall in oil prices to $10 or $11 per barrel and that U.S. oil imports will not rise. The administration's oil reserve policy assumes our Nation will act in the future like oil is still $29 a barrel.

Twenty-nine dollars per barrel is what oil prices have averaged since 1977. That is why U.S. oil production has risen since 1977. That is why U.S. crude oil reserves are higher today than they have been in a number of years. That is why U.S. oil consumption was lower last year than in 1977. And that is largely why foreign oil imports have dropped since then by half. But we all know oil prices can only go one way in the future. And we need an oil reserve policy designed for that future.

The administration's oil reserve policy is designed for the past. The administration hopes we will close our eyes and ears to the lightening and thunder rumbling across the world as oil prices have dropped by over 60 percent in recent months. It hopes we will turn our backs on economics and the market. It hopes America will not increase oil use at the lower prices. And it hopes the oil patch will maintain production and exploration despite the free-fall in oil prices.

Well, that is all too good to be true. The manipulated reduction in oil prices by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries [OPEC] since November has left the administration's oil reserve policy in shambles. If a SPR of 500 million barrels was adequate at 1985 prices, it sure isn't adequate at today's prices. And it will be markedly inadequate tomorrow.

OIL SUPPLY AND DEMAND OUTLOOK

Oil prices are set by OPEC. And OPEC wants lower prices to drive out non-OPEC production in areas like Texas and the North Sea. OPEC has shown a willingness to drive the price down and keep it down until its policy succeeds. And Norway's recently announced cut in her North Sea oil exploration budget shows that it may well succeed.

The collapse in oil prices engineered by OPEC is cutting like a raging brushfire throughout the oil patch. Oil company after oil company has announced dramatic reduction in investment and exploration. Reductions already announced will cut energy industry investment by over $11 billion this year, or 24 percent. Compared to its 1981 peak, energy industry investment will be down $49 billion, or 60 percent this year. Declining investment by energy firms will drag all investment down this year. As a result, total U.S. business investment is now projected to be flat this year and to decline at least 5 percent in 1987.

Oil industry employment is off sharply, as well. Some 33,000 jobs have been lost in the Texas drilling industry alone. And each oil industry job supports as many as five other jobs. These ripple effects of lower oil prices are cutting across the oil patch, reaching into many areas of my State of Texas, the West, and Southwest. The unemployment rate for Texas in March was up 1.7 percentage points over January's rate. And if oil prices rebound to hover even at $15 per barrel, my State will still lose up to 250,000 jobs in the next 3 years, and $30 billion in lost incomes.

We have heard a great deal about falling farmland values. But they have been matched or exceeded by the fall in value of oil and gas assets in recent months. Indeed, Standard & Poors has downgraded the credit ratings of six of Texas' biggest banks. Thirty-four banks failed last year in the Southwestern energy-producing States. More will follow this year. And one of Texas' largest S&L's is being reorganized because our weak domestic energy sector has pulled the rug from beneath the real estate market.

My State of Texas will fight back. But our Nation will not recover so easily. As I said earlier, we imported 27 percent of our oil last year—a dramatic improvement over the dangerous years in the late seventies when oil imports rose to 47 percent. With over 7 of every 10 barrels of oil coming from our own wells last year, we enjoyed energy security.

But we are losing that security daily now as oil prices drop. Oil drilling and exploration has ground to a near halt. Rigs are being stacked all across this Nation. Atlantic Richfield is shutting down over half its drilling rigs in Alaska as prices plunge. A startling low 865 rotary rigs are now in operation, the lowest level since the desperately dark days of the fifties when production far outstripped reserves. Virtually every oil company is in the midst of gutting oil exploration budgets and laying off field engineers and seismic crews. Cuts of up to 50 percent have been made by firms like Amoco, Phillips, and Atlantic Richfield. And the decline will continue, eroding our oil reserve base for years to come.

Data Resources has just predicted that domestic crude oil reserves will plunge 20 percent to 23 billion barrels over the next 4 years—the largest drop in our history.

Alaskan oil production will now peak next year. By 1991, its production will be down by half. Most vulnerable, however, are small so-called stripper wells—wells producing up to 10 barrels daily. We have some 452,000 of these wells. And they have been providing a crucial margin to oil supplies for years. Many strippers are isolated and expensive to maintain. But they will be able to produce for many years more if prices rebound. At present prices, however, they are being closed by the thousands. Phillips Petroleum, for example, is arbitrarily shutting down low volume strippers when maintenance becomes necessary. Expensive oil produced from wells with enhanced recovery techniques in California will be closed too, along with some Alaskan production. The loss of stripper production is the most serious. The Interstate Compact Commission has estimated that 40.8 percent of our stripper wells will be abandoned as uneconomical if oil stays at $10 per barrel. That would mean 184,000 wells being closed and the loss of 638,000 barrels of production.

A good number of these wells will need to be cemented shut to comply with State and Federal environmental laws, their production lost essentially forever. That's why firms like Atlantic Richfield and Union Oil Company are projecting a 1 million barrels decline in overall U.S. oil production this year.

All of that oil must be replaced with imports. In January and February, production was down 40,000 barrels per day. By March, the loss had accelerated to 75,000 barrels per day in less production than in 1985. As prices fall, oil imports will surge with rising demand, as well. The collapse of energy prices has left the administration without an energy policy. Indeed, it seems bent on encouraging consumption, not conservation. It has urged a roll back of the auto fuel economy standards which played a pivotal role in limiting the recent growth of domestic gasoline consumption. As a result, Conoco is projecting a 10 to 15 percent jump in driving this year. Moreover, the administration is seeking to throw out standards to conserve energy in Federal offices which capped temperatures at 68 degrees in winter and held them no lower than 76 degrees in summer.

Falling oil prices are also causing major industrial users to increasingly switch back to oil from coal and gas. Firms announcing major switches include Boeing, Southwest Forest Products, Grumman, LTV Corporation, and Goodyear. Overall since February, U.S. oil demand is up 5 percent, paced by jet fuel and gasoline. And we are using 800,000 barrels per day more thus far in 1986 compared to 1985.

RISING OIL IMPORTS AND DECLINING ENERGY SECURITY

Declining oil production and more consumption means greater imports. It means an erosion of reliable energy supplies and a deterioration in national security. Indeed, the drop in oil prices will dramatically heighten our Nation's oil vulnerability. The drop in production means higher oil imports. The rise in consumption means higher oil imports. Already this year, oil imports are up 18 percent or 750,000 barrels a day. And those higher oil imports will increasingly come from OPEC sources. Moreover, the longer oil prices remain at present levels, the greater will be the loss of production and the increase in foreign oil imports.

I asked the Library of Congress to examine the impact of lower oil prices on oil import levels. Their report was finished March 24, 1986, and contains the most comprehensive evaluation thus far of the looming threat to energy security posed by the OPEC manipulation of oil prices. The study is entitled, "Oil Price Decreases: Illustrative Effects on U.S. Oil Use, Production, and Imports."

The report doesn't pull punches. It shows that domestic oil production will decline nearly 30 percent to 7.5 million barrels a day in 1989 if prices stay around $10 per barrel. If prices rally to $15 per barrel, production will decline 20 percent, to 8.6 million barrels per day. Consumption was found to rise dramatically at today's low prices, as well. If prices stay at $10 per barrel, domestic oil use will jump a third by 1989 to 20.3 million barrels a day. At $15 per barrel, it will rise about 20 percent to 18.6 million barrels daily.

Both these trends will see imports shooting sky high very soon. At $10 per barrel, oil imports will surge 150 percent to 12.8 million barrels by 1989 from 5.1 million barrels in 1985. We export over half a million barrels daily. So net oil imports in 1989 are projected in this Library of Congress study to reach 12.3 million barrels at a price of $10 per barrel. At a price of $15 per barrel, net imports will jump to 9.5 million barrels, still up 125 percent from net oil imports in 1985.

Surprised? You shouldn't be. American consumers and producers are economically savvy; they react rationally to changing prices. And, their behavior will sharply erode the national energy insurance policy embodied in the SPR.

As the attached table shows, a 500 million barrel SPR will provide a 116-day reserve if net oil imports remain at the 1985 level. We will very likely never see oil imports that low again in our lifetime. At the lower oil prices now prevailing, the surge in imports has already dramatically eroded the reserve cushion of that 500 million barrels. Indeed, as the attached table shows, the 116-day cushion in 1985 will shrink sharply this year and into the future.

Since oil imports will increase faster if oil is at $10 per barrel, the reserve in SPR shrinks more quickly at $10 per barrel than if prices rebound to $15 per barrel. In either case, the insurance value of the SPR reserve will fall drastically in the immediate future as oil imports jump. This year alone, the insurance value of the SPR reserve will be eroded by half if oil holds around $10 per barrel. And the insurance value will drop a sharp 34 percent if oil rises to $15 per barrel. In other words, during 1986 alone, as much as one-half of the insurance value of SPR will be eroded by rising imports. And by 1989, SPR's insurance value will be worth considerably less than half its 1985 value. Indeed, it could well have less than half its targeted value of providing a 90-day oil reserve for our Nation. If oil remains at $10 per barrel, it will contain oil for a bare 41 days.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE INSURANCE DAYS

Year	Import replacement days available in the strategic petroleum reserve
	$10 per barrel	$15 per barrel
1985	116	116
1986	58	77
1987	55	67
1988	47	60
1989	41	53

OUR OIL INSURANCE POLICY IN DISARRAY

The administration has been accused of having no energy policy. Based on administration inaction on SPR and retreat on energy conservation, those accusations are on target.

But it looks to me as though it has a confused national security policy as well. Sitting on its hands while our Nation's energy insurance policy erodes is imperiling our national security. It is setting the Nation up for energy blackmail again just as we were challenged in 1973.

The administration's oil reserve policy is a nonpolicy. It will result in a dramatic reduction in our Nation's oil security as oil imports continue rising. That policy has three other features which need reform.

First, the policy is actually weakening the domestic energy market, further eroding our energy security. According to DOE, if the SPR expansion to 750 million barrels was put back on track, an additional 100,000 to 200,000 barrels of crude a day could be purchased on domestic oil markets open the next 5 years. Moreover, if production at the naval petroleum reserve at Elk Hills was reduced to conserve it for an emergency, some 75,000 barrels a day of production would be withdrawn from domestic markets. Taken together, those two steps would dramatically enhance our oil security and stabilize the domestic oil market and prices by adding 175,000 barrels a day of new demand this year and 275,000 barrels per day in 1988 and thereafter.

Second, current administration oil reserve policy is to buy dear and sell cheap. The Government has paid an average $29.06 per barrel for the crude now in SPR, but is selling potential reserves from Elk Hills at $8.88 per barrel. It makes far more sense for the administration to reverse course and begin buying oil for the reserve now rather than selling it.

Third, the administration has proposed to sell the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserves. And it has continued pumping that field despite the dramatic erosion now occurring in the insurance value of our oil reserves. We shoud be adding to those reserves, not depleting them.

TOWARD A NEW OIL RESERVE POLICY

What should be done? First, the administration must expand SPR. It should accept the congressional mandate that requires a 90- or 120-day reserve of oil. The prospective 60-day reserve we will have at the end of this year and the prospective 41-day reserve we could have by 1989 if oil prices remain at present prices is simply inadequate. And second, the administration should stop pumping oil from the deep reservoirs at Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserves pending a full review of prices there and the role Elk Hill reserves should play in our national oil reserve system.

OUTLINE OF LEGISLATION

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVES

The administration should reverse direction and accept the congressional 750 million barrel target. Moreover, the Department of Energy must promptly undertake studies to identify where an additional 250 million barrels of capacity can be located in the event a 1 billion barrel reserve is needed in the future.

CAPACITY EXPANSION

The Department of Energy plans to have 519 million barrels of SPR capacity on hand by early 1987. It will cost DOE $41 million including $9 million for surface work to raise that capacity to 600 million barrels at the existing Bryan Mound and West Hackberry SPR sites. That money has already been appropriated, but deferred by the administration.

According to DOE, despite the release of $157 million in deferred funds 2 weeks ago, an additional $163 million is needed to raise the SPR capacity by 150 million additional barrels to a total 750 million barrels. That expansion has two components. It would involve opening a new site of 140 million barrel capacity at Big Hill, TX, at a cost of $148 million. This project carries a total cost of $300 million, but $152 million is now being spent by DOE. Second, a new 10 million barrel cavern at the existing Bayou Choctow site near Baton Rouge must be created at a cost of $15 million. This project carries a total cost of $20 million, but $5 million is now being spent by DOE.

The capacity expansion to 750 million should begin immediately. It is a 5-year job at best, and the sooner we begin, the sooner the erosion in our insurance policy can be stemmed. Congress had appropriated $198 million for capacity expansion. But the administration deferred those funds. Under threat of court order, $157 million of those funds were released last week by the administration, leaving $41 million in construction money still deferred. The legislation I am introducing today will reappropriate that $41 million, and authorizes $163 million more to (a) expand SPR capacity to 750 million barrels and (b) to conduct preliminary survey site work for another 250 million barrels of capacity for a total potential SPR of 1 billion barrels.

OIL FILL

In addition, the administration should carry out the congressional mandate to fill SPR to 750 million barrels. By the end of May, 502 million barrels of crude will be in SPR. Some 250 million more barrels are needed to bring the reserve to its target of 750 million barrel capacity. And the administration should begin planning now to make these purchases as new capacity is opened at West Hackberry, Bryan Mound, Big Hill, and Bayou

Choctaw. Congress has already appropriated $578 million for such purchases. But like funding for capacity expansion, the administration has deferred these funds. My legislation will reauthorize that $578 million and authorize an additional $1 billion in fiscal year 1987, 1988, and 1989 to provide funds for the purchase of 250 million more barrels of crude oil for SPR.

I noted earlier that the administration has paid an average of $29.06 for the oil current in SPR. The oil I propose we buy now for SPR will cost considerably less, perhaps only a third as much, a bargain in anyone's book.

STRIPPER WELLS

DOE estimates that the fill capacity of SPR is now 100,000 barrels a day. That fill rate could grow to 200,000 barrels per day in 1988 as the Big Hill site is leeched and filled. The additional crude oil to be purchased under my legislation for SPR should come from domestic stripper wells which would otherwise be capped in today's weak market. Anything we can do to strengthen the demand for oil and especially stripper oil, will help firm up the oil market. In particular, buying stripper crude which would otherwise be lost will keep these vitally important wells on-line, and add to our Nation's oil reserves.

FINANCING SPR

Over $4 billion will be needed to raise our oil reserve to 750 million barrels. With the budget deficit ballooning, I believe these funds should come from an increase in our existing custom's duties on imported crude and oil products. That fee is quite small now, ranging from a nickel (5.25¢) to a dime (10.5¢) a barrel for imported crude, for example. Raising these customs duties to between 21 cents and 42 cents, with proportionate increases on imported oil products as my legislation proposes, will produce $850 million a year according to the U.S. International Trade Commission.

ELK HILLS NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE

Far and away the Government's largest natural oil reserve is the Elk Hills field in Kern County, CA. It is one of the three naval petroleum reserve sites, and contains some 700 million barrels of high quality crude reserves. The administration has proposed selling these reserves. I have reservations about the wisdom of that sale. But I am even more concerned about an immediate problem at Elk Hills.

The Government is presently selling about 93,000 barrels a day there at a 30-percent discount from posted prices in the local Kern County market. Currently, these sales of Elk Hills crude average $8.88 per barrel, over $4 per barrel below the $13.28 posted price. The administration and DOE's willingness to accept such low prices when that oil will be far more valuable in the future raises dramatic questions in my mind regarding the administration's management of Elk Hills. We have bought oil at an average $29.06 per barrel for SPR, yet are selling oil from the Elk Hills reserve at $8.88 per barrel. That is an energy policy of buy high and selling low. And it is an energy policy that needs review. Specifically, 80 percent of the Government's 93,000 barrel per day share of Elk Hill's production is from deep wells. And it may well be that some or all that production can be shut in without harming reservoir integrity, and kept as part of our national oil reserve. I question the wisdom of depleting oil from a national reserve at $8.88 a barrel when it would be worth two or three times that as part of our national oil reserve when OPEC jacks prices up again in the future.

I am concerned with more than the price we are receiving from Elk Hills. We are selling crude from there when it could conceivably be retained as part of our strategic petroleum reserve. The Department of Energy contends that Elk Hills is on the west coast while we need reserves stored in the gulf coast. Yet in a prolonged energy crisis, Elk Hills production could well be valuable either in swap arrangements or even transhipped to the gulf cost. Moreover, North Slope production will begin to decline after next year. And Elk Hills production could partially replace that lost oil production in a crisis.

There are more questions than answers right now involving Elk Hills. And my legislation calls for a pause in the production of its deep wells for 6 months while Congress and the administration examine all aspects of this national asset in light of our need for expanded crude oil reserves. This pause in production will affect only that portion of Elk Hills output which can be shut in temporarily without harming reservoir integrity. Moreover, this pause will not affect that small portion of the Elk Hills output which is owned by Chevron. My legislation will permit Chevron to continue taking its share of production from Elk Hills at up to the actual levels of production it received in 1985.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a factsheet on this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the factsheet was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FACT SHEET: ENERGY SECURITY ACT: ELK HILLS

Review of Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve: Elk Hills is by far the nation's largest Naval Petroleum Reserve. Yet, its high quality crude is currently being sold rather than preserved as part of the United States oil reserve. Moreover, the crude is being sold at $8.88 per barrel, some 30 percent below the prevailing price for similar crude from nearby oil fields. This Act mandates a six-month pause in sales from the deep wells at Elk Hills pending review of pricing practices there. That freeze will preserve 75,000 barrels per day in our nation's Reserves. In combination with expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, this will boost demand for domestic oil production by 175,000 barrels daily.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE

I. Capacity Expansion:

Target Capacity Called for by Energy Security Act: 750 million barrels.

Current Administration Target: 502 million barrels.

Additional Capacity and Cost (Department of Energy Data): Expansion of Storage Capacity to 750 million barrels will require additional reserves at Bryan Mound, West Hackberry, Bayou Choctaw, and Big Hill salt caverns.

Under threat of court suit, the Administration released $157 million for this expansion in mid-April. An additional $204 million is needed, of which $41 million has been appropriated, but deferred by the Administration. This Act reappropriates those funds and authorizes the balance for FY 1987. These funds will also permit a preliminary survey to be initiated to assess where capacity exists to raise total reserves to one billion barrels, if needed.

II. Crude Oil Purchase: Crude oil to complete the 750 million capacity reserve could cost an estimated $3.5 billion over the next five years. $578 million of these funds has been appropriated, but deferred by the Administration. The Act reappropriates those funds and authorizes the additional $3 billion needed for this bill.

III. Stripper Priority for Reserve Oil Purchases: Falling oil prices have jeopardized high-cost stripper well production. In some cases, these vulnerable wells have already been capped. And many other wells face eminent closure, prematurely ending their useful lives, as routine maintenance comes due. The Interstate Oil Compact Commission has estimated that as many as 184,000 of our 452,000 stripper wells will be closed this year. This Act requires the Secretary of Energy to purchase crude for the further expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to the maximum extent possible from imperiled stripper wells in danger of being capped.

IV. Strategic Petroleum Reserve Insurance Values:

Original Reserve Insurance Target: 750 million barrels or 90 days replacement of imports at the 1977 rate of importation.

Current Administration Reserve Target: $500 million barrels or 116 days replacement of imports at the 1985 rate of importation.

Future Insurance Reserve: The present 500 million capacity oil reserve provided insurance for 116 days of imports in 1985. Oil imports are up 18 percent thus far in 1986, eroding the reserve coverage to 100 days. By year-end, it will be worth as little as 60 days, barely two-thirds the initial Congressional target of 90 days. This Act will boost the Strategic Petroleum Reserve's insurance values by 50 percent as quickly as possible.

V. Funding for Reserve Expansion: To provide the funds appropriated and authorized by this Act, the Energy Security Act increases the current customs duty on crude oil imports and oil product imports by $850 million annually beginning next January. The across-the-board increase is proportionate. For example, the current fee on imported crude of 5¢ to 10¢ per barrel will rise to a range of 21¢ to 42¢ per barrel.

By Mr. THURMOND (by request):

S. 2376. A bill to authorize appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1987 and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, at the request of the administration, today I am introducing a bill authorizing certain activities of, and appropriations for, the Department of Justice.

As it has for the last 3 years, the Department has recommended legislation to authorize appropriations for the approaching fiscal year and to permanently include in the United States Code various authorities which historically have been part of the annual authorization bill.

Mr. President, Senator BIDEN and I have agreed with the Department that certain authorizations, such as those relating to the purchase of vehicles and firearms, should be made permanent in order to eliminate the disruptive effects of their needless inclusion in the annual authorization process. Although the Judiciary Committee reported, and the Senate approved, authorization bills in 1984 and 1985 which included these permanent authorizations, the House unfortunately did not consider those bills. In fact, Congress has not enacted a Department of Justice authorization bill for the last 7 fiscal years. I am hopeful that this year Congress will break this disappointing practice.

Mr. President, the principal features of the Department of Justice's proposed appropriation authorization request includes increases to be used: To construct additional facilities to ease the overcrowding the Federal Prison System; to continue the efforts of the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Federal Bureau of Investigation; to update and modernize information management capabilities; and, to defend claims against the Federal Government. Decreases are recommended in administration costs, several criminal justice system grants, and travel, meal and lodging costs incurred by State and local officials training at Department of Justice facilities. Other decreases are recommended in programs where the workload has declined or an alternative source of funding is available. Further the administration proposes to terminate five programs that were funded in 1986. These are: The President's Commission on Organized Crime, the Juvenile Justice Grant Program, the Drug Enforcement Administration's State Drug Division Grant Program, the Regional Information Sharing System Grant Program, and the State Justice Institute.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill which I am introducing, the letter of transmittal from the Department of Justice, and section-by-section anaylsis of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2376

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Department of Justice Appropriation Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1987."

"(E) the keeping of attached property (including boats, vessels, or other property attached or libeled), actual expenses incurred, such as storage, moving, boat hire, or other special transportation, watchmen's or keepers' fees, insurance, and an hourly rate including overtime for each Deputy Marshal required for special services, such as guarding, inventorying, and moving;

"(F) copies of writs or other papers furnished at the request of any party;

"(G) necessary travel in serving or endeavoring to serve any process, writ, or order, except in the District of Columbia, with mileage to be computed from the place where service is returnable to the place of service or endeavor; and

"(H) overtime expenses incurred by Deputy Marshals in the course of serving or executing civil process.

If the property is not disposed of by Marshal's sale, the commission shall be in such amount, within the range set by the Attorney General, as may be allowed by the court. In any case in which the vessel or other property is sold by a public auctioneer, or by some party other than the Marshal or his Deputy, the commission authorized under this subsection shall be reduced by the amount paid to such auctioneer or other part. This subsection applies to judicially ordered sales and execution sales, without regard to whether the judicial order of sale constitutes a seizure or levy within the meaning of State law.

"(2) The Attorney General shall prescribe from time to time regulations which establish a minimum and maximum amount for the commission collected under paragraph (1).

"(d) The United States Marshals may require a deposit to cover any of the fees and expenses prescribed under this section.

"(e) Without regard to the provisions of 31 U.S.C. § 3302, the United States Marshals Service is authorized to credit amounts from fees and expenses collected (including amounts for overtime expenses) for the service of civil process, including complaints, summonses, subpoenas, and similar process and seizures, levies, and sales performed by the Marshals to its current appropriation account (Salaries and Expenses, United States Marshals) for the purpose, only, of carrying out those activities."

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, April 10, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On behalf of the Attorney General, I hereby transmit for the consideration of the Congress, the proposed Department of Justice Appropriation Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987.

The enclosed proposal contains five parts. Part I contains provisions related to the 1987 fiscal year annual authorization. Part II is permanent enabling legislation. Part III contains the proposed United States Marshals Service Act previously submitted to the Congress. Part IV contains provisions supporting determinations made by the President's 1987 Budget to reduce and terminate certain programs. Part V contains provisions that conform the various tables, code chapters and sections to the amendments made by the proposal. Finally, the proposal is accompanied by a detailed section-by-section analysis.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised this Department that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal to the Congress and that its enactment would be in accord with the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BOLTON,
Assistant Attorney General.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—1987 FISCAL YEAR AUTHORIZATION

Proposed Section 2:

This section of the bill authorizes 1987 fiscal year appropriations for various categories of activities conducted by the Department of Justice. Fourteen separate categories of appropriations are listed.[1] Within certain of these categories additional provisions are made for allowing a portion of an appropriation to be available on a multi-year or a no year basis. Similar language has been inserted in previous authorization and appropriation legislation and the amount authorized to be expended will equal the total of those amounts. For example, funds for the FBI's automated data processing and telecommunications expenses will be available for two years, and the FBI's and DEA's funds for research will be available until expended. Other provisions set maximum amounts which may be used for certain purposes, such as representation expenses, construction of witness safesites, unusual expenses necessary in the collection of evidence, and emergency expenses. Finally, there is a one year modification of the statute, 18 U.S.C. 3525, which authorizes compensation payments to the families of persons killed by then current participants in the witness protection program. The modification allows for compensation if the crime was committed within two years of the termination of the witness protection but prior to the effective date of the statute (October 12, 1984).

TITLE II—PERMANENT ENABLING LEGISLATION

Part II of the Bill contains authorizations that, for the most part, the Department had been obtaining in prior years on an annual basis. If Part II is enacted as permanent law, future Department of Justice authorizations bills will generally be confined to the true fiscal year authorization contained in Part I.

Proposed Bill Section 3(a):

Part II of Title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 37 the following new chapter:

"Sec.
"577. General Authorizations
"578. Authorizations and Exemptions Available for Undercover Investigative Operations

This section of the bill will amend Title 28, United States Code, by adding chapter 38, which will contain two sections. Proposed section 577 will provide permanent appropriations authorization for the various types of expenses incurred by the Department of Justice in the conduct of its activities. Proposed section 578 will provide specific authorizations and exemptions available only for undercover investigative operations.

Proposed Section 577:

General Authorizations—Department of Justice;

Proposed section 577 contains nine principal subsections. Subsection 577(a) contains eighteen authorization provisions which, in general, are available for all Department of Justice activities. Subsection 577(b) provides general gift acceptance authority and subsection 577(c) provides general authority to collect user fees. Subsections 577 (d), (e), (f) and (g) contain specific authorization provisions applicable, respectively, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Bureau of Prisons. Subsection 577(h) defines the term law enforcement as used in the general authorization provisions of subsection 577(a).

Proposed Section 577(a):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use Department of Justice appropriations to make payments for the conduct of the activities of the Department of Justice. Such payments may include payments for:

This provision allows appropriations for the Department of Justice to be used to support the Department's activities. Additional specific authorizations are provided in eighteen subsections.

Proposed Section 577(a)(1):

Expenses, mileage, compensation, and per diem in lieu of subsistence, of witnesses as authorized by law; provided that no witness shall be paid more than one attendance fee for any one calendar day:

This provision allows Department of Justice appropriations to be used to pay for the fees and expenses of witness and prohibits any multiple payment to a witness who attended more than one proceeding on the same day.

Proposed Section 577(a)(2):

Restriction or compensation pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 3525 for victims injured by protected witnesses;

Section 1208 of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473), codified as 18 U.S.C. 3525, authorizes the payment of restitution or compensation to victims injured by participants in the witness protection program. This provision authorizes such payments to be made from Department of Justice appropriations.

---

[1] The appropriation for the Antitrust Division includes funds transferred from the Interstate Commerce Commission)

Proposed Section 577(a)(3):

Advances of public moneys under 31 U.S.C. 3324; provided that travel advances to law enforcement personnel engaged in undercover activity shall be deemed public monies within the meaning of 31 U.S.C. 3527;

This provision will give the Attorney General authority to permit advance payments on contracts and in other matters where it is in the interest of the Department of Justice to do so. The proviso regarding travel advances to law enforcement personnel engaged in undercover activity assures that the non-negligent loss of such funds will be reimbursable.

Proposed Section 577(a)(4):

Planning, acquisition of sites and construction of new law enforcement facilities; and construction, operation, remodeling and repair of buildings and facilities used for law enforcement purposes; and the purchase of necessary equipment and the payment of necessary expenses directly related to the conduct of these activities;

This provision will provide the Attorney General with construction and renovation authority. The authority granted is limited to buildings and facilities used for law enforcement purposes. The availability of this construction authority is limited to those law enforcement bureaus listed in proposed section 577(h).

Proposed Section 577(a)(5):

Contracting with private organizations or entities for the safekeeping, care and subsistence of persons held under any legal authority;

This provision will allow the Department of Justice, principally the Bureau of Prisons and the Immigration and Naturalization Service, to contract with private companies to provide prison and detention facilities.

Proposed Section 577(a)(6):

The lease or purchase of passenger motor vehicles; provided that police type vehicles for law enforcement use may be purchased without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the fiscal year during which such a purchase is effected;

The lease or purchase of passenger motor vehicles is generally prohibited by 31 U.S.C. 1343 unless specifically authorized by statute. This provision provides the necessary statutory authorization for such leases and purchases. The provision regarding police type vehicles is necessary because the required design features for such vehicles normally result in a higher purchase price than the general purchase price limitation for any given fiscal year.

Proposed Section 577(a)(7):

The purchase of firearms and ammunition for use by law enforcement officers and security personnel, and participation in firearms competitions;

This provision would authorize both the purchase of firearms and ammunition for use by law enforcement officers and security personnel and the participation in firearms competition by Department personnel.

Proposed Section 577(a)(8):

The purchase, lease, maintenance and operation of aircraft for law enforcement purposes;

The lease or purchase of aircraft is generally prohibited by 31 U.S.C. 1343 unless specifically authorized by statute. This provision provides the necessary statutory authorization for such leases and purchases.

Proposed Section 577(a)(9):

The lease of real property, including space in buildings, without disclosure of the government's involvement; provided that any such lease and the non-disclosure of the government's involvement are necessary for law enforcement or foreign counterintelligence purposes, other than for an undercover investigative operation; provided further that such authority may be exercised only by those law enforcement bureaus listed in 28 U.S.C. 578(a)

This provision will allow the rental of space for law enforcement and foreign counterintelligence investigations without disclosure of the government's involvement. Such authority is needed when obtaining lookout post and other offsite premises where procurement, banking and other regulatory statutes might require, directly or indirectly, the disclosure of the government's role in the transaction. Similar authority is provided separately in proposed section 578 for undercover investigative operations. This provision would provide the same exemptions available to certified exempt undercover operation under 28 U.S.C. 578(c)(1) except that this provision only applies to non-undercover operations:

Proposed Section 577(a)(10):

Miscellaneous and emergency expenses authorized or approved by either the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General for Administration

This provision allows the use of funds in unforeseen circumstances, such as the appointment of a Special Counsel under the Ethics In Government Act.

Proposed Section 577(a)(11):

Official reception and representation expenses;

This provision authorizes the use of funds to pay the expenses of Department of Justice senior employees whose official positions entail the responsibility for establishing and maintaining relationships of value to the Department.

Proposed Section 577(a)(12):

Attendance at meetings;

This provision allows the Attorney General to authorize employees to attend meetings without regard to the prohibitions of 5 U.S.C. 5946.

Proposed Section 577(a)(13):

Services of experts and consultants as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109;

This provision permits payments to be made for the services of experts and consultants. Payment for such services is prohibited by 5 U.S.C. 3109 unless authorized by statute.

Proposed Section 577(a)(14):

Services of interpreters and translators who are not citizens of the United States; Government employment is generally available only to United States citizens. This provision permits the employment of noncitizens solely in the capacities of interpreters and translators.

Proposed Section 577(a)(15):

Payment of rewards, the purchase of evidence and payment for information in connection with law enforcement;

These provisions allow law enforcement agencies to pay rewards, purchase evidence, and pay for information as part of their mission to conduct criminal and foreign counter intelligence investigations.

Proposed Section 577(a)(16):

The purchase of insurance for motor vehicles, boats and aircraft operated in official government business in foreign countries;

The United States government generally acts as a self insurer. In foreign countries, however, compulsory insurance laws and/or prudent business practice may require that motor vehicles, boats and aircraft be covered by private insurance policies. This provision will allow the Department of Justice to produce appropriate insurance coverage when doing business in foreign countries.

Proposed Section 577(a)(17):

Contracting with individuals for personal services abroad; provided that such individuals shall not be regarded as employees of the United States for the purpose of any law administered by the Office of Personnel Management; and Government employment is generally available only to citizens of the United States. This provision would allow the Department of Justice to employ non-U.S. citizens in those foreign countries where the Department conducts activities. It will also allow the Department to employ U.S. citizens who reside abroad; in particular, the dependants of Foreign Service, military and other U.S. Government personnel. Such employees would not be entitled to the personnel benefits associated with United States government employment.

Proposed Section 577(a)(18):

Benefits for employees serving overseas as authorized under section 901 (3), (5), (6A), (8), (9), and section 904 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4081 (3), (5), (6A), (8), (9) and 22 U.S.C. 4084), and under the regulations issued by the Secretary of State;

This provision affords to Department of Justice employees serving overseas certain of the benefits provided for members of the foreign service. These benefits, as set forth in Title 22, include: travel expenses for family members (§ 4081(3)); medical care (§ 4081(5)); rest and recuperation travel (§ 4081(6A)); family visitation travel (§ 4081(8)); emergency family visitation (§ 4081(9)); and health care benefits (§ 4084).

Proposed section 577(b):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to collect fees from state, local or private agencies or members of the public to defray all or part of the costs of any service, including training provided by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the National Institute of Corrections, which the Department of Justice may provide to such agencies or individuals. Any fees collected shall be credited to the appropriation accounts used to pay the expenses incurred in providing the service and shall be available in those accounts only to the extent specified in appropriations acts.

This provision would authorize the Department of Justice to collect fees for services rendered to State, local or private agencies or members of the public. Fees would not exceed the costs of the services. Any moneys collected would be credited to the appropriation account used to pay the expenses of providing the service and would be available to the extent specified in appropriation acts.

Proposed section 577(c)

(1) The Attorney General is authorized to accept and utilize, on behalf of the United States, any gift, donation, or bequest of real or personal property for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Department of Justice, including Federal Prison Industries, Inc. No gift may be accepted:

(A) that attaches conditions inconsistent with applicable laws or regulations, or

(B) that is conditioned upon or will require the expenditure of appropriated funds unless such expenditure has been authorized by Acts of Congress.

(2) The Attorney General shall promulgate rules for accepting gifts pursuant to this provision, to ensure, among other things, that no gifts are accepted under circumstances that will create a conflict of interest for the Department of Justice.

(3) Gifts and bequests of money and the proceeds from sales of property received as gifts or bequests that were not immediately useable by the Department of Justice may be credited to any appropriation or fund and shall remain available until expended, upon order of the Attorney General.

(4) Gifts, bequests of property, and property acquired from the proceeds credited to appropriations or funds pursuant to subsection (3), and which are no longer required by the Department of Justice for its needs and the discharge of its responsibilities, shall be reported to the Administrator of General Services for transfer, donation, or other disposal in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended.

(5) Property accepted pursuant to this section and the proceeds credited to appropriations or funds pursuant to subsection (3) shall be used as nearly as practicable in accordance with the terms of the gift or bequest.

(6) For the purpose of Federal income, estate, or gift taxes, property accepted under subsection (a) of this section shall be considered as a gift or bequest to or for the use of the United States.

This provision would authorize the Attorney General to accepts gifts, donations, or bequests of real or personal property to aid the Department in carrying out its functions, including the functions of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc. Gifts that attach conditions inconsistent with applicable laws or that are conditioned upon or require the expenditure of appropriated funds (unless the expenditure had been authorized by Congress) may not be accepted. The Attorney General is required to establish rules to insure that no gifts are accepted that will create a conflict of interest for the Department.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use appropriations for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make payments for the conduct of its activities. Such payments may not be used to pay the compensation of any employee in the competitive service but may include payments for:

This provision allows appropriations for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to be used to support the Bureau's activities. Payment from Bureau appropriations for the compensation of any employee in the competitive service is expressly forbidden. Additional specific authorizations are set out in subsections A through E.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1)(A):

Expenses necessary for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States;

Payments for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States include the expenses necessary for the FBI to conduct investigations of those violations of Federal law for which the FBI has responsibility. In addition to national priority areas of organized crime, foreign counterintelligence, terrorism and white-collar crime, the FBI has primary jurisdiction over numerous other Federal statutes concentrating on such areas as interstate crimes, forcible, crimes against banking institutions, civil rights, and fugitive investigations. Typical expenses include personnel compensation and benefits, travel and transportation of persons and property, rent, communications and utilities, capital and noncapital equipment, and supplies.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1)(B):

Protection of the person of the President of the United States and the person of the Attorney General;

Payments are utilized for the purposes of assuring the security of the President and of the Attorney General. Typical expenses include personnel compensation and travel costs.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1)(C):

Investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State, as may be directed by the Attorney General;

This provision would allow the Attorney General to authorize payments to conduct investigations regarding official matters of concern to the Department of Justice and the Department of State.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1)(D):

Training in the United States and abroad for foreign law enforcement personnel as a counterpart to similar training programs designed for State and local officers; and

This section would extend explicit authority for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to provide training for foreign law enforcement personnel, either in the United States or abroad, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State. Heretofore, the conduct of the kind of training that would be explicitly authorized by this section has been justified as inherenty authorized as part of the Bureau's mission. The authority provided by this section would not change the statutory basis for, or the funding of, training of foreign law enforcement personnel carried out by the Bureau under arrangements with the Agency for International Development pursuant to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended.

Proposed Section 577(d)(1)(E):

Acquisition, collection, classification and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with, and for the official use of, the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities and other institutions, such exchange to be subject to cancellation if dissemination is made outside the receiving departments of related agencies.

This provision authorizes the collection and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with authorized officials. Expenses include the maintenance at FBI Headquarters of the Central Records System, consisting of over six million investigative, personnel, applicant, administrative, and general case files, and the maintenance of fingerprint identification records submitted by over 20,000 authorized agencies. In addition, payments under the authorization include expenses of providing information contained in FBI records to other Federal agencies in compliance with Executive Order 10450 and to authorized officials of States, cities, and other institutions.

Proposed Section 577(d)(2):

The Federal Bureau of Investigation may establish and collect fees for the processing of noncriminal employment and licensing fingerprint cards. Such fees shall represent the full cost of furnishing the service. The funds collected shall be credited to the Salaries and Expenses, Federal Bureau of Investigation appropriation without regard to 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), and shall be available only to the extent specified in appropriations acts, until expended, to pay for salaries and other expenses incurred in operating the FBI Identification Division. No fee shall be assessed in connection with the processing of requests for criminal history records by criminal justice agencies for criminal justice purposes or for employment in criminal justice agencies.

This provision allows the Federal Bureau of Investigation to set fees for services rendered by the Identification Division and permits any collected fees to be used to pay for the operation of the Bureau's Identification Division.

Proposed Section 577(e):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use appropriations for the Drug Enforcement Administration to make payments for the conduct of its activities. Such payments may include payments for expenses necessary for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States where such crimes arise from drug related activities, including but not limited to crimes enumerated in Title 21 of the United States Code.

This provision allows appropriations for the Drug Enforcement Administration to be used to support the Administration's activities. Payments are particularly authorized for the conduct of the Administration's principal mission, the detection and prosecution of drug related criminal offenses.

Proposed Section 577(f):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use appropriation for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to make payments for the conduct of its activities. Such payments may include payments for:

This provision allows appropriations for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to be used to support the activities of the Service. Additional specific authorizations are set out in subsection (1) through (6).

Proposed Section 577(f)(1):

Distribution of citizenship textbooks to aliens without cost to such aliens;

This provision allows appropriations to be used to pay for citizenship textbooks which may be distributed, without costs, to aliens who are seeking or are interested in seeking United States citizenship.

Proposed Section 577(f)(2):

Allowances to aliens for work performed while held in custody under the immigration laws;

This provision will allow aliens to be paid for work which they perform while in custody under the immigration laws. Payment rates are set, from time to time, in Department of Justice appropriations acts.

Proposed Section 577(f)(3):

Refunds of maintenance bills, immigration fines and other items properly returnable, except deposits of aliens who become public charges and deposits of secure payment of fines and passage money;

This provision will allow appropriations for the Immigration and Naturalization

Service to be used to pay for refunds to which an alien may be properly entitled. Such appropriations may not, however, be used for refunds of any deposit by an alien who becomes a public charge, or of deposits made to secure payment of a fine or to secure payment of passage money.

Proposed Section 577(f)(4):

The lease of horses from officers or employees of the Service;

This provision will allow the Service to lease horses from its officers and employees notwithstanding general prohibitions against any agency entering into private business transactions with its employees. This authority benefits the Service because in remote border areas employees living in the region who own horses may be the best available providers of horses for lease. This authority currently exists as stated in section 1555 of Title 8.

Proposed Section 577(f)(5):

Acquisition of land as sites for enforcement fences, and expenses incident to the construction of such fences; and

This provision would give the Service limited land acquisition authority. Enforcement fences are constructed in border areas as a passive preventive measure which is used in conjunction with other strategies for controlling the flow of unlawful entrants.

Proposed Section 577(f)(6):

Expenses and allowances incurred in tracking lost persons, as required by public exigencies, in aid of State or local law enforcement agencies.

This provision will allow the Service to come to the aid of State and local law enforcement agencies when they are searching for a lost person. The Service is often in a unique position to provide such assistance due to its knowledge of, and access to, remote border areas.

Proposed Section 577(g):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use appropriations for the Bureau of Prisons to make payments for the conduct of its activities. Such payments may include payments for:

This provision allows appropriations for the Bureau of Prisons to be used to support the activities of the Bureau. Additional specific authorizations are set out in subsections (1) thru (4).

Proposed Section 577(g)(1):

The administration, operation, and maintenance of Federal penal and correctional institutions, including supervision and support of United States prisoners in non-Federal institutions; and for inmate legal services within the Federal prison system;

This provision authorizes appropriations to be used to support the Bureau's principal mission of operating the federal penal system, including the supervision of prisoners in non-federal institutions and the delivery of appropriate legal services.

Proposed Section 577(g)(2):

Construction of buildings at prison camps and acquisition of land as authorized by 18 U.S.C. 4010;

This provision would give the Bureau construction authority in connection with facilities at prison camps and authority to acquire land. Land acquisitions are generally in the vicinity of prisons and for the purpose of perimeter security or site expansion.

Proposed Section 577(g)(3):

The labor of United States prisoners performed in the construction or remodeling of prison buildings on facilities; and

This provision would authorize the Bureau's use of prisoner labor in the construction and remodeling of prison buildings and facilities and would authorize the payment of prisoners for their labor.

Proposed Section 577(g)(4):

The purchase and exchange of farm products and livestock.

This provision would authorize the Bureau to purchase and exchange farm products and livestock. Such authority will facilitate the efficiency of the farm programs operated as part of the federal prison system.

Proposed Section 577(h):

As used in this section the term "law enforcement" refers to the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; the Drug Enforcement Administration; the Immigration and Naturalization Service; the Bureau of Prisons; and the United States Marshals Service; except that for the purposes of subsection (a)(4), "law enforcement" refers only to the activities, in the United States, of the Bureau of Prisons and, subject to the provisions of 8 U.S.C. 1252(c) and 18 U.S.C. 4003, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The general authorities set forth in proposed section 577(a) contain various references to authorities that are available for a purpose related to law enforcement. Proposed section 577(h) defines these references to law enforcement as indicating that the authority applies to the activities of five specific bureaus of the Department of Justice. The construction authority conferred by proposed section 577(a)(4) is available, however, only for the Bureau of Prisons and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Proposed Section 578:

Authorizations and Exemptions Available for Undercover Investigative Operations

Proposed section 578 contains provisions which authorize the use of appropriated funds for the conduct of undercover investigative operations. In addition, if certain approval procedures are followed, the proposed section exempts such operations from federal acquisition, appropriations, property management and government corporation laws which would otherwise be applicable to a federal agency. These exemptions may be used if complying with those federal laws would risk compromise of the undercover nature of the investigation.

Proposed Section 578(a):

The authorizations and exemptions provided below may be utilized for undercover operations conducted by the following bureaus of the Department of Justice: the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the United States Marshals Service. As used herein, the head of a bureau refers, respectively, to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Director of the United States Marshals Service.

This provision lists the law enforcement bureaus that may utilize the authorizations and exemptions available for undercover investigation operations.

Proposed Section 578(b):

(1) An exempt undercover operation refers to any operation designed and necessary to detect and prosecute crimes against the United States as to which the head of a bureau, or his designee, and the Attorney General, or his designee, have certified in writing that any action authorized by this section is necessary for the conduct of that undercover investigation; provided that as to undercover investigative operations of the Federal Bureau of Investigation any designee for the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and any designee for the Attorney General shall be a member of the Undercover Operations Review Committee.

(2) An exempt undercover operation also refers to any operation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation designed and necessary to collect foreign intelligence or to conduct foreign counterintelligence, as to which the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or the Assistant Director of the Intelligence Division if so designated by the Director, and the Attorney General, or the Counsel for Intelligence Policy if so designated by the Attorney General, have certified in writing that any action authorized by this section is necessary for the conduct of that undercover investigation.

(3) The type of exemptions sought for each operation shall be specified on the certification and the use of the exemptions for each operation will be reviewed during the operation by the official designated by the head of the bureau pursuant to subsection (b) (1) or (2) of this section.

This provision establishes high level approval procedures to be followed within the Department of Justice in order for an available exemption to be applicable to a given criminal law enforcement or foreign counterintelligence undercover investigation operation.

Proposed Section 578(c):

(1) Appropriations may be used for purchasing or leasing property, buildings, facilities, space, goods, insurance, licenses and any equipment necessary to establish and/or operate an undercover operation. These acquisitions shall be made in accordance with prevailing commercial practices so long as such practices are consistent with the purposes of the undercover operation. Laws applicable to federal acquisitions, federal property management and federal appropriations shall not apply to any acquisition for an exempt undercover operation where compliance with such laws would risk compromise of the undercover nature of the investigation.

(2) Appropriations may be used to establish, acquire and/or operate proprietary corporations or business entities in accordance with prevailing commercial practices so long as such practices are consistent with the purposes of the undercover operation. Laws applicable to federal appropriations and government corporations shall not apply to any transaction for an exempt undercover operation where compliance with such laws would risk compromise of the undercover nature of the investigation.

(3) Appropriations and the proceeds from an exempt undercover operation may be deposited in banks or other financial institutions and may be used to offset necesssary and reasonable expenses incurred in such operation without deposit in the Treasury; provided that, as soon as any such proceeds are no longer necessary for the conduct of such operation, such proceeds or the balance of such proceeds remaining at the time shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

This provision contains the three basic types of authorizations and exemptions available for undercover operations. Such operations may conduct their business transactions in accord with prevailing commercial practices. The exemptions available through this provision allow the undercover operation to proceed with these transactions without complying with certain classes of federal laws which would be applicable to such transactions solely because a government agency rather than a private entity, was a party to the transaction. These exemptions may be used if complying with the law in question would risk disclosure of the fact that the supposed private person or entity conducting the operation is, in fact, a government agent or agency.

Exemptions may be obtained from federal acquisition laws, property management laws, appropriation laws, and laws relating to government corporations. These categories of federal law may be defined, and the need for exemptions illustrated, as follows:

Federal acquisition laws govern the acquisition by contract of supplies or services by purchase or lease using appropriated funds. These activities are principally governed by Title 41 of the United States Code. Requirements that may be incompatible with undercover operations include: the requirement to advertise proposed purchases and proposed contracts for supplies or services, 41 U.S.C. § 5. and the inclusion of certain contract provisions such as the Walsh-Healey Act representations and stipulations required by 41 U.S.C. § 35, the requirement to purchase blind-made products, 41 U.S.C. §§ 46–48C; the prohibition on advance payment to contractors, 41 U.S.C. § 255; and the requirements for full and open competition, 41 U.S.C. § 253.

Federal property management laws govern the control and use of Federal real and personal property. These activities are principally governed by Title 40 of the United States Code. Restrictions that may be incompatible with undercover operations include; limitations on the leasing of space in the District of Columbia, 40 U.S.C. § 34; restrictions on construction loans for office buildings by Government Corporations, 40 U.S.C. § 33a; limitation on a Government Corporation's leasing of buildings in addition to the limitation on rental rates, 40 U.S.C. § 129; and the prohibition against the inclusion, in any lease, of any provision regarding the repair of real property, 40 U.S.C. § 303b.

Federal appropriations laws refer to any act of Congress that permits Federal agencies to incur obligations and to make payments out of the Treasury for specified purposes. Fiscal transactions are principally governed by Title 31 of the United States Code. Restrictions that may be incompatible with undercover operations include: the proscription against the depositing of money in banks or lending money 31 U.S.C. § 3302(a); the requirement that all proceeds shall be deposited into the Treasury 31 U.S.C. § 3302(b); the requirement that contracts and leases must be reexecuted at the beginning of each fiscal year 32 U.S.C. § 1341; the prohibition against the acceptance of voluntary services 31 U.S.C. § 1342; the proscription against installing telephones in private residence 31 U.S.C. § 1348; and the requirement that agreements be in writing in order to record an amount as an obligation 31 U.S.C. § 1501.

Government corporation laws govern corporations that are owned by the Federal Government. While undercover proprietaries are not government corporations in the classical sense, they nonetheless may meet the definition set out in 31 U.S.C. § 9101(1). Government corporations are principally governed by Title 31 of the United States Code. Requirements pertaining to Government corporations that may be incompatible with undercover operations include; the requirement that each corporation established or acquired by an agency be specifically authorized by Congress 31 U.S.C. § 9102; the requirement for budget submission 31 U.S.C. § 9103; and the limitation on the obligations that may be issued by a Government corporation, 31 U.S.C. § 9108.

Proposed Section 578(d):

If a corporation or business entity established or acquired as part of an undercover operation under subparagraph (2) of paragraph (c) with a net value of over $150,000 is to be liquidated, sold, or otherwise disposed of, the head of the bureau, as much in advance as he or his designee determines is practicable, shall report the circumstances to the Attorney General. The proceeds of the liquidation, sale, or other disposition, after obligations are met, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

This provision allows for the orderly liquidation of corporations or business entities valued in excess of $150,000, which have been acquired during an undercover operations. Any excess proceeds, after meeting obligations, are to be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Proposed Section 578(e):

(1) The Attorney General shall direct and supervise a detailed financial audit of each undercover investigative operation which is closed in fiscal year 1987, and each fiscal year thereafter, and shall, not later than 180 days after such undercover operation is closed, submit a report to the Congress concerning such audit.

(2) For purposes of these audit and reporting requirements: (A) the term "closed" refers to the point in time at which—

(i) all criminal proceedings (other than appeals) are concluded, or

(ii) covert activities are concluded, whichever occurs later;

(B) the terms 'undercover investigative operation' and 'undercover operation' means any undercover investigative operation of a bureau (other than a foreign counterintelligence undercover investigative operation)—

(i) in which—

(a) the gross receipts (excluding interest earned) exceed $150,000, or

(b) expenditures (other than expenditures for salaries of employees) exceed $150,000, and

(ii) which is exempt from laws applicable to federal appropriations and government corporations.

If an undercover investigative operation has made use of exemptions from federal appropriations laws and from laws regarding government corporations and has had receipts or expenditures in excess of $150,000 the Attorney General must direct and supervise an audit of the undercover operation once it has been closed. The results of the audit must be transmitted to Congress within 180 days after the undercover operation was closed. This audit requirement does not apply to foreign counterintelligence undercover operations.

Proposed Section 578(f)

(f) The Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, or his designee, and the Director of the United States Marshals Service, or his designee, shall include in the certification required by subsection (b)(1) of this section: the expected time period for utilizing the exemptions, the expected resources to be committed, a description of the circumstances for using the exemptions, and a specification of the scope of the effort.

This provision provides that additional information shall be provided by the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the United States Marshals Service when either bureau certifies to the Attorney General that the action is necessary for the conduct of an undercover investigation. In addition to specifying the type of exemptions sought, the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service or his designee and the Director of the United States Marshals Service shall include in the certification the expected time period for utilizing the exemptions, the expected resources to be committed, a description of the circumstances for using the exemptions, and a specification of the scope of the effort.

(Additional Authorizations)

Proposed bill section 3(b):

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to use Department of Justice appropriations to make payments for assistance to individuals under section 501(c) of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-422) without regard to section 501(e)(2)(B) of the Act, which prohibits such assistance to individuals with respect to whom a final, nonappealable, and legally enforceable order of deportation or exclusion has been entered. Such payments may include grants which shall be administered by the Community Relations Service.

Title V of the Refugee Education Assistant Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-422) was enacted primarily to provide federal reimbursement for State and local government expenditures for Cuban and Haitian entrants. However, because of the way section 501(e) of the Act defines Cuban and Haitian entrants, funds provided for this program cannot be applied to Cuban and Haitian entrants who are under "final, nonappealable, and legally enforceable orders of deportation or exclusion." When Cuba refused to accept these individuals, this provision became necessary in order to overcome the restricting clause so benefits could be provided to these entrants. An agreement has been negotiated between the United States and Cuba which provides for repatriation of 2,746 Mariel Cubans. It is anticipated that this repatriation will ultimately have an effect on Community Relations Service activities; however, currently repatriation activities have ceased and therefore, it is not possible to predict when or to what extent, the reception, processing and care of Cubans and Haitians program will be effected.

Proposed bill section 3(c):

Section 4082(c) of Title 18, United States Code, (62 Stat. 850) is amended by striking the final words "as miscellaneous receipts" and inserting therefore the following:

"To the credit of the appropriation available for such costs at the time such collections are made."

This provision will allow the Bureau of Prisons to retain payments received from prisoners who are working in the community. Such payments may be collected under regulations issued by the Attorney General. The effect of this provision will be separately achieved when the new section 3622 of Title 18, United States Code, becomes effective, That section was scheduled to become effective on November 1, 1986 but in Public Law 99-217 Congress extended the effective date by an additional twelve months.

Proposed bill section 3(d):

Section 6 of the Act of July 28, 1950 (64 Stat. 380), 8 U.S.C. 1555, is hereby repealed.

The provision will repeal the current authorization set out in Title 8 for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. These same authorizations will be available to the Service under 28 U.S.C. 577 as proposed above.

Proposed bill section 39(e):

Section 4043 of Title 18, United States Code (96 Stat. 1059), and section 871(c) of Title 21, United States Code (84 Stat. 1270), are hereby repealed.

This provision repeals specific gift acceptance authorizations for the Bureau of Prisons and the Drug Enforcement Administration. The Attorney General will be able to accept gifts for the benefit of any component of the Department under 28 U.S.C. 577(c) as proposed above.

Proposed bill section 4(a):

Section 1501 of Title 11, United States Code (92 Stat. 2652), and Section 581(a) of Title 28, United States Code (92 Stat. 2662), are amended, effective October 1, 1986, by adding the following two subsections:

"(11) Eastern District of Michigan.

"(12) Northern District of Ohio."

This provision will allow the appointment and functioning of a United States Trustee in each of two additional judicial districts.

Proposed bill section 4(b):

Section 408 of the Act of November 6, 1978 (Public Law 95-598, 92 Stat. 2549, 2686-87) is hereby repealed.

This provision will repeal the sunset provision which would otherwise terminate the United States Trustee program as of September 30, 1986.

Proposed bill section 5:

Chapter 303 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 4043 the following new section "§ 4044. Authority to Conduct Autopsies.

"A chief executive officer of a federal penal or correctional facility may, pursuant to rules and regulations of the Director, order an autopsy and related scientific or medical tests to be performed on the body of a deceased inmate of the facility in the event of homicide, suicide, fatal illness or accident, or unexplained death when it is determined that such autopsy or test is necessary to detect a crime, maintain discipline, protect the health or safety of other inmates, remedy official misconduct, or defend the United States or its employees from civil liability arising from the administration of the facility. To the extent consistent with the needs of the autopsy or of specific scientific or medical tests, provisions of local law protecting religious beliefs with respect to such autopsies shall be observed. Such officer may also order an autopsy or other postmortem operation, including removal of tissue for transplanting, to be performed on the body of a deceased inmate of the facility, with the written consent of a person authorized to permit such an autopsy or postmortem operation under the law of the State in which the facility is located."

This provision would give the Bureau of Prisons authority to conduct autopsies in appropriate circumstances. Such authority is needed because of jurisdictional and practical difficulties that arise when state officers are asked to conduct autopsies within the federal enclave of a United States prison.

Proposed bill section 6:

Chapter 307 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(a) the first paragraph of section 4121 is deleted and a new first paragraph is inserted as follows:

"'Federal Prison Industries', a government corporation of the District of Columbia, shall be administered by a board of six directors, appointed by the President to serve at the will of the President. Members of the board who are not employees of the Federal Government or the District of Columbia shall be paid for their services at the daily equivalent of the rate prescribed for GS 18 of the General Schedule in section 5332 of Title 5, United States Code."

(b) following section 4128 a new section is inserted as follows:

"§ 4129. General authorization—Federal Prison Industries, Inc.

"Federal Prison Industries, Incorporated, is authorized to make such expenditures and to make such contracts and commitments, without regard to fiscal year limitations, as may be necessary in carrying out the program set forth in the budget for the current fiscal year for such corporation, including purchase and hire of passenger motor vehicles.

Chapter 307 of Title 18, United States Code, contains various sections dealing with the Federal Prison Industries, (FPI), Inc. FPI was created by Congress in 1934 and is a wholly-owned Government corporation. Its mission is to employ and train Federal inmates through a diversified program providing products with a minimum of competition to private industry and labor. Employment provides inmates with work, develops occupational knowledge and skills, and earns money for personal expenses and family assistance.

Proposed section 6 first amends section 4121 so as to authorize compensation for service as a member of the Board of Directors of FPI. The proposed section then enacts a new section 4129 which will provide FPI with appropriate authorizations for the conduct of its activities.

Proposed bill section 7:

Section 4204(b) of Title 18, pertaining to the United States Parole Commission, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(a) the lease or purchase of passenger motor vehicles."

The lease or purchase of passenger motor vehicles is generally prohibited by 31 U.S.C. 1343 unless specifically authorized by statute. Passenger vehicles are needed by the Parole Commission for transporting hearing examiners to hearing locations. This provision would give the Commission the necessary authority for acquiring passenger motor vehicles.

Proposed bill section 8:

Chapter 401 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended by deleting subsection (a) of section 5003 and inserting the following:

"(a) The Director of the Bureau of Prisons when proper and adequate facilities and personnel are available, is hereby authorized to contract with proper officials of a State, or Territory, or Indian Tribe, for the custody, care, subsistence, education, treatment, and training or persons convicted of criminal offenses in the courts of such State, Territory or Tribe: Provided, That any such contract shall provide for reimbursing the United States in full for all costs or other expenses involved; except that, where reimbursement from a State is not legally available, the contract shall provide for receiving in exchange persons convicted of criminal offenses in the courts of the United States, to serve their sentence in appropriate institutions or facilities of the State or Territory by designation as provided in Section 4082(b) of this Title, this exchange to be made according to formulas or conditions which may be negotiated in the contract."

This provision amends the section in Title 18, United States Code, which deals with the authority of the Bureau of Prisons to contract to accept state prisoners into federal custody. The principal changes which will result are: (1) that such contracts may now be made with territories and Indian tribes; and (2) that such contracts may now include inmates exchanges as part of the consideration in negotiating a custody contract.

Proposed bill section 9:

Section 263 of title 22, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following at the end thereof:

"The Attorney General on his designee is also authorized to make payments from Department of Justice appropriations for expenses necessary to host, at intervals of ten years or longer, the annual meeting of the General Assembly of INTERPOL and to periodically sponsor INTERPOL conferences on topics of international crime."

The additional legislative authority being proposed is extremely important to INTERPOL-USNCB. Currently, the United States, through the INTER-USNCB, is exerting a greater leadership role in the international organization. In this regard, the INTERPOL-USNCB, with substantial member country support, has successfully initiated an ongoing fiscal audit and review of the INTERPOL General Secretariat and plans are currently being made to implement a similar management review of the General Secretariat.

Additionally, during the recent meeting of the General Assembly, the United States achieved the support of the majority of the INTERPOL member countries in passing specific resolutions relating to international crime. The increasing leadership role of the United States in the international organization also is reflected by this country's successful efforts to seek and win the Presidency of INTERPOL in 1984. As United States involvement continues to expand, it is important that a highly credible United States image is maintained and that INTERPOL member countries perceive that the United States is assuming a greater participatory role in the organization.

One way to accomplish this objective is for the INTERPOL-USNCB to host the annual meeting of the INTERPOL General Assembly at intervals of approximately ten years or more. The proposed legislative language would clarify the USNCB's role in hosting such annual meetings and other conferences.

Proposed bill section 10:

Section 1622d of Title 22, United States Code, pertaining to the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph.

"The Commission is authorized to hire passenger motor vehicles, for field use only, and to purchase insurance for official motor vehicles used abroad. The Commission may advance funds abroad and may advance funds to other government departments or agencies in connection with reimbursable agreements. The Commission is also authorized to employ aliens abroad and, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to acquire necessary office space and living quarters abroad and to maintain, repair, furnish and provide utilities for such properties.

This provision gives additional permanent spending authorizations to the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission. All of these authorizations have been available to Commission under language contained in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act for the 1986 fiscal year.

TITLE III—UNITED STATES MARSHALS SERVICE

The United States Marshals Service Act of 1985 has been introduced during the 99th Congress in both the House of Representatives (H.R. 4001) and the Senate (S. 2044). That bill, with certain editorial changes, has been integrated into the Department's Authorization bill as Part III.

Proposed section 11(a):

Chapter 37 of Title 28, United States Code, is amended such that sections 561, 562, 564, 565 and 566, shall read as follows:

This section of the Marshals Service Act enacts five new or replacement sections within Chapter 37 of Title 28, United States Code. These sections establish the United States Marshals Service (§ 561); provide for filing vacancies (§ 564); reaffirm a Marshal's power as a sheriff (§ 564); authorize the payment of necessary expenses (§ 565); and define the powers and duties of the Marshals Service (§ 566).

Proposed section 561: United States Marshals Service

(a) There is hereby established a United States Marshals Service as a bureau within the Department of Justice under the authority and direction of the Attorney General. The United States Marshals Service (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the "Service") shall be headed by a Director appointed by the Attorney General.

(b) The Director of the United States Marshals Service (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the "Director") shall exercise the power and duties set out in this chapter and as may be vested in the Director pursuant to statute or delegation from the Attorney General.

(c) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States Marshal for each judicial district of the United States, except that any Marshal appointed for the Northern Mariana Islands may at the same time serve as Marshal in another district. Each United States Marshal shall be an official of the Service and shall serve under the direction and subject to the coordination of the Director.

(d) Each Marshal shall be appointed for a term of four years. On expiration of his term, unless he shall resign or be removed by the President, a Marshal shall continue to perform the duties of this office until his successor is appointed and qualified or until a person is designated to act as Marshal in accordance with Section 562.

(e) The Director shall designate places within a judicial district for the official station and offices of each Marshal. Each Marshal shall reside within the district for which he was appointed except that—

(1) the Marshals for the District of Columbia and for the Southern District of New York may reside within 20 miles thereof; and

(2) any Marshal appointed for the Northern Mariana Islands who at the same time is serving in the same capacity in another district may reside in such other district.

(f) The Director is authorized to select, appoint, employ, and fix compensation for Deputy Marshals and such officials and employees as shall be necessary to carry out the powers and duties of the Service and may designate such Deputy Marshals as law enforcement officers, in accordance with the policies and procedures he shall establish. Deputy Marshals, officials, and employees are subject to disciplinary action, including removal, by the Director.

(g) The Director shall supervise and direct the United States Marshals Service in the performance of its duties, including criminal investigations, and in accounting for public moneys. Each official of the Service shall report any official proceedings, receipts, and disbursements and the condition of the office under the purview of such official as the Director requires.

(h) The Director may delegate to any other official of the Service the authority to carry out any function of the Director.

(i) There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to exercise the powers and duties of the United States Marshals Service.

Proposed section 561 establishes the United States Marshals Service as a bureau within the Department of Justice under the authority and direction of the Attorney General. It provides for a Director appointed by the Attorney General and establishes the administrative and management authority necessary for the efficient and effective operation of the Service.

This section also includes the currently existing provision for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of United States Marshals for each judicial district of the United States, except for the Northern Mariana Islands wherein the Marshal may at the same time serve as Marshal in another district. Marshals are appointed to 4-year terms.

Administrative authorities contained in the amended section 561 relate to the selection and appointment of law enforcement and staff support personnel in accordance with applicable Federal Personnel regulations, and to the supervisory authority of the Director. This section also provides for the accounting of funds collected by the Marshals, and for the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to exercise the powers and duties of the U.S. Marshals Service.

Proposed Section 562: Vacancies

(a) In the case of a vacancy in the office of United States Marshal, the Attorney General may designate a person to perform the functions and act as Marshal. The Attorney General shall not designate to act as Marshal a person whose appointment by the President to that office the Senate has refused to give its advice and consent.

(b) Such person designated by the Attorney General may service until the earliest of the following events:

(1) the entry into office a United States Marshal appointed by the President, pursuant to Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution;

(2) the expiration of the thirtieth day following the end of the next session of the Senate; or

(3) if such designee of the Attorney General is appointed by the President pursuant to section 561(c), said designee may service until the expiration of the thirtieth day following the refusal of the Senate to give its advice and consent to the appointment by the President.

Proposed section 562 provides for the appointment of an acting Marshal by the Attorney General in the case of a vacancy in such office. It also assures the temporary nature of such interim appointment by prohibiting the designation of any person whose appointment by the President to that office has been rejected by the Senate and by providing for the automatic termination of such interm appointments under specified circumstances.

Proposed Section 564: Power as Sheriff

An official of the Service, in executing the laws of the United States within a State, may exercise the same powers which a sheriff of the State may exercise in executing the laws thereof.

Proposed section 564 restates the historic authority of United States Marshals, in executing the laws of the United States, to exercise the same powers as a sheriff of a State. The only change modifies the language to clarify that such authority is also shared by other law enforcement officials of the United States Marshals Service.

Proposed Section 565: Expenses of United States Marshals Service

The Service is authorized to—

(a) establish procedures and to pay for:

(1) the actual and necessary expenses associated with the offices established under section 561;

(2) the expense of transporting prisoners, including the transportation between the United States and foreign countries of persons charged with crime, and including the cost of necessary guards and the travel and subsistence expenses of prisoners and guards;

(3) the lease, acquisition, maintenance, and operation of aircraft and the lease and acquisition of law enforcement and passenger motor vehicles without regard to the general purchase price limitation for any current fiscal year and including the operation and maintenance for official use of vehicles seized and forfeited to the U.S. Government;

(4) the purchase of firearms and ammunition and attendance at firearms matches and law enforcement competitions;

(5) supervision of United States prisoners in non-federal institutions;

(6) payment of rewards and the purchase of evidence and payments for information;

(7) other necessary expenditures as required by law; and

(b) enter into contracts and cooperative agreements, as authorized by the Attorney General, including contacts for personal guard and other personal services, and may utilize such contracts for the service of government process in lieu of service by U.S. Marshals of deputy Marshals.

Proposed section 565 consolidates into one section an enumeration of the various activities for which the Service is authorized to expend funds. These include the "actual and necessary" expenses associated with the operation of the Marshals Service offices in all Federal judicial districts; the expense of transporting prisoners; and acquisition, maintenance and operation of law enforcement of vehicles and aircraft; expenses relating to the supervision of Federal prisoners in non-federal institution; expenditures for firearms, ammunition and activities associated with the development of expertise in their use; and the payment of rewards and for information pertaining to authorized investigative activities. This section also permits the Service to enter into contracts and cooperative agreements, as authorized by the Attorney General, for the hiring of security guards and for the service of civil process.

Proposed Section 566: Powers and duties

(a) The United States Marshals Service is authorized to provide for the safety and security of the Federal courts of the United States and provide other assistance in accordance with the policies established by the Attorney General.

(b) Except as otherwise provided by law or the Federal Rules of Procedure, the United States Marshals Service shall execute all lawful writs, process and orders issued under the judicial authority of the United States, in accordance with the policies established by the Attorney General, and shall command all necessary assistance to execute its duties.

(c) The Director, United States Marshals, and other law enforcement officers of the United States Marshals Service may carry firearms and may make arrests without warrant for any offense against the United States committed in their presence, or for any felony cognizable under the laws of the United States if they have reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing such felony.

(d) The United States Marshals Service is authorized to investigate fugitive matters, both domestic and foreign, as directed by the Attorney General."

Proposed Section 566 specifies the duties of the Service with respect to the protection of the Federal courts and the execution of writs and process in accordance with policies established by the Attorney General. It also explicitly continues the authority currently provided by statute or delegation from the Attorney General to conduct investigations relating to the apprehension of fugitives, to carry firearms, and to make arrests.

Proposed Bill Section 11(b)

Chapter 37 of Title 28, United States Code, is further amended—

(a) by repealing section 567, 568, 569, and 570;

(b) by renumbering sections 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, and 576 to read 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, and 572, respectively; and

(c) by adding the following new sections:

This section of the Marshals Service Act repeals four existing sections in Title 28 whose provisions are incorporated, in whole or in part, in the previously amended sections enacted by Section 11(a) of the bill.

This section also renumbers certain of the sections in chapter 37 of Title 28. Finally this section adds a new section to Chapter 37 to Title 28.

Proposed Section 573

Authorization for Certain Witness Security Expenses:

The expenses incurred for the use of facilities in the protection of witnesses, and planning, acquisition, construction, renovation, maintenance, remodeling, and repair of buildings and the purchase of equipment incident thereto for protected witness safesites shall be paid from appropriations available to the Marshals Service.

Section 573 authorizes the expenditures of funds from appropriations available to the Marshals Service for facilities required in the protection of witnesses.

Proposed Bill Section 11 (c)

Chapter 123 of Title 28, United States Code, is amended such that section 1921 shall read as follows:

This section of the Marshals Service Act amends the provision in Title 28 which authorizes the Marshals Service to collect fees to defray the costs of providing services to private litigants in federal cases.

Proposed Section 1921 United States Marshals' fees

(a) (1) The United States Marshals or Deputies shall routinely collect, and a court may tax as costs, fees for the following:

(A) serving a writ of possession, partition, execution, attachment in rem, or libel in admiralty, warrant, attachment, summons, complaints, or any other writ, order or process in any case or proceedings;

(B) serving a subpoena or summons for a witness or appraiser;

(C) forwarding any writ, order, or process to another judicial district for service;

(D) the preparation of any notice of sale, proclamation in admiralty, or other public notice or bill of sale;

(E) the keeping of attachment property (including boats, vessels, or other property attached or libeled), actual expenses incurred, such as storage, moving, boat hire, or thier special transportation, watchmen's or keepers' fees, insurance, and an hourly rate including overtime for each Deputy Marshal required for special services, such as guarding, inventorying, and moving;

(F) copies of writs or other papers furnished at the request of any party;

(G) necessary travel in serving or endeavoring to serve any process, writ, or order, except in the District of Columbia, with mileage to be computed from the place where service is returnable to the place of service or endeavor; and

(H) ovetime expenses incurred by Deputy Marshals in the course of serving or executing civil process.

(2) The Marshals shall collect, in advance, a deposit to cover the initial expenses for special services required under subparagraph (e), and periodically thereafter such amounts as may be necessary to pay such expenses until the litigation is concluded. This paragraph applies to all private litigants, including seamen proceeding pursuant to section 1916 of ths title.

(3) For purposes of subparagraph (G), if two or more services or endeavors, or if any endeavor and a service, are made in behalf of the same party in the same case on the same trip, mileage shall be computed to theplace of servcie or endeavor which is most remote from the place where service is returnable, adding thereto any additional mileage traveled in serving or endeavoring to serve in behalf of that party. If two or more writs of any kind, required to be served in behalf of the same party on the same person in the same case or proceeding, may be served at the same time, mileage for only one such write shall be collected.

(b) The Attorney General shall from time to time prescribe by regulation the fees to be taxed and collected under subsection (a). Such fees shall to the extent practicable, reflect the actual and reasonable cost of the service provided.

(c)(1) The United States Marshals Service shall collect a commission of 3 per centum of the first $1,000 collected and 1½ per centum on the excess of any sum over $1,000, for seizing or levying on property (including seizures in admiralty), disposing of such property by sale, setoff, or otherwise, and receiving and paying over money, except that the amount of the commission shall be within the range set by the Attorney General. If the property is not disposed of by Marshal's sale, the commission shall be in such amount, within the range set by the Attorney General, as may be allowed by the court. In any case in which the vessel or other property is sold by a public auctioneer, or by some party other than the Marshal or his Deputy, the commission authorized under this subsection shall be reduced by the amount paid to such auctioneer or other part. This subsection applies to judicially ordered sales and execution sales, without regard to whether the judicial order of sale constitutes a seizure or levy within the meaning of State law.

(2) The Attorney General shall prescribe from time to time regulations which establish a minimum and maximum amount for the commission collected under paragraph (1).

(d) The United States Marshals may require a deposit to cover any of the fees and expenses prescribed under this section.

(e) Without regard to the provision of 31 U.S.C. § 3302, the United States Marshals Service is authorized to credit amounts from fees and expenses collected (including amounts for overtime expenses) for the service of civil process, including complaints, summons, subpoenas, and similar process and seizures, levies, and sales performed by other marshals to its current appropriation account (Salaries and Expenses, United States Marshals) for the purpose, only, of carrying out those activities.

Proposed section 1921 allows the Attorney General to set fees collected from non-federal entities by United States Marshals in civil and criminal matters at levels reflecting the actual cost of the service provided. It also permits the Service to credit such fees collected to its curent appropriation and use such funds to defray oprating expenses for these activities. Under current law such fees are set at an artificially low level, well below the actual cost to the government, thus subsidizing at taxpayers' expense the service of non-federal government process.

Proposed Bill Section 11(d)

Chapter 301 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended to add the following new section:

This section of the Marshals Service Act originally authorized certain payments to be made from Marshals Service Appropriations. Since introduction of the Marshals Service Act, the President's Budget has maintained a separate appropriation for the Support of United States Prisoners rather than implementing a planned merger of this appropriation into the general appropriation for the Marshals Service. As a consequence, the language of the originally submitted Marshals Service Act has been changed to reflect the continued separate status for the Support of United States Prisoners appropriation.

Proposed Section 4002A

Support of United States Prisoners in non-Federal Institutions

The Attorney General or his designee is authorized to make payments from appropriations available for the support of United States Prisoners in non-Federal Institutions for:

(1) necessary clothing;

(2) medical aid and necessary guard hire;

(3) payment of rewards for assistance in the capture or information leading to the capture of a federal fugitive; and

(4) entering into contracts or cooperative agreements with any State, territory, or political subdivision thereof, for the necessary construction, physical renovation, acquisition of equipments, supplies, or materials required to establish acceptable conditions of confinement and detention services in any state or local government which agrees to provide guaranteed bed space for federal regulations issued by the Attorney General and which are comparable to the regulations issued under 18 U.S.C. §4006, except that amounts made available for this purpose shall not exceed the average per-inmate-cost of constructing similar confinement facilities for the federal prison population; and, provided further that the availability of such federally assisted facility shall be assured for housing federal prisoners and the per diem rate charged for housing such federal prisoners shall not exceed allowable costs or other conditions specified in the contract or cooperative agreement.

Proposed Section 4002A authorizes payment from appropriated funds for the necessary clothing and medical care for federal prisoners in non-federal institutions and for the payment of rewards in connection with the capture of federal fugitives. It also provides and codifies the authority for the Cooperative Agreement Program under which the Marshals Service provides funds for state and local jail construction or modernization in exchange for the housing of federal prisoners.

TITLE IV—PROGRAM REDUCTIONS AND TERMINATIONS

The following provisions effectuate program reductions and terminations mandated by the President's 1987 Budget. These provisions are consistent with the need to reduce federal spending and limit expenditures of the Department to core functions.

Proposed Bill Section 12(a)

Section 1402(c)(1) of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2171), 42 U.S.C. 10601(c)(1), is amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and adding the following:

"; except that excess funds shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury if in fiscal year 1986 the fund reaches the sum of $64.9 million or if in fiscal year 1987 or 1988 the Fund reaches the sum of $35 million.

This provision would reduce the amount available to the Crime Victims Fund from collected fines. At present $100 million of collected fines is available to the Fund each year and any funds collected in excess of that amount are to be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury. The proposed amendment would reduce the amount available to the Fund to $64.9 million in fiscal year 1986 and $35 million in fiscal years 1987 and 1988. The present statute provides that no amounts will be deposited in the Fund after September 30, 1988.

Proposed Bill Section 12(b)

Section 517(b) of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473, 98 Stat 2075), 21 U.S.C. 873(d), is hereby repealed.

This provision would repeal the Attorney General's authority to make grants to state and local governments to assist in suppressing the diversion of controlled substances from legitimate medical, scientific and commercial use. This program has never been funded by Congress.

Proposed Bill Section 12(c)

Section 609 of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473, 98 Stat 2088-90), 42 U.S.C. 3769 thru 3769d, is hereby repealed.

This provision would repeal the authority of the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance to make grants to state and local governments to assist in the construction of correctional facilities. No monies have ever been appropriated for this program.

Proposed Bill Section 12(d)

Part A, Sections 204-206, Part B, sections 221-229, and Part C. sections 241-249, of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-415, 88 Stat. 1109), as amended by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2108), 42 U.S.C. 5611, are hereby repealed.

This provision would repeal the authority of the Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to make grants to state and local governments for juvenile justice programs.

Proposed Bill Section 12(e)

The following sections of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (P.L. 90-351), as amended or added by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2080-2087), are hereby repealed: Sections 402(1), (2) and (4); sections 403 through 408 and sections 501 through 506 (42 U.S.C. 3742(1), (2) and (4); 42 U.S.C. 2743-3748; and 42 U.S.C. 3761-3766)

This provision would repeal the authority of the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance to make grants to State and local governments for certain programs to improve the functioning of the criminal justice system.

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 2377. A bill to make a technical modification in the Excellence in Education Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION MODIFICATION

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am submitting a technical modification to the Excellence in Education Act, title VI of the Education for Economic Security Act. This program has thus far stimulated nearly 1,000 applications for funding, despite the Department of Education's unwillingness to spend money appropriated by the Congress to carry out the act.

The sum of $7.5 million has been appropriated, $5 million in fiscal year 1985 and $2.5 million in fiscal year 1986. The reason for the low appropriation in fiscal year 1986 was the continuing carryover of $5 million from the prior year. These appropriations were to be combined and the President's budget listed the full amount of $7.5 million as fiscal year 1986 moneys. The Department of Education, however, has indicated to me that they will only spend $5 million, left over from 2 years ago, on the program this year. The $2.5 million in fiscal year 1986 money remains in limbo.

The purpose of the act is to promote educational improvement by upgrading school curriculums through a renewed focus on basic education and basic skills. In addition, the measure provides incentives for outstanding teacher performance as well as encouraging private-sector involvement in educational excellence.

Under the authorizing statute $3 million is to go for projects which are jointly funded by business and local school districts in order to encourage the private sector in the upgrading of education. The Department has determined that it will spend down the money appropriated by Congress over the next 2 years, and thus the $3 million set-aside will take up virtually all of the money available in direct contradiction to the will of the Congress.

Because the Department of Education is determined in its opposition to a well-meaning set-aside provision, my modification will allow the set-aside for business-secured projects to take effect only when appropriations are at least $15 million for a fiscal year. It is important that we modify the act in this way, and I hope that Congress will act quickly on behalf of the technical correction.●

By Mr. LUGAR (by request):

S. 2378. A bill to authorize supplemental economic and military assistance for the Philippines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PHILIPPINES ASSISTANCE ACT

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, by request, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize supplemental economic and military assistance for the Philippines, and for other purposes.

This proposed legislation has been requested by the President and I am introducing it in order that there may be a specific bill to which Members of the Senate and the public may direct their attention and comments.

I reserve my right to support or oppose this bill, as well as any suggested amendments to it, when the matter is considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with a section-by-section analysis of the bill and the message from the President to the Congress dated April 25, 1986.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Philippines Assistance Act of 1986".

ECONOMIC AND MILITARY ASSISTANCE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress recognizes that the restoration of democracy through the inauguration of President Corazon Aquino provides the Philippines with an opportunity to rebuild the social and economic institutions necessary to achieve growth, prosperity and stability for the benefit of the people of the Philippines and the countries of the entire region. The Congress also recognizes that the economic and security issues confronting the Philippines make the task of achieving these objectives extremely difficult, depending in significant measure on the ability of the Government of the Philippines to undertake significant economic and military reforms, and the willingness of the United States and other supporters of democracy to assist the Government in those efforts.

(b) Accordingly, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President, in addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated for such purposes, for the fiscal year 1986—

(1) $100,000,000 to carry out the provisions of chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to be made available for the Philippines; and

(2) $50,000,000 to carry out the provisions of chapter 2 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to be made available for the Philippines.

(c) Amounts appropriated under paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

REPEAL

SEC. 3. Section 901 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 is repealed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby transmit for the consideration of the Congress proposed legislation, entitled "Philippines Assistance Act of 1986," which authorizes supplemental economic and military assistance for the Philippines.

The bill authorizes a total of $150 million in supplemental assistance for the Philippines, of which $100 million is to be used for Economic Support Fund activities and $50 million is to be used for the Military Assistance Program. A supplemental appropriation request for fiscal year 1986 is concurrently being transmitted to the Congress.

Through the inauguration of President Aquino, the Philippines has been offered an historic opportunity to effect significant structural and institutional reforms that will bring the benefits of peace and prosperity to all of its citizens. The special relationship that the people of the United States share with the people of the Philippines strongly warrants our renewed commitment in support of these efforts. I urge the Congress to act without delay on this legislation.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1986.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 states that the Act may be cited as the Philippines Assistance Act of 1986.

Section 2 recognizes that, through the inauguration of President Aquino, the Philippines has an opportunity to rebuild the social and economic institutions necessary for growth and prosperity. To assist the Philippines in this effort, as well as to help the Philippines address security needs, $100 million in additional Economic Support Fund assistance and $50 million in additional Military Assistance Program assistance is authorized.

Section 3 repeals section 901 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985. That section contains statements of policy and earmarks of funds for the Philippines which had been enacted out of concern over the activities of the previous Philippines government.●

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 2379. A bill to repeal the application of Revenue Ruling 86-63, relating to the deductibility of contributions to university athletic funds; to the Committee on Finance.

REPEAL OF REVENUE RULING 86-63

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I'm introducing a bill to repeal Revenue Ruling 86-63, which was issued today by the Internal Revenue Service [IRS]. The bill provides that the tax law is to be applied without regard to this ruling.

Revenue Ruling 86-63 deals with contributions to athletic scholarship funds. Basically, it provides that if an individual gives money to an athletic scholarship program and receives the right to purchase season tickets on any basis—other than as a member of the general public—then no gift is involved. If there is no gift, then there is no charitable contribution under section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Mr. President, in 1984 the IRS issued Revenue Ruling 84-132. This ruling essentially held that no charitable contribution was present when a donation was made to an athletic scholarship fund and the donor received preferred seating. After a great deal of congressional interest in this issue, the Treasury Department withdrew the ruling. A public hearing was then held by the IRS on January 7, 1985. Revenue Ruling 86-63 is the result of those hearings.

I am very concerned over the effect of this ruling on the ability of the colleges and universities in this country to raise money for scholarships for student-athletes. When the earlier ruling was issued I know many people who expressed serious concern over what would happen to donations. These funds are used primarily for scholarships for these students, and with this ruling hanging in the air, I'm afraid contributions will drop dramatically. All of us want to do all we can to maintain and strengthen our educational system, and with this ruling it seems that we're headed in the other direction.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the legislation I'm introducing today be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2379

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be applied—

(1) without regard to Revenue Ruling 86-63 (and without regard to any other regulation, ruling, or decision reaching the same result as, or a result similar to, the result set forth in such Revenue Ruling), and

(2) with full regard to the rules in effect before Revenue Ruling 86-63.●

By Mr. QUAYLE:

S. 2380. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to require the head of a Department of Defense agency to consider the foreign policy objectives of the United States before entering into a procurement contract with a foreign government or an instrumentality of a foreign government; to the Committee on Armed Services.

CONSISTENCY IN DEFENSE CONTRACTING AND FOREIGN POLICY ACT

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, the recent raid on Libya has made it clear that the United States is ready and willing to fight state-supported terrorism even if it means taking military action against the states actually supporting terrorism. Ironically, however, our defense contracting procedures do not yet appear to reflect this commitment.

In specific, early last December the Department of Defense revealed that an Italian firm, nearly 15 percent of which is owned by an official financial arm of the Libyan Government, was the lowest bidder on a defense contract for tractor crawlers. Under existing Defense procurement practices, the Department tends to give preference to the lowest bidder, in this case, Fiat of Italy.

When congressional inquires were first made to determine the appropriateness of awarding Fiat the contract, administration officials indicated that Libya's influence on the firm was insufficient to bar Fiat from getting the contract. Shortly thereafter, the President announced a complete embargo on all U.S. business dealings with Libya.

Mr. President, in light of the embargo and the recent raid on Libya, questions have been raised concerning the legality of awarding Fiat the contract. The General Accounting Office has been asked to make such a determination. Legislation also has been suggested that would prohibit the transaction. Needless to say, the entire affair has been the cause of considerable controversy and embarrassment. After several more weeks of controversy, I would be surprised if the contract is let to Fiat unless the company manages to rid itself of its Libyan investors.

Mr. President, I think we can do better than this. Later this week I have scheduled a Defense Acquisition Policy Subcommittee hearing to review this case and to determine the likelihood of other such cases arising. At this time I also intend to solicit comments from the State and Defense Departments on legislation that I am introducing today.

My bill, the Consistency in Foreign Policy and Defense Contracting Act, would require the head of any contracting defense agency to determine if a prospective contractor is controlled or owned in whole or in part by a foreign government or an instrument of a foreign government. In such cases, he would have to determine further if awarding such a contract would be inconsistent with our Nation's foreign policy or national security objectives.

My bill would also require congressional notification before any release contract is entered into with a contractor owned or controlled in part by a foreign government listed by our Government as a state supporter of terrorism.

The intent of this bill is to prevent the sort of embarrassment and confusion associated with the Fiat case. Forewarned is forearmed when it comes to possibly controversial contracts. Certainly, Congress ought not to leave determinations and notification concerning these cases to ad hoc administrative actions.

Once congressional concerns are expressed concerning such contracts, I am confident that good sense will prevail. I also believe that this legislation will put reasonable pressure on the few firms that are partially owned by state supporters of terrorism. It will give clear notice that no further Department of Defense contracts are likely to be forthcoming unless and until they rid themselves of terrorist supporting investors.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill along with several recent news clips concerning the Fiat case be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2380

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2408. Foreign policy considerations in defense contracting

"2408. Foreign policy considerations in defense contracting.".

FIAT'S LIBYAN TIES MAY POISON U.S. BUSINESS

(By Tom Donnelly)

WASHINGTON.—President Reagan's executive order banning all trade with Libya may have thrown a monkey wrench into a number of the Pentagon's major weapons buys and poses a problem for one of the major European firms interested in participating in the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Reagan's Jan. 7 executive order banning the "performance by any United States person of any contract in support of industrial or other commercial or government project in Libya" has created difficulties for the U.S. subsidiaries of the giant Italian automobile firm Fiat SpA. The Libyan government, through the Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Co., owns roughly 13 percent of Fiat's voting stock and 14.9 percent of its nonvoting stock.

Several weeks ago, a Marine Corps award of a contract for 178 bulldozers to Fiat Allis, an American subsidiary of Fiat SpA based in Illinois, was held up because of a protest by one of the losing competitors for the contract.

J.I. Case Co., the second-lowest bidder, protested to the General Accounting Office (GAO). The GAO agreed to look at the protest, and the contract award has been held up until the GAO rules sometime in May.

James P. Wade, assistant secretary of defense for acquisitions and logistics, tells Defense News, "Current U.S. law does not provide the authority to deny the contract award in the situation. However, nothing is settled."

Surio Colombo, president of Fiat U.S.A., the holding company for Fiat's U.S. interests, says, "All the signs are that [the protest] will be denied. "All preliminary rulings have been in our favor. The Libyans have no access to power with Fiat, and not even marginal participation."

Last Thursday, two powerful House committee chairmen sent a letter to Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, strongly protesting the award of the bulldozer contract to the Fiat subsidiary. Rep. Les Aspin (D-Wis.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, and Rep. Jack Brooks (D-Texas), chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, told Weinberger, "It is our strong belief that the U.S. government, particularly the Department of Defense, should not be awarding lucrative contracts to any company which is substantially owned or controlled by foreign governments that are hostile to our country. With the award of this contract, we are indirectly providing financial support for Libya's sponsorship of worldwide terrorism."

Colombo says that because the Libyan interest involves no control of the company—Fiat SpA is 30 percent owned and entirely run by Italy's leading industrialist, Gianni Agnelli, and his family—the executive order does not apply.

However, if the protest is upheld, several other U.S. weapons programs might be in jeopardy. For example, Fiat also makes parts for the Pratt & Whitney PW2037 engine that will power the Air Force's C-17 transport aircraft and makes a number of gearboxes for the General Electric CF6-50C2 engine, powerplant for the KC-10 tanker. Bill Schuman, a General Electric spokesman in Washington, says, "We have received no instructions from the government about this." Fiat's share of the engine work is 4 percent of the Pratt & Whitney engine and, Schuman says, "about 5 percent" of the GE engine.

The Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Co. was created to invest the country's oil earnings in U.S. and European industrial firms. Fiat's Washington representative, Paolo Zannoni, says that Libya first bought into Fiat more than 10 years ago. Many Middle East oil states have created overseas investment firms to protect their oil earnings, and Wall Street defense investment experts speculate that it is quite likely that a number of these investment companies may well own stock in U.S. defense firms. Fiat's Colombo says that these firms, such as the Arab Banking Co., have substantial Libyan ownership.

The case of Fiat is particularly sensitive, as the firm is anxious to participate in the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). Fiat has been a strong lobbying arm within Italy for the program, pressuring the Italian government to make a commitment to SDI.

We went to the prime minister, the foreign minister and the parliament," says Colombo. "We've been most vocal in asking the government to make the political choice to be committed to SDI."

Fiat is anxious to try to rid itself of Libyan involvement, and the Libyan ownership has been an embarrassment to Agnelli and the firm, the Italian press has reported. In an interview with the Milan daily Il Giornale April 22, Fiat managing director Cesare Romitti admitted that the Libyan ownership is proving a drawback in its efforts to win business from the U.S. government. Agnelli has made a standing offer through its investment firm to buy back the Libyan shares.

FIAT OWNERS SEEK LIBYA'S BIG STAKE

(By E.J. Dionne)

ROME, April 22.—The Italian owners of Fiat S.p.A. have offered to buy back the large minority share that Libya owns in the company, a Fiat spokesman said today.

The Libyan Government, through the Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company, owns 13 percent of Fiat's common voting shares and 15 percent of its nonvoting preferred shares, the Fiat spokesman said.

The spokesman, Camillo Fré, director of Fiat's international press relations, said that Libya had so far shown no interest in selling its shares. The Libyan investment company has been refusing to comment on its plans for the Fiat stake.

"There must be two people to make a deal," Mr. Fré said. "They don't want to get out. They've done quite well. They bought their shares for less than $400 million in 1976. The shares are now worth about $2.7 billion. That's not bad. And beyond that, they've gotten dividends."

EMBARRASSMENT FOR FIAT

Libya's ownership of such a large stake has been an embarrassment for Fiat, Italy's largest industrial company, and for the Agnelli family, which controls the sprawling concern. This problem was accentuated with the arrest Sunday of an employee of the Libyan investment company on suspicion of plotting a year ago to kill the United States Ambassador to Italy and the Saudi and Egyptian Ambassadors.

In an interview published today in Il Giornale, a Milan daily, Cesare Romiti, Fiat's managing director, acknowledged that the Libyan stake in the company was creating difficulties for Fiat in its effort to obtain public contracts in the United States.

"These problems are real," he said. "But I think the attitude of certain American sectors is excessive."

Fiat has expressed a strong interest in winning contracts for the Reagan Administration's Strategic Defense Initiative, known as "Star Wars."

The Libyan connection also fits badly with the repeated entreaties by Fiat's president and the country's most important industrialist, Gianni Agnelli, that Italy should think of itself more as a European nation than a Mediterranean one. Advocates of a "Mediterranean" Italy have encouraged close Italian ties to Arab countries.

A condition of the original agreement with Libya was that the company—in effect, the Agnelli family and its designates—remain free of any interference in its management. Mr. Fré said that Libya had shown no interest in having any role in company decisions and was apparently holding the shares only as an investment.

"Up to now, we've never had trouble with their participation," Mr. Fré said. "I must say they've behaved in a very correct way."

He said that the Agnelli family controlled 31 percent of the company, and that it could count on institutional investors and other corporate shareholders, such as the tire company Pirelli, in the event of "an impossible fight."

Mr. Romiti said that the Agnelli family, through IFI, its finance company, was prepared to buy back the Libyan shares at any time.

Although there have been rumors of a buyback of the Libyan shares in recent months, none of these have come to fruition, largely, it appears, because of Libya's reluctance to sell its shares. It is also unclear whether Libya would sell the shares at the current market rates or seek a higher price.

Mr. Fré said that finding the roughly $2.7 billion to buy back the shares from Libya would be "a minor problem." He noted that the IFI holdings amounted to $5.3 billion to $6 billion.●

AMERICAN HOSTAGES IN LEBANON

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to submit for the RECORD today, a copy of a letter sent to the President on April 26, 1985. It has been 1 year since colleagues on both sides of the aisle from both Houses joined together to ask the administration to redouble efforts to secure the release of our American hostages in Lebanon.

There is a paradox in the measure of progress in that effort. For the family of Rev. Benjamin Weir, successful progress has been made in his return. For the family of Peter Kilburn, despite our efforts, the results have been tragic. For the families of David Jacobsen and Thomas Sutherland, they have been cast into crisis since April 26, 1985. It is difficult to measure our progress.

With the families of William Buckley, Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, and Terry Anderson have committed themselves to continue their efforts on behalf of all the remaining hostages.

I believe it is extremely difficult for any of us to comprehend the turmoil, the pain and the confusion of these families during the past year. The much described "rollercoaster" experience is all too real to them. Some of them have been to Washington over 30 times. They have travelled to the United Nations, contacted numerous private organizations, appealed to embassy officials, witnessed innumerable staff and contact changes, held candlelight vigils, prayer services, taped public service announcements, launched postcard campaigns and scheduled more press interviews than they ever thought possible in 1 year. They have met with their President. They have worked with each other to form a close knit support group to push them forward when they lacked the energy and hope to see them through the new day. Where they may have experienced political failure, they have experienced personal growth and triumph.

There are those who would fail to understand the changes and reactions of the family members of hostages. They have experienced shock, anger, frustration and lack of confidence in elected and appointed officials. They have experienced, understandably, a compulsion to act and they have expressed resentment and confusion at the apparent lack of progress in gaining the safe release of their loved ones.

I have been taken by the comments of Timothy Kilburn, nephew of Peter Kilburn. He said in a recent press interview that he was not angry at the President for the death of his uncle. I share this, not from either a partisan or a political posture, but from a human one. Timothy Kilburn has shown us a glimpse of the noble self, the self to which we aspire, but so rarely express.

There is a great deal that we can learn from these families. As we struggle to understand terrorism, we can learn more about the effects of that terror. As we weigh the value of single, human lives in our day to day decisions, we can note the powerful love these Americans share.

And as we struggle, one year later, for resolutions to this crisis, we can look, paradoxically, at the courageous faith and leadership, the creative commitment and dedication of these hostages and their families. I urge my colleagues to renew their personal and public commitment to creatively and effectively work toward the resolution of this hostage crisis.

I ask that the attached letter be printed into the RECORD.

The letter follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 10, 1985.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are writing to express our deep concern for the safety and welfare of William Buckley, the Reverend Benjamin Weir, Peter Kilburn, Father Lawrence Martin Jenco and Terry Anderson, the five U.S. citizens who are being held hostage in Lebanon.

We know that the Department of State has been working through various channels to secure the hostages' release. While we recognize the process is a delicate one, we urge you to direct the Department to redouble its efforts and to become personally involved in efforts to obtain the hostages' release. Recent events in Lebanon make our request more urgent.

The families of these men anxiously hope and wait for news of their safe release. We would greatly appreciate your ensuring that all possible means to achieve this end are exhausted.

AMERICAN LEGION HANDBOOK ON CAREERS AND SCHOLARSHIPS

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as part of its effort to help the young people of this country, the American Legion has published its 35th edition of "Need a Lift?" It is one of the best career and scholarship informational handbooks available.

The information in this book can be used by students, parents, and school counselors, and is presented in clear and concise terms. It is available for general distribution through the American Legion Education Program, Americanism and Children and Youth Division, Indianapolis, IN 46206, for a nominal fee of $1.

It is important for students to have as much information as is available about scholarships, and I ask that sections IV and V be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

SECTION IV: SOURCES OF SCHOLARSHIP AND OTHER FORMS OF FINANCIAL AID AVAILABLE TO ALL STUDENTS

A. FEDERAL PROGRAMS (SUBJECT TO CHANGE BECAUSE OF PENDING LEGISLATION)

1. U.S. Department of Education provides the largest source of funding for financial aid programs. These programs are listed in the following paragraphs. Applications are available at postsecondary schools and high schools. The "Student Guide: Five Federal Financial Aid Programs, 1985-86" may be obtained by writing to Federal Student Aid Programs, Department DEA-86, Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

a. College Work-Study Program (CWSP). This program provides employment to students enrolled in colleges and eligible postsecondary institutions who need financial aid to meet college expenses. The financial aid administrator sets the student's work schedule. In arranging a job and assigning a work schedule, the aid administrator takes into account the student's health, class schedule and academic progress.

b. Guaranteed Student Loan Program. (GSL) This program provides loans to students for educational expenses and is available from eligible lenders such as banks, credit unions, savings and loan associations, State agencies and schools. Students must be enrolled on at least a half-time basis in participating postsecondary institutions, ranging from vocational and technical schools to degree-granting institutions. The family income must be less than $30,000 or if over $30,000 the student must demonstrate finanical need. Students are eligible for Federal payment of interest charges of 8 percent on their loans during school years, during a 6-month grace period, and during authorized periods of deferment. A 5 percent origination fee is required at the time of disbursement of the funds.

Loans must be repaid. Repayment normally is over a 5-10 year period. The amount of the student's repayment depends on the size of his or her debt. The more the student borrows, the higher the payments will be. Failure to repay on a timely basis can damage a person's credit rating and may lead to legal action to recover the debt.

Deferment of payment may be granted during any period in which the borrower is attending a participating institution on a full-time basis, is engaged in approved graduate fellowship study of a course of study under a rehabilitation training program for disabled individuals, up to 3 years if temporarily totally disabled, up to 3 years while serving in the U.S. Armed Forces, the Commissioned Corps of the Public Health Service, Peace Corps, VISTA, or a comparable organization; or for a single period not exceeding 12 months if seeking and unable to find full-time employment, or up to 2 years while serving an internship required for professional practice.

Undergraduate students may borrow up to $2,500 per year, to a total of $12,500. Graduate students may borrow up to $5,000 per year to a total of $25,000 (including loans made at the undergraduate level). See Table II for the address of your state's agency.

c. National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL). These loans are available to students enrolled at least half time in a regular program of study at a participating school, and have need of financial assistance to continue. Aggregate loans may not exceed $12,000 for a graduate student including under-graduate loans; $6,000 for students who have not completed their bachelor's but have completed 2 years leading to a bachelor's degree; $3,000 for any other student. Repayment of the loan begins six months after a borrower ceases to carry at least one half the normal academic work load and is to be repaid within 10 years. Interest of 5 percent will begin at the time the repayment period begins. Thereafter, should a borrower teach in a designated school located in a poverty area, or in a Headstart Program, or in a public or other non-profit elementary or secondary school for handicapped children, cancellation of the loan up to 10 percent is possible. Also for a member of the Armed Forces of the U.S. who serves in an area of hostilities, cancellation of up to 50 percent is possible. Rates of cancellation may be obtained from the institution's financial aid office.

d. Parent loans for undergraduate students (PLUS). PLUS loans are available to provide additional funds at 12 percent interest. Like GSL's, they are made by a lender such as a bank, credit union, or savings and loan association. Parents of dependent undergraduates or graduates may borrow $3,000 per year. Independent undergraduates may borrow $2,500 per year. All borrowers must begin repaying a PLUS loan within 60 days, unless the borrower is entitled to a deferment. All borrowers must begin paying the interest within 60 days. The negotiation of each loan is between the student and the lending institution. Students who desire more information or wish to initiate a loan should discuss the matter with their lender and the financial aid administrator at their school. (See Table II).

e. Pell Grant Program. Formerly called the Basic Grant Program, this program makes funds available to eligible students attending participating colleges, community/junior colleges, vocational schools, technical institutes, hospital schools of nursing, correspondence schools and other participating postsecondary institutions. To be eligible, an applicant must be an undergraduate student enrolled on at least a half-time basis. Awards will depend on program funding. During the 1985-86 award period, individual awards may range up to $2,100. To apply for a Pell Grant, a student must complete the Federal form called "Application for Federal Student Aid" or one of several private or State need analysis applications which are used to determine eligibility for other sources of student aid: the Financial Aid Form (FAF), the Family Financial Statement (FFS), the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) form or the Student Aid Application for California (SAAC). Only one application is required. Further information may be obtained from the Office of Student Financial Aid at the institution or a high school guidance counselor.

f. Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG) Program. This grant program is for students with financial need and does not have to be paid back. Students must be enrolled at least half-time as an undergraduate or vocational student in a regular program of study at an educational institution participating in the program. Graduate students are not eligible. The amount of the award varies from $200 to $2,000 per year.

2. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services also administers programs of assistance for students enrolled in health professions programs.

Information on these programs may be obtained from the Health Resources and Services Administration, Bureau of Health Professions, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, MD 20857 or the Office of Financial Aid at the school you plan to attend.

a. Exceptional Financial Need Scholarship Program for first-year students is for students with exceptional financial need. Purpose of the program is to encourage students to pursue careers in medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, optometry, pharmacy, podiatry or veterinary medicine. Citizens or Nationals of the United States may apply as well as lawful permanent residents of Puerto Rico. Virgin Islands, Guam, the trust territory, or the North Mariana Islands. Scholarships will cover (1) cost of tution for school year and other reasonable educational expenses plus a stipend of $599 per month for 12 consecutive months; (2) no service obligation accompanies the scholarship.

b. The Health Education Assistance Loan (Heal) Program is similar to the Guaranteed Student Loan Program of the U.S. Department of Education. Students of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, podiatry, veterinary medicine and optometry, may borrow up to $20,000 a year, not to exceed a total of $80,000. Pharmacy, chiropratice, health administration, clinical psychology or public health students may borrow up to $12,500 per year, not to exceed a total of $50,000.

For students to take part in the program, their school must have an agreement with the Secretary.

The maximum interest is the average of the bond equivalent rates of the 91-day Treasury Bills auctioned for the previous quarter plus 3.5 percentage points, rounded to next higher ⅛ of 1 percent. The loan principal is repayable over a 10-25 year period starting 9-12 months after completion of training. However, payments of principal are not required during periods of up to 4 years of internship and residency training or up to 3 years of service in the Armed Forces, National Health Service Corps, Peace Corps or Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA). Deferments are also made during periods of full-time study. At HHS's discretion, borrowers may enter into agreement with HHS for repayment of loans, plus interest, at a rate of not more than $10,000 a year for each year of service in NHSC or in private practice in a health manpower shortage area. Minimum service period is 2 years.

c. The Health Professions Student Loan Program. Under this program, Federally supported loans are available at participating schools of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, optometry, pharmacy, podiatry and veterinary medicine for students who need assistance to pursue a full-time course of study at the school. The amount of the loan depends upon the student's need as determined by the school; however, the maximum amount per academic year is the cost of tuition plus $2,500 or the amount of the financial need of the student, whichever is less. The loan is repayable over a 10-year period beginning one year after the student ceases to pursue a full-time course of study at a health professions school. During the repayment period, interest accrues on the total loan at the rate of 9 percent. Repayment on a loan may be deferred during periods of active military duty and service in the Peace Corps (up to three years each). Repayment may also be deferred during periods of advanced professional training, including internships and residencies. Obligation to repay the loan will be cancelled in the event of death, or permanent and total disability.

d. National Health Service Corps (NHSC) scholarships are awarded to U.S. citizens enrolled or accepted for enrollment as full-time students in accredited U.S. schools of allopathic or osteopathic medicine, dentistry, and other health disciplines needed for the mission of NHSC. These scholarships include a monthly living stipend and payment of school tuition. Each year of scholarships support incurs a year of Federal service obligation. The minimum service obligation is 2 years.

The NHSC places full-time primary health care practitioners in selected federally-designated Health Manpower Shortage Areas of the United States. Virtually all of these practitioners owe service obligations of 2 to 4 years due to their participation in the NHSC Scholarship Program.

Due to the limited appropriated funds which may be available, first-time scholarship awards for 1985-86 academic year will be restricted to students of allopathic or osteopathic medicine and dentistry who have been participants at their health professions schools of the Federal "Scholarship Program for First-Year Students of Exceptional Financial Need." No first-time awards will be available for pre-medical or predental undergraduate education, or for students of medicine or dentistry entering their first year in 1985-86.

The scholarship program is administered by the Bureau of Health Care Delivery and Assistance, Division of Health Services Scholarships. For further information address: NHSC Scholarships, Parklawn Building, Room 7-16 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, Maryland 20857.

The Minority Access to Research Careers Program's Honors Undergraduate Research Training Program is designed to increase the number of well prepared minority students who can compete successfully for entry into graduate programs leading to the Ph.D. in a biomedical science. Its goal is also to help develop a strong science curriculum and research opportunities to prepare students for careers in biomedical science. A formal research experience for the recipient is an important feature of the program. Summer study and research should be part of the overall training program at outstanding institutions or laboratories selected to enhance and supplement in the trainee's formal course work and research training experience. The criteria for selection of trainees includes evidence that the candidate has clear potential to perform at a high level in the biomedical sciences and that the candidate demonstrates a determination to subsequently enter graduate programs leading to the Ph.D. degree. Applicants must be minority honor students in their third or fourth year of college. The college or university must have an enrollment drawn substantially from ethnic minority groups such as American Indians, Blacks, Hawaiians, Mexican Americans or Puerto Ricans.

Each school will make awards for stipend and tuition support for five to ten students. The award may include travel expenses to one national meeting closely related to a project.

National Achievement Scholarship Program for outstanding Negro Students, a compensatory activity, created in 1964, is conducted by National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC) which also administers the National Merit Scholarship Program (as described in the following paragraphs). All grants to the Achievement Program are specified for the purposes of honoring academically able black students and awarding them college undergraduate scholarships. Currently, over 675 Achievement Scholarships worth over $2 million are awarded in each annual competition.

To enter the Achievement Program, black high school students must take the PSAT/NMSQT (which simultaneously makes them participants in the Merit Program), mark a space on their answer sheets requesting consideration in the Achievement Program and meet NMSC eligibility requirements.

About 1,500 of the highest scoring eligible black students are designated Semifinalists in each Achievement Program. To ensure nationwide representation, semifinalists are named in each of several U.S. geographic regions, proportionate to each region's Negro population.

Semifinalists must meet further requirements and advance to Finalist standing in order to continue in the Achievement Scholarship competition. All winners are chosen from the Achievement Program Finalist group. The selection of winners includes an evaluation of each Finalist's academic record and test scores, extracurricular activities and attainments, and the endorsement and recommendation of the student's school.

Three types of Achievement Scholarships are awarded annually: About 350 are National Achievement $2,000 Scholarship that are single-payment awards. Every Finalist is considered for one of these awards. National Merit Scholarship Program is a nationwide competition for college undergraduate scholarships. The Merit Program is conducted by National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC), an independent nonprofit organization, established in 1955 to administer this annual competition. Over 5,700 Merit Scholarships, valued at about $20 million, have been awarded each year in recent programs. Secondary school students throughout the U.S. enter the competition by taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT) given by their schools in October. To participate, students must meet published eligibility requirements.

About 15,000 top-scoring students are designated in each Merit Program. The highest scorers in each state are named Semifinalists in numbers proportionate to the state's percentage of the National total of graduating high school seniors.

Semifinalists must meet further requirements and advance to Finalist standing in order to continue in the Merit Scholarship competition. All Merit Scholars are chosen from the group of approximately 13,500 finalists. The selection of winners includes an evaluation of each Finalist's test scores, academic and extracurricular achievements and the endorsement and recommendation of the student's school.

Three types of Merit Scholarships are awarded annually: at least 1,800 are National Merit $2,000 Scholarships that are single-payment awards allocated to winners on a state representation basis, and every Finalist is considered for one of these awards. SECTION VI: STATE EDUCATIONAL BENEFITS

Most states, including the District of Columbia, have statutes which authorize educational assistance for students. To be eligible for these benefits, the applicants must have made reasonably good grades in high school or meet academic standards acceptable to the school in which they are presently enrolled. In many instances, but not all, states establish as one eligibility requirement that applicants be in need of financial help to obtain the desired education. In addition, some states have authorized educational benefits for veterans and their dependents, particularly the children of deceased and disabled veterans. Included is a summary of educational benefits for veterans and their dependents presented in abbreviated form on the following pages: (See TABLE III). In using this summary, it is important to remember:

1. The summary presents only general information concerning each state and does not pretend to be either complete or authoritative because of legislative changes that occur;

2. More complete information and application forms should be obtained from the division of government responsible for the administration of these laws in the respective states;

3. While we have attempted to give up-to-date information, state laws and appropriations do change from time to time;

4. In practically all instances, educational benefits authorized can only be provided if the necessary state appropriations are made.

Application for state educational aid should normally be made well in advance of the anticipated date of enrollment. Get the answers to your individual questions, more detailed information and application forms from the designated division of government in each state. See Table II for the address of your state agency.●

AMNESTY URGED FOR DOREL CATARAMA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the case of Dorel Catarama has become a symbol of what many believe to be religious oppression in Romania.

While Romanian officials disagree, the evidence appears overwhelming that charges leveled against Mr. Catarama are trumped up.

Dorel Catarama is imprisoned in Romania on charges of embezzlement and possession of foreign currency. But Amnesty International believes the real reason for his imprisonment is his religious activities as a Seventh-day Adventist and his family's refusal to return to Romania after a visit to the United States in 1982.

Released prisoners have described Mr. Catarama's treatment as extraordinarily brutal.

I recently met with representatives of the Romanian Parliament. It was a cordial, yet frank meeting.

I think the simple gesture of granting Dorel Catarama amnesty would go a long way to showing the United States that Romania is serious about improving its record on human and religious rights.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: LET THEM GO BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, Naum and Inna Meiman are suffering. The Meimans are a Soviet couple who have applied to emigrate numerous times and have always been refused. Naum has experienced harassment by Soviet authorities for over 10 years.

Now, Inna is critically ill. Her cancer is treatable according to Western medical authorities, but the Soviet doctors have told her there is nothing more that they can or will do. Time is running out for Inna. She must have the advanced medical treatment being offered to her in the West to live.

Naum is an older man who also has little time left. What do the Soviets gain by holding this elderly and sick couple? They certainly are not gaining in the public relations area.

I strongly urge the Soviets to allow the Meimans to emigrate to Israel.●

SURVIVORS OF ABORTION: THE DREADED COMPLICATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, last week I submitted several articles regarding infants who survive abortions. It has been demonstrated that 300 to 400 infants live through second and third-term abortions each year. The articles quite candidly pointed out how ill-equipped the medical community is to deal with this "complication" in a consistently humane fashion.

The two procedures which can result in live births are saline injections and prostaglandin treatments. Another method which is rapidly gaining acceptance is known as "dilatation and evacuation." It involves cutting up a tiny infant into pieces and removing him or her from the mother. This procedure does not result in a live birth.

The popularity of this procedure is due primarily to its efficacy. There are not troubling dilemmas for the patient because the fetus never survives. But something unexpected has occurred. "D & E" is exacting a high toll on the medical practitioners themselves. The following paper was delivered by two such physicians at the 1978 meeting of the Association of Planned Parenthood Physicians in San Diego, CA.

I ask that the paper be printed in the RECORD.

The paper follows:

WHAT ABOUT US? STAFF REACTIONS TO THE D&E PROCEDURE

(Warren M. Hern, M.D., M.P.H., and Billie Corrigan, R.N., M.S.)

A major controversy has emerged during the last few years concerning the technical risks and acceptability of the "dilatation and evacuation" (D&E) abortion performed during the second trimester of pregnancy. Multi-center studies reported by the Center for Disease Control demonstrate a lower risk of major complications for D&E by comparison with saline and prostaglandin amnioinfusion abortions. There are wide differences of opinion about the use of laminaria vs. manual dilatation and about the desirability or need for single or multiple laminaria treatment.

Several authors agree that the D&E procedure is easier emotionally for the patient since she does not have to deliver a fetus which may have signs of life. There is recognition that the emotional trauma of the experience is transferred from the patient to those who are performing the abortion. This problem, however, has received little attention.

The present study is the result of nearly four years of direct experience by staff members of a small, private, ambulatory abortion facility where D&E procedures are performed up to 22 menstrual weeks gestation. The senior author has performed over 300 of these procedures in this setting. Both authors have noted intense reactions in themselves and in other staff members to the D&E procedure. The study of these reactions is considered to be important since the feelings and attitudes of those providing abortion services have a profound effect on the quality of care experienced by the patients. These reactions may, in fact, determine whether the patient even receives the care she requests. It has been clear from the beginning, for example, that some staff members are unable to assist with late abortion procedures due to their reaction to it or belief that it was wrong to perform an abortion beyond a certain week of gestation.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

Twenty-three present and former staff members of the clinic were polled via questionnaire to determine whether they had assisted with D&E procedures and, if so, what their reactions had been. The questionnaire asked the respondent to specify the role in which he or she had assisted the patients: doctor, nurse, telephone contact, receptionist, or other; it also asked how many patients the respondent had assisted in this capacity. Respondents were asked to describe their thoughts about the moral, legal, medical and other aspects of second trimester abortions and to state their primary feelings about the patients having late abortions, the procedure itself, the medical risks, the visual impact of the fetus, and the doctor. Respondents were asked to list and explain the differences that existed for them in assisting with first vs. second-trimester abortions. They were asked to specify whether there was a limit in length of pregnancy beyond which they would not assist with abortion and to give the reasons. Respondents were asked to describe uncertainties and changes in their feelings about these matters and invited to describe other reactions or impact such as dreams or preoccupations with the procedure while not at work.

Fifteen present and former staff members responded to the questionnaire and these were interviewed individually to followup questions raised in the written response.

From a technical point of view, the D&E procedure using a multiple laminaria technique described elsewhere has been used in this series with an exceedingly low complication rate. Operative complications such as hemorrhage and retained fetal parts have occurred more than in first trimester procedures but no truly major complications have occurred. Patients receive three laminaria treatments over a period of 42 hours followed by supplemental manual dilatation up to 2.5cm under local anesthesia. Each counselor is assigned one patient and follows that patient through each step including laminaria changes, procedure, and recovery room. Procedure times varies from an average of 15-20 minutes initially to less than 10 minutes currently, reflecting experience and improved technique by the operator. Blood loss averages between 100-250cc depending on the length of gestation, is often negligible and rarely exceeds 500cc. Two patients have been hospitalized overnight for observation; one for a suspected perforation and another for operative hemmorrhage due to uterine atony.

RESULTS

Of the 15 respondents, all approved of the second trimester procedure in principle but 8 had several reservations along with their approval. Most respondents felt sympathetic or protective toward the patient, but four expressed feelings of resentment, irritation, or anger toward patients who had waited so long before seeking abortion. Positive comments about the D&E procedure itself were in the minority; only three expressed views that it was a better alternative for the patient. The rest thought that the procedure was difficult, tedious, riskier, painful for everyone, and feared major complications. Nine were quite preoccupied with the medical risks while six were not concerned or did not comment. Reactions to viewing the fetus ranged from "I haven't looked" to shock, dismay, amazement, disgust, fear, and sadness. Attitudes toward the doctor were those of sympathy, wonder at how he could perform the procedure at all, and a desire to protect him from the trauma. Two felt that it must eventually damage him psychologically.

Differences between first trimester and second trimester D&E procedures noted by the respondents included an increased fear of complications in the late procedures, the visual impact of the fetus, and the violence. About a third felt that the procedure was longer and harder on the patients and several thought it was more difficult to rationalize or intellectualize the D&E procedure.

Ten respondents thought that there was a limit to the length of pregnancy which could be interrupted with opinions ranging from 12 weeks to 24-26 weeks.

Most respondents expressed considerable ambivalence and shifting feelings toward the late procedure depending to some extent on familiarity with amnioinfusion procedures and experience with the D&E procedure. About half felt more positive with greater D&E experience and about half had more conflict or felt "burnt out". One respondent expressed increasing resentment of the casual attitudes of some patients considering the emotional cost to those providing the service.

Two respondents described dreams which they had had related to the procedure. Both described dreams of vomiting fetuses along with a sense of horror. Other dreams revolved around a need to protect others from viewing fetal parts, dreaming that she herself was pregnant and needed an abortion or was having a baby.

Six respondents denied any preoccupation with the D&E procedure outside the clinic. Several others felt that the emotional strain affected interpersonal relationships significantly or resulted in other behavior such as an obsessive need to talk about the experience. In this group, a common observation was that personal problems outside the clinic made it much more difficult to handle the stress of the D&E procedure.

DISCUSSION

One of the questions which emerges from these interviews is whether there is a relationship between the role played and the attitude toward the D&E procedure. In general, it appears that the more direct the physical and visual involvement (i.e. nurses, doctor), the more stress experienced. This is evident both in conscious stress and in unconscious manifestations such as dreams. At least, both individuals who reported several significant dreams were in these roles.

Is there a relationship between the number of D&E procedures performed or participated in and attitudes toward them? The evidence is equivocal since some respondents reported more tension as they participated in more procedures and some felt more comfortable. All agreed that there was more psychological stress than with first trimester procedures.

We discerned that the following psychological defenses were used by staff members at various times to handle the traumatic impact of the destructive part of the operation: denial, sometimes through literal distance from viewing the procedure itself; projection, as evidenced by concern or anguish for other staff members assisting with or performing the procedure; and intellectualization. Popularly, the latter took the form of discussing the pros and cons of performing the D&E procedure and rationalizing its value.

There is no question that the properly performed D&E procedure, aside from its advantages in risk reduction, is more traumatic for the operator and assistants them for the patient. An improperly performed D&E would be traumatic for the patient as well. Technically, however, it is possible to reduce discomfort and trauma to the patient to a minimum consistent with the medical objective of emptying the uterus with the least damage to the cervix and other pelvic structures.

The most important challenges in late abortion are not the technical questions of medical treatment. These yield to persistence, immigration, surgical skill, and commitment to standards of medical excellence. The most difficult thing is how we feel about doing it. We have produced an unusual dilemma. A procedure is rapidly becoming recognized as the procedure of choice in late abortion, but those capable of performing or assisting with the procedure are having strong personal reservations about participating in an operation which they view as destructive and violent. The same people who cannot help with the procedure applaud its introduction because of increased safety for the patient. Some part of our cultural and perhaps even biological heritage recoils at a destructive operation on a form that is similar to our own, even while we may know that the act has a positive effect for a living person. No one who has not performed this procedure can know what it is like or what it means; but having performed it, we are bewildered by the possibilities of interpretation.

We have reached a point in this particular technology where there is no possibility of denial of an act of destruction by the operator. It is before one's eyes. The sensations of dismemberment flow through the forceps like an electric current. It is the crucible of a raging controversy, the confrontation of a modern existential dilemma. The more we seem to solve the problem, the more intractable it becomes.●

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY LABOR LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator KENNEDY, I ask that the measure, H.R. 281, which appears on the calendar of bills and joint resolutions read the first time be read the second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 281) to amend the National Labor Relations Act to increase the stability of collective bargaining in the building and construction industry.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I object to any further consideration of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard to further consideration of the bill after its second reading, pursuant to rule XIV the bill will be placed on the calendar.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think Senators know, but let me now repeat more explicitly, there will be no further action today on the budget resolution. It will return to the calendar as per the unanimous consent agreements which are obvious in the RECORD. I understand from the distinguished leader, Senator DOLE, that he intends to not only dispose of the amendments which are the subject matter of unanimous-consent agreements, but that we will proceed with additional amendments and that there will be a significant number of votes following the two which have been arranged.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, has the distinguished manager of the budget resolution announced that there will be no further action on that resolution today?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, has the order already been entered as to the time that will remain to be allotted to both sides on the budget resolution by tomorrow? Has that order already been entered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order has been entered that, as of tomorrow, there will be 20 hours that remain.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. Then the time that I shall take at this point does not come off the time of the budget resolution. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

□ 1630

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, anytime the majority leader wishes to transact additional Senate business or if any other Senator wishes to have the floor, I shall be glad to relinquish the floor. I ask unanimous consent that in that event, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD not show an interruption of my speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a continuation of the series of floor speeches which I have been delivering on the subject of the U.S. Senate since March 1980. As I recall, this is the 82d of such speeches, and the title of today's speech is The Senate and a Bipartisan Foreign Policy, 1953-60.

THE UNITED STATES SENATE

THE SENATE AND A BIPARTISAN FOREIGN POLICY, 1953-1960

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the late Francis Wilcox was an astute observer of the United States Senate's role in foreign policy, both from his posts as the first chief of staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and as an Assistant Secretary of State in the Eisenhower administration. During his tenure with the committee and the Department of State, the foreign policy of the United States was frequently and correctly described as a bipartisan policy. Democrats and Republicans alike agreed that politics stopped at the water's edge. While there was still much criticism of individual policies and policy-makers, a broad-based consensus in the government and in the country supported the fundamental objectives of the United States in those difficult early years of the Cold War. Such bipartisanship lasted until the Vietnam War in the 1960's, when legislative-executive relations became intensely estranged. Having witnessed the rise and fall of bipartisanship, Dr. Wilcox once recorded what he considered as the ideal conditions for a bipartisan foreign policy:

> First, when the White House and the administration are controlled by one party, and the Congress is controlled by the other party—as in the case of the 80th Congress—when cooperation becomes absolutely essential; the government can't function in that kind of a situation unless you have a bipartisan approach. Secondly, when there is a fairly good consensus in the country about the basic principles or goals of our foreign policy and the way it should be conducted. . . . Thirdly, the kind of leadership on Capitol Hill that can command the confidence of the Congress and the executive and be willing to deemphasize politics while working for the national interest. And fourthly the kind of strong leadership in the White House that is willing to accord Congress its rightful place in the constitutional scheme of things and is willing to consult frequently with Congress on important foreign policy questions.[1]

Today, in my continuing series of addresses on the history of the United States Senate, I should like to take Dr. Wilcox's wise prescription for bipartisanship as a means of examining the Senate's role in the foreign policy of the United States between 1953 and 1960—a crucial decade for this Nation and this institution. It was a period of grave challenges and dramatic decisions affecting the survival of humanity on this globe. It was also a period when the executive branch used foreign policy as a means of strengthening presidential power vis-a-vis Congress. This was an ironic situation because General Dwight D. Eisenhower had run for the presidency in 1952 deeply opposed to executive aggrandizement. Yet, as Professor Arthur Schlesinger has pointed out in his important book, The Imperial Presidency, by the end of his second term, Eisenhower had accelerated the transfer of power from Congress to the presidency. "Two things had happened," Schlesinger wrote: "the belief that the world was greatly endangered by the spread of communism had generated a profound conviction of crisis in the United States; and the conviction of crisis had generated a foreign policy that placed the separation of powers prescribed by the American Constitution under unprecedented, and at times unbearable, strain." [2]

In 1953, war still raged in Korea; the United States had 3.6 million men in uniform, and was allocating billions of dollars for military expenditures. All of this enormously strengthened the president as Commander-in-Chief. Although critical of some aspects of strategy and policy, Congress still tended to defer to the president on matters of warfare and national security. It is also important to remember that the two parties at that time fundamentally viewed the world situation in the same way. The Republican Eisenhower inherited his basic national security structure from the Democratic Truman, and adopted the broad outlines of his policies.

In June 1953, President Eisenhower convened a six-week, top-secret policy study, conducted in the penthouse solarium of the White House. "Operation Solarium" drafted the policy statements that guided the next eight years of American foreign policy initiatives under Eisenhower. Only recently were the records of "Operation Solarium" declassified, and they make most interesting reading. We find, for instance, that Eisenhower rejected the 1952 Republican campaign promise of rolling back Soviet control of Eastern Europe, and instead decided to concentrate his efforts on building a position of strength so that other nations would respect American interests and see the United States as a source of support. This strategy required that the United States use any means possible, from conventional ground troops to nuclear weapons, to deter aggression. The United States and its allies would strengthen themselves to prevent political or military gains by the Communists and to diminish Soviet influence in the world. Essentially, this was a continuation of the policies forged under Harry Truman.[3]

Eisenhower began his presidency with a broad national consensus on foreign policy and strong bipartisan support in the Congress. The greatest difficulty he encountered was not from the opposition party but from critics within his own party. In a previous address I discussed the peculiar crusade of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, whose hunt for Communists in government deeply shook the Department of State, driving competent, independent-minded men out of policy-making positions, and severely depressing the morale of those who remained. Opposition came also from Senator William Knowland, who in the summer of 1953 became the Republican majority leader. Knowland's close attachments to the government of Chiang Kai-shek had won him the nickname of "the senator from Formosa." A man of principle, Knowland was willing to fight even the titular leader of his own party if they disagreed on an issue.

But it was silver-maned Senator John Bricker from Ohio who made the most direct assault on Eisenhower's foreign policy leadership. In 1951, Senator Bricker began introducing an amendment to the Constitution which would prohibit the United States from entering into any international agreements that might affect the rights and freedoms of the people or the character and structure of the government. What motivated Bricker was a concern that American participation in the UN Charter and human rights covenant might somehow override American laws. As it evolved, however, the main thrust of the Bricker Amendment came to be: "Congress shall have power to regulate all executive and other agreements with any foreign power or international organization."

Many Republicans saw the Bricker Amendment as a vehicle for preventing presidents from entering into unsupervised executive agreements such as the one Roosevelt reached with Stalin and Churchill at Yalta. Mrs. Phyllis Schlafly, already a political activist in 1953, called the Bricker Amendment "the most important and necessary legislation that the present Congress can pass." The amendment also won support from such groups as the American Bar Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Daughters of the American Revolution.[4]

When Senator Bricker reintroduced his amendment at the beginning of the 83rd Congress, he had 62 co-sponsors, including 45 of the 48 Senate Republicans. The amendment frightened many experts in the State Department. Some interpreted it as meaning that future treaties would have to be ratified by each of the states. Seeing the amendment as a congressional attempt to reduce the powers of the president over foreign policy, Eisenhower was determined to block that effort. He and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles met with Senator Bricker but could not budge him, for Bricker, as Eisenhower noted, had "gotten almost psychopathic on the subject." The president became so frustrated over his dealings with the senator that he once remarked to his press secretary, James Hagerty: "If it's true that when you die the things that bothered you most are engraved on your skull, I am sure I'll have there the mud and dirt of France during the invasion and the name of Senator Bricker." [5]

As the Eisenhower administration fought desperately to delay and defeat the Bricker amendment, it turned to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for help. The chairman, Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin, suffered badly by comparison with his predecessors, Arthur Vandenberg and Tom Connally. An amiable politician, he simply lacked the knowledge, interest, and prestige to handle that job competently. Secretary Dulles found it impossible to discuss substantive issues of foreign policy with Senator Wiley. But Wiley was an administration loyalist, and he fought tooth and toenail in opposition to the Bricker Amendment. Pat Holt, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee staff, and later its director, recalled that "there were endless hours spent fooling around with words" on the Bricker Amendment, "what hypothetical situations would this particular formulation apply to, and so on. In this process there were a good many meetings in the White House with Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles and various senators who were interested in it. Wiley's principal function in these meetings was to stiffen the spine of the Eisenhower administration and keep them from agreeing to something which they would probably regret." Senator Wiley, according to Pat Holt, "had a gut feeling that it would do violence to the Constitution." Wiley showed considerable political courage, lined up against most of the senators from his own party, and in the face of a substantial mail campaign in favor of the treaty. "I've got 10,000 letters supporting the Bricker Amendment," he once commented, "but three million people voted in Wisconsin in the last election, and I haven't heard from the other 2,990,000 of them." [6]

In addition to help from Senator Wiley, the Eisenhower administration looked to Senate Democrats. In January 1954, Eisenhower and Dulles met with Senator Walter George, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, to find a way to prevent passage of the amendment. Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson welcomed this opportunity to help save the president from isolationists in his own party. Senators Johnson and George, and the Democratic Policy Committee thus began drafting an alternative resolution. This one stated that: "An international agreement other than a treaty shall become effective as internal law in the United States only by an act of the Congress." Even this version, however, raised objections from the Department of State as restricting presidential authority. In February, the Senate voted down the Republican version of the Bricker amendment by a substantial margin but then came very close to passing the Democratic version. Eisenhower marshaled all of his lobbying skills to persuade members to vote against the George substitute and managed to defeat it by a single vote. It was the late Senator Harley Kilgore of West Virginia, who cast that decisive vote. The Bricker amendment was finally dead.[7]

In July 1953, the United Nations and North Korea signed an armistice at Panmunjon, ending the Korean war. Immediately, American concerns were focused on another Asian trouble spot, Indochina. There the French were holding an increasingly precarious position against nationalist forces led by Ho Chi Minh. In his first appearances before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Secretary Dulles drew special attention to this region. "In some ways it is more dangerous, I would think, than any other situation in the world," he told the Congressmen, "because the loss of Indochina would probably have even more serious repercussions upon the Indian-Asian population than even the loss of South Korea and, also, because what is going on in Indochina has very serious repercussions in Europe and upon the mood of France, and the willingness of the French to move in partnership with Germany toward the creation of unity and security in Europe." [8]

Senate concern over the course of events in Indochina became evident during the debate over President Eisenhower's request in 1953 for an additional $400 million in military aid for that region. The House passed the bill with little opposition, but the Senate engaged in a sharp debate on the matter. Senator BARRY GOLDWATER of Arizona introduced an amendment requiring the French to set a target date for the complete independence of Indochina. Senator GOLDWATER argued that unless the political aspirations of the people of Indochina were met, the United States would inevitably be drawn into military conflict in the region. The only way to "prevent our boys from ending up in the jungles of southeast Asia," said Senator GOLDWATER, was "to ask France, * * *, to grant independence and the right of freedom to those people who have fought so long for their independence and freedom."

Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts agreed with Senator GOLDWATER that the war could never be won unless "large numbers of the people of Vietnam are won over from their sullen neutrality and open hostility to it and fully support its successful conclusion." This could never be done, Kennedy asserted, unless the people of Indochina were assured of their independence at the conclusion of the war. Kennedy, however, wanted to avoid "an ultimatum" to the French and offered a substitute for GOLDWATER'S amendment, that all mutual security funds spent in Indochina would be administered in such a way as to encourage the freedom and independence of the people there. Even this measure was considered too drastic, and the Senate defeated Kennedy's proposal by a 64 to 17 vote. Considering the roles they would later play in the Vietnam war, it is interesting to note that Senators GOLDWATER and Kennedy sponsored these cautionary amendments, and Senator Lyndon Johnson voted against them.

Congress voted the $400 million for Indochina, but the French immediately asked for another $385 million, warning that without it they might have to withdraw from the area. The Eisenhower administration agreed to the increase, and Thruston Morton, then assistant secretary of state for congressional relations, came to Capitol Hill to brief the influential Senator Richard Russell. Morton later recalled that Senator Russell told him, "You are pouring it down a rathole; the worst mess we ever got into, this Vietnam. The president has decided it. I'm not going to say a word of criticism. I'll keep my mouth shut, but I'll tell you right now we are in for something that is going to be one of the worst things this country ever got into." What a tragedy that Richard Russell's prophetic warning was not heeded!

In addition to increased financial aid, the Eisenhower administration wanted to send 200 aircraft technicians to assist the French. Senator Mike Mansfield, who had traveled through Indochina and who was as familiar with that region as any member of the Senate, approved the sending of these troops but warned that it was up to the people of Indochina rather than the United States to fight this war. Senator JOHN STENNIS voiced similar concerns: "I am afraid, we will move to a point from which there will be no return," he warned.[9]

In March, the Viet Minh attacked the French garrison at Dienbienphu. Some observers feared that the loss of Dienbienphu might mean the loss of all of Indochina. Should the United States intervene militarily to save the French? Secretary of State Dulles and Admiral Arthur Radford, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, leaned toward intervention. In a press conference Eisenhower made his famous analogy of falling dominoes to describe the situation: if the Communists knocked one over, all the rest would fall. By April 1, the situation had so deteriorated that policy planners were considering an American air strike to aid the French garrison. The administration drafted a joint resolution empowering the president to use American forces to resist aggresion in Southeast Asia. On April 3, Secretary Dulles called congressional leaders to the State Department for a briefing. There, Radford and Dulles warned of the consequences of a Communist victory and urged that the president be given congressional support to use military power.

□ 1650

Senate Republican Leader William Knowland supported the venture, but Democratic leaders were skeptical. Senator Earl Clements asked Admiral Radford if the plan for an American air strike at Dienbienphu had the support of other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. No, Radford replied. How many agreed with him? None, said the Admiral. "How do you account for that?" Clements demanded. "I have spent more time in the Far East than any of them and I understand the situation better," Radford insisted. Senator Lyndon Johnson then asked whether Secretary Dulles had consulted with other nations who would be allies in the intervention. Dulles said he had not. By the end of the meeting, congressional Republicans and Democrats alike advised Dulles to seek allies for the plan and not to plan on unilateral American action.[10]

Back at the Capitol, Senator Lyndon Johnson met with a small group of Democratic senators and gave them "a vivid, muscular and athletic recounting" of the meeting with Dulles. When the support of the congressional leaders had been solicited, Johnson told them, he had pounded on the desk to emphasize his opposition. It was clear from such displays that the administration could not count upon uncritical congressional support unless it could demonstrate strong pledges of assistance from American allies. On April 6, for instance, Senator John Kennedy in a speech in the Senate stated that he favored a policy of united action by many nations. "But to pour money, materiel, and men into the jungles of Indochina without at least a remote prospect of victory would be dangerously futile and self-destructive." Senator JOHN STENNIS added: "I do not believe that Congress would ever vote, or should vote, to have the United States go in on a unilateral basis. It would have to be a united effort; not a token effort, but a real united effort."

Secretary Dulles flew to London to persuade the British to join in a united front in Indochina, but to no avail. British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden recalled in his memoirs that Prime Minister Winston Churchill had decided it would be a mistake for the British to join the United States in sending troops into Indochina. "Sir Winston summed up the position by saying that what we were being asked to do was to assist in misleading Congress into approving a military operation, which would in itself be ineffective, and might well bring the world to the verge of a major war." The British refusal to intervene undercut Dulles' efforts and convinced Eisenhower not to involve the United States militarily at Dienbienphu. "Without allies and associates," the president told his staff, "the leader is just an adventurer, like Genghis Kahn." On May 7, 1954, the garrison at Dienbienphu fell to the Communists. This set in motion the independence of Indochina from France, and its partition at the Geneva Conference, into Laos, Cambodia, and North and South Vietnam.[11]

President Eisenhower has received commendation from historians for his decision not to intervene at Dienbienphu. In light of subsequent events in Vietnam, he clearly made the right decision. When we consider that Secretary Dulles had in his pocket a draft resolution calling for American military intervention, and that Vice President Nixon was suggesting that American troops might need to be sent to Indochina if the French withdrew, Eisenhower was the model of a cautious, rational, pragmatic national leader. However, we should keep in mind that strong congressional opposition to unilateral intervention had exerted a moderating influence on the administration and reminded it of the need to seek allies. This was the conclusion of Chalmers Roberts' famous article on "The Day We Didn't Go to War." Congress had helped the administration face reality.

In 1954, Democrats won majorities in both the Senate and the House, and for the rest of Eisenhower's administration the Republican president had to deal with a Democratic Congress. In some ways, Eisenhower had an easier time with Congress after the Democrats took charge. No longer did he need to agonize over John Bricker's amendment or McCarthy's harassment of the State Department and the Army. Now he dealt with Lyndon Johnson rather than Bill Knowland as majority leader, with Sam Rayburn rather than Joe Martin as Speaker of the House. And recalling one of Francis Wilcox's precepts, with which I began this talk, a bipartisan approach to foreign policy seems to work best when the presidency and Congress are controlled by different parties: it forces both sides to act responsibly and with some degree of mutuality.

As president, Eisenhower wanted to open "lines of communication" with Congress. We often forget, when considering his military background, that in the early 1930's Eisenhower had served as General MacArthur's aide-de-camp, and had handled congressional relations for the Army. He was no stranger to Washington's ways. Secretary Dulles was also aware of the example of his predecessor, Dean Acheson's poor relations with Congress, and he went out of his way to consult with congressional leaders on major issues. The Eisenhower administration created the first legislative liaison unit in the White House, with regular liaison officers assigned to work with the Senate and House. President Eisenhower wrote that he "early embarked on a program of discussing issues, in a social atmosphere, with groups of Congressmen and senators of both parties, in the hope that personal acquaintance would help smooth out the difficulties inherent in partisanship." [12]

Eisenhower and Dulles' efforts to build links to Congress paid off in the bipartisan support they were able to win, fairly consistently, during the 1950's. Take, for example, the crisis that developed in the Formosa Straits in 1954 and '55. In September, 1954, the Chinese Communists commenced artillery shelling of the island of Quemoy, which was occupied by the Nationalist Chinese under Chiang Kai-shek. Occasionally, this artillery fire was supplemented by air attacks, and an invasion from Mainland China seemed imminent. In a message on January 24, 1955, President Eisenhower invited Congress "to participate now, by specific resolution, in measures designed to improve the prospect of peace," including "the use of the Armed Forces of the United States if necessary to assure the security of Formosa and the Pescadores." [13]

Now, the Congress which had cautioned President Eisenhower against intervention in Indochina was not eager to initiate any action which might lead to war with the People's Republic of China. In addition, as Senator John Sparkman recalled, "There was on the /Foreign Relations/ Committee at this time a profound distrust of Chiang and his intentions. Dulles did his best to allay these fears, telling the committee that he had explicit commitments from Chiang not to undertake a return to the mainland without U.S. approval." The Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees met jointly in closed session to hear Secretary Dulles' justification of the proposed resolution. The resolution was "absolutely necessary," said Dulles because "there is at least doubt as to whether or not the president could, without congressional authorization, take the kind of action which I am talking about. The area of authority as between the president and the Congress in these matters is admittedly a shady one." The venerable Alben Barkley, former majority leader and vice president, now returned for his last term in the Senate, asked the question on everyone's mind: "Would it be fair to describe this resolution as a predated declaration of war?" Secretary Dulles replied that "the president does not interpret this as a declaration of war, and if there were a situation to arise which in his opinion called for a declaration of war, he would come back again to the Congress." [14]

With such assurances, both the Senate and House quickly approved the Formosa Resolution. At that time, I was a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. By asking Congress for a joint resolution when the government faced the possibility of military engagement overseas, President Eisenhower did what President Truman had neglected to do after the Korean invasion. Professor Arthur Schlesinger has noted that in contrast to earlier resolutions in American history, the Formosa Resolution ordered no action and named no enemy. "Rather it committed Congress to the approval of hostilities without knowledge of the specific situation in which the hostilities would begin." But Congress was in no mood to challenge the assumptions of presidential leadership in foreign and military affairs. As Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson said: "We are not going to take the responsibility out of the hands of the constitutional leader and try to arrogate it to ourselves." [15]

The president returned to Congress with a similar request two years later, this time dealing with the Middle East. In 1956, Great Britain, France, and Israel had invaded Egypt to seize the Suez Canal. The United States had opposed the invasion and forced its allies to retreat. In the process. Great Britain, upon whom we had relied as the chief bulwark against Soviet intervention in the Middle East, lost its prestige and influence in the region. Secretary Dulles, perceiving a dangerous power vacuum in the Middle East that the Soviets would be tempted to exploit, sought some means of injecting the United States into the Middle East, a region in which this country had long played only a peripheral role. The difficult question was how we could replace the British bulwark without taking on the hated mantle of colonialism. With these issues in mind, President Eisenhower appeared before Congress on January 5, 1957, to request authority to send American armed forces to the Middle East if necessary to preserve the territorial independence of nations there from international communism.

Once again the question of a "predated declaration of war" was raised, this time by Senator Hubert Humphrey. Secretary Dulles objected to the term, attributing the peaceful outcome of the Formosa Crisis to the authority granted by the Formosa Resolution. "I would call it a declaration of peace rather than a declaration of war because I think that without this we are in great danger of getting into war," Dulles observed. But unlike the Formosa Resolution, which rushed through Congress with a minimum debate, the Middle East Resolution, or "Eisenhower Doctrine" as the press called it, was the subject of extensive Senate scrutiny. The House approved the resolution by a wide margin on January 30. However, the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees held joint hearings in public and executive sessions between January 28 and February 12, and the Senate debated the resolution for twelve days before passing it on March 5. [16]

Mr. President, I would like to read some of the comments made by members of the Senate in the closed-door hearings on the Middle East Resolution. These hearings were classified and closed until 1979 when they were published by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as part of its "Historical Series." In previous remarks I have cited the volumes in this series for the Truman administration. I am pleased that the committee has opened and published its executive session transcripts for all of the Eisenhower administration and that it is currently publishing volumes covering the Kennedy years. This series, which the committee launched in 1973, has been praised by diplomatic historians as a critical research tool for understanding the historic role of Congress in the formulation of American foreign policy. I commend Chairman RICHARD LUGAR and other members of the Foreign Relations Committee for this important public service.

One of those most skeptical of the Middle East Resolution was Senator J. William Fulbright of Arkansas. Although not yet chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Fulbright was already recognized as the Senate's leading expert in international relations. Senator Fulbright had supported the Formosa Resolution, but now had his doubts. In a speech in the Senate on February 11, he charged that there had been "no real prior consultation with Congress, nor will there be any sharing of power. The whole manner of presentation of this resolution—leaks to the press, speeches to specially summoned Saturday joint sessions, and dramatic secret meetings of the Committee on Foreign Relations after dark one evening before the Congress was even organized, in an atmosphere of suspense and urgency—does not constitute consultation in the true sense. All this was designed to manage Congress, to coerce it into signing this blank check."

In the closed sessions, other senators expressed similar concerns about the resolution. Senator Richard Russell objected that it left Congress "as an appendage of the executive branch in dealing with this very vital and important matter." Senator Russell continued: "In my opinion, the Congress of the United States is being treated as a group of children, and very small children, and children with a very low IQ at that, in the manner that this resolution has been presented to us * * * . I think that the Congress, if it is going to preserve its own self esteem, ought to have more information than we have on it." "I don't wish to pose as a prophet," Senator Russell said, "but I unhesitatingly say that if we pass this resolution in this fashion, that from here on out we will never get back in control of your program in this area * * * . It may be going for the next 25 or 30 years, and the Congress will never regain control of it. It will from here on out be in the hands of the executive branch of the Government."[17]

Senator Sam Ervin of North Carolina counseled: "The Constitution of the United States, as I construe it, contemplates that the Armed Forces of the United States, will not be put into an offensive war * * * without the consent of Congress; and here this first part of this resolution says that the president can put our Armed Forces against some enemy which has not yet been selected, in the Middle East. The resolution is not directed against Russia; it is directed against the nations which we fear will become Communist in the Middle East * * * and it is a a perfect invitation for another Korea, with Russia furnishing arms, and us furnishing the boys to do the dying."[18]

Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon argued: "You have got a resolution here which, for the first time, suggests that the President of the United States can exercise discretion to proceed to protect the territorial integrity of some other country somewhere in the world attacked by some Communist country, because he thinks that eventually that may involve the security of the United States, and I think that is an absurd stretching of that alleged emergency power on the part of the president, and I think it would be a clear violation of the constitutional power of the president."[19]

The members of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees wrestled long and hard with what Richard Russell called the "shadowland" between the president's authority to use military forces and the need for a declaration of war. They finally amended the Middle East Resolution to strike out the idea of a congressional authorization and to leave the resolution as more of a declaration of U.S. policy in the Middle East. "The effect on Eisenhower," Professor Schlesinger has noted, "was to convince him less of the need for serious consultation with Congress than of his inherent authority to employ armed forces at presidential will." The next year, when the president sent American troops to Lebanon, he did not invoke the Middle East resolution, or ask Congress for any approval, but instead acted under his authority as Commander-in-Chief.[20]

There is a historical postscript to this fascinating debate over the Middle East Resolution. As I pointed out, the two committees deliberated for several weeks on this issue and made significant changes in the text of the resolution. By contrast, when President Lyndon Johnson presented the Congress with the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution in 1964 there was neither protracted nor significant debate in committee or on the floor. Why so much attention to one and not to the other? It is hard to say for sure, but perhaps the effect of so many resolutions in support of presidential use of armed forces, from Formosa in 1955 through the Middle East Resolution in 1957 and the Cuba and Berlin resolutions in 1962, helped lull the Congress into inattentiveness. The constitutional scruples that members had agonized over earlier were put aside in 1964, much to the later regret even of the resolution's sponsors. Reading through these observations by Senators Fulbright, Russell, and Ervin over the Middle East Resolution, one might wish that they had raised the same warning flags over Vietnam. Only Senator Wayne Morse was consistent in his suspicion of both measures.

Mr. President, I think it is clear from my discussion of such issues as the Formosa and Middle East resolutions that President Eisenhower received strong support and helpful advice from the Congress during the 1950's. But despite the bipartisan endorsement of our foreign policies, and the administration's efforts to build and maintain strong links to Congress, there remained significant areas where the administration acted independently, without consulting or informing Congress of its activities. We know now, as we did not know then, that the Eisenhower administration made unprecedented use of covert activities to shape American foreign policy. We know now, as we did not know then, that the Central Intelligence Agency helped overthrow the government of Mohammed Mossadegh in Iran in 1953 and helped the Shah of Iran return to power. We know now, as we did not know then, that the CIA organized the revolution in Guatemala that overthrew the government of Jacobo Arbenz Guzman in 1954. There was no congressional oversight of intelligence activities at that time. The only member of the Senate regularly informed of CIA activities was Senator Richard Russell, chairman of the Armed Services Committee and of the military appropriations subcommittee. During the 1950's, Senator Mike Mansfield began to call for a special committee to oversee the CIA, but this call went unheeded for another twenty years.

There was a price to pay for Congress' lack of involvement in intelligence issues, and the price included such avoidable blunders as the U-2 affair in 1960 and the Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961. The CIA had used its high flying U-2 planes to gather extraordinary information about the closed Soviet society, but they continued the flights to the very eve of President Eisenhower's summit meeting with Premier Nikita Khrushchev. When the plane piloted by Francis Gary Powers was shot down on May 1, 1960, the Eisenhower administration was caught in a clumsy lie, pretending it had been a weather flight. Eventually, the president conceded the intelligence-gathering nature of the flight, but refused to apologize to the Soviets, and Khrushchev stormed out of the summit meeting. We also know now, but did not know then, that in March 1960, President Eisenhower gave the CIA authorization to begin training Cuban refugees for an invasion of Cuba, which a year later, at the beginning of John Kennedy's administration, ended in complete failure at the Bay of Pigs. Had a congressional intelligence committee existed at that time, or had congressional leaders been at all consulted in advance one suspects that cautionary warnings would have been raised that could have saved the administration from international embarrassment.

By the end of Eisenhower's second term a sense of congressional disenchantment with the administration's foreign policies had developed. In 1959, Senator Hubert Humphrey was complaining that "the slogan of 'bipartisanship' has too often been invoked to muzzle criticism of administration mistakes." One study by the Foreign Relations Committee noted that: "As the President's second term ran out, public debate, in its preoccupation with the U-2 incident and missile-gap controversy, had begun to show some signs of the development of the kind of 'credibility gap' that had plagued President Truman in his last years."

Mr. President, I began my remarks today with Dr. Francis Wilcox's ingredients for an ideal bipartisan arrangement on foreign policy. In brief these were: (1) Congress and the presidency should be controlled by opposite parties; (2) there should be national consensus on foreign policy; (3) leadership on Capitol Hill that commands respect in both Congress and the executive branch and that is willing to deemphasize politics; and (4) a presidency that is willing to recognize Congress' constitutional role in foreign policy and to consult with it frequently on important international matters. To a remarkable degree, these conditions existed during the 1950's while Dwight

Eisenhower was President and Lyndon Johnson was Senate majority leader—and that is a credit to both of those men. And yet, despite the national consensus, despite the inherent congressional support for presidential leadership in foreign policy, despite the president's good intentions of opening communications links with Congress, the bipartisanship of the Eisenhower years did not produce entirely satisfactory results. As one Foreign Relations Committee study concluded: "On balance/there was/little to indicate that Congress had become anything like an equal partner in the making of foreign policy or given access to the inner councils. Good intentions, it would seem on the basis of this evidence, were not enough in themselves to lower the barriers to an open executive-legislative relationship." [21]

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, footnotes, to "Senate and Bipartisan Foreign Policy."

There being no objection, the footnotes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE AGENDA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate to my colleagues on both sides through their officer that we do hope to complete action on the budget resolution this week. As I understand, when we start tomorrow at 10:30 there will be 20 hours remaining. I am also advised the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator DOMENICI, will not be able to go late on Wednesday evening. He has a longstanding commitment. I would guess we would probably go quite late tomorrow night and probably very late on Thursday night, with a good chance of some action on Friday.

So I would indicate to my colleagues that I am not in a position to indicate what the schedule will be on this coming Friday. I would plan on being in session if I were anyone who might be listening.

Mr. President, I would also hope that before we make a decision on whether to extend the Memorial Day recess for 2 days on the 29th and 30th of May, Thursday and Friday of that week, that we can reach some agreement that we can take care of the following matters:

The House message to accompany S. 49, the gun bill; S. 2295, the military reorganization bill; trade legislation, to be more clearly defined by Senators DANFORTH and METZENBAUM; general supplemental appropriations bill, if available; S. 2231, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act; S. 2180, the daylight savings time vehicle; S. 41, the Malt Beverage Act; S. 1848, drug export bill; a Senate concurrent resolution with respect to farm credit offered by 53 Senators, and discharge and pass S. 2339, dealing with the schooling of the two children of the deceased F-111 pilots killed in the strike on Libya.

I am not certain that is the total list, Mr. President, but I have asked my staff to prepare a list. We hope to give what I have by the close of business to the distinguished minority leader. If there are any items to be added, I can do that tomorrow.

No amendments are in order to the DeConcini amendment, and following the conclusion or yielding back of time, the Senate will proceed to vote in relation to amendment No. 1803. Therefore, a rollcall could occur as early at 11 a.m., on Tuesday.

Following the vote on the DeConcini amendment, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Melcher amendment under the following time agreement: 30 minutes on the amendment to be equally divided between the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER].

No amendments are in order to the Melcher amendment, and following the conclusion or yielding back of time, a vote will occur in relation to that amendment.

ORDER FOR RECESS FROM 12 NOON UNTIL 2 P.M. TOMORROW

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess tomorrow between the hours of 12 noon and 2 p.m. in order for the weekly party caucuses to meet. This could be extended briefly if we run over on a vote on the Melcher amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IMPROPER ASBESTOS DISPOSAL IS A POTENTIALLY DEADLY PROBLEM

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, for the second time in recent weeks deadly asbestos debris has been discovered in an abandoned building in Camden, NJ. Asbestos is a known carcinogen which can cause lung cancer, mesothelioma or asbestosis when airborne fibers of the mineral are inhaled. Exposure to airborne asbestos fibers is particularly dangerous for children since they breathe five times faster than adults.

In the first Camden incident, plastic bags stuffed with asbestos debris were found in the basement of an abandoned house. Fortunately, the bags were not damaged, but if children playing in the house had come across these bags and ripped them open, the results could have been deadly. The second Camden incident is even more dangerous. Several lengthy pieces of asbestos-containing material were dumped unwrapped in an abandoned building. It seems likely the people wandering through the building were exposed to airborne fibers if they passed in the vicinity of the materials.

Currently, contractors who perform asbestos abatement work do not have to be accredited. The Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] has decided against promulgating regulations that would establish a contractor accreditation program and prescribe proper disposal of asbestos debris. The results of this Federal inaction are frightening. EPA estimates that 75 percent of all school asbestos cleanup work has been done improperly because without Federal regulations guiding cleanup work, this difficult, dangerous activity is often left to disreputable contractors who deliberately skip safety precautions or use slipshod methods. Improper abatement work is worse that no cleanup work at all because more hazardous fibers are released into the air than if the asbestos had not been treated.

Furthermore, these disreputable contractors are likely incorrectly disposing of asbestos debris in order to save money. The Camden incidents, and other countless unknown disposal problems are the unfortunate result. Congress must act now to end this problem.

Senator STAFFORD and I have introduced legislation that would force contractors who do school cleanup work to be fully trained and accredited and would require the proper disposal of asbestos debris. The Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986 (H.R. 4311) also establishes a roadmap showing school officials how to properly inspect for hazardous asbestos and how they should clean it up once it is found. Following the establishment of standards, schools will be required to inspect where they have not done so already and prepare and implement cleanup plans for any hazardous asbestos found in buildings.

Proper cleanup only alleviates part of the problem. Asbestos must also be disposed of correctly so situations like the one in Camden can be avoided. We must act now to end this national problem.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation and commend an article from the Courier-Post detailing this example of improper asbestos dumping in Camden.

ASBESTOS FOUND IN ABANDONED CITY PROPERTY

CAMDEN.—Potentially dangerous asbestos has been found in another city-owned, abandoned property.

It was the second time in a month that police and city officials have had to deal with the expensive problem of removing the material left there illegally.

The latest discovery was reported at 1039 Diamond St., near Haddon Avenue and Mount Vernon Street, yesterday afternoon by a neighbor who complained to the mayor's office.

The neighbor, Daniel Torres, said he noticed the material in the two-story row house about two weeks ago. There are at least four pieces of material about 4 or 5 feet in length with approximate diameter of 12 inches.

Walter Richardson, the public works director, speculated that the material had been used to wrap high pressure steam lines. He said he would ask business administrator Richard Cummings to declare an emergency and allow the city to hire a contractor to remove the material, hopefully sometime today.

Richardson said he did not know how much the job would cost and his aides could not immediately determine the cost of a similar emergency removal last month.

That asbestos was found in six specially marked bags in a building at 430 Chestnut St., approximately two miles from the Diamond Street building. Concerned neighbors asked the city to demolish the building and it was torn down.

Richardson said he does not know whether it will be necessary to demolish the fire-damaged and stripped Diamond Street building immediately. The building had been boarded up, but some of the boards have been removed.

The Chestnut Street asbestos also prompted an investigation by Detective Richard Arensberg that resulted in illegal dumping charges now pending against three men. Arensberg said yesterday he has begun an investigation of the Diamond Street complaint.

AN EDITORIAL VIEWPOINT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the American people have run out of patience with the murderous terrorism of Libya's Colonel Qadhafi. As a recent eiditorial in the York News-Times makes clear, we have tried diplomacy, economic sanctions, and warnings, all to no avail. We then resorted to the only option left to us, military force. Let us hope, as the News-Times does, that this time we got Qadhafi's attention.

The editorial follows:

[From the York (NE) News-Times, Apr. 15, 1986]

REASON FAILS WITH KHADAFY, BOMBS MAY GET HIS ATTENTION

While not all Americans are going to jump for joy about the United States' air strikes against Libya Monday evening, alternatives to that action apparently have been exhausted. It seems obvious that dealing with those who operate outside the realm of civilized activities requires somewhat different procedures than when sane and civilized persons are negotiating.

At a meeting in Lincoln last weekend, a colleague commented that it was ridiculous to bring the full force of the United States as a premiere power in the world against a small and essentially weak nation like Libya. However, that thinking is a bit simplistic since aggression such as the indiscriminate slaughter effectuated by Khadafy cannot be solved by communications between rational persons. Idiots like Khadafy delight in kicking someone in the shins when there is no possibility of reprisal.

I hate war. I hate aggressive action such as that initiated Monday night, because I know in the long run we are going to lose some good, young servicemen through the mad-dog actions of a weird Arab. But we must compare against it the fact that Khadafy is so insane as to instigate actions to kill those Americans who are especially dangerous to him—elderly men, women and young children tourists.

The United States, at least, has the common decency to attack military or paramilitary targets rather than wholesale bombing or rocket attacks on civilian populations. Additionally, there was, if everyone is telling the truth, "direct, precise and irrefutable" evidence that Khadafy planned and carried out the terrorist attack in the West Berlin night club about 10 days ago. This, at least, justified the air strikes against terrorist facilities.

Is it possible to deal with Khadafy? We've tried diplomacy, economic sanctions, warnings, etc. He has found, apparently blissfully ignorant of the fact, that America, despite indications to the contrary, will not sit still forever, that no longer will we deal with him as a little boy kicking a grownup in the shins, but as someone who should be held responsible for his irrational and idiotic behavior. • • •

Khadafy's indiscriminate slaughter is inexcusable as a civilized act among humans. He is, without question, a different kind of individual and outside the realm of civilized personnel. Whether he is capable of understanding what has happened is not known. One can only hope, as pointed out above, that the hit on the head with a two-by-four has gotten his attention. I do not like the American reaction to Khadafy's terrorism, but I cannot see any other solution.

What was done was the least palatable solution; but any other action has already been tried and failed. Let's hope this one works.

WINNING SPEECH

HON. JOSEPH J. DioGUARDI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. DioGUARDI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to include in the RECORD for my colleagues' review, the winning speech from the American Legion New York State 49th Annual Oratorical Contest. The contest, which took place in New Rochelle, NY, was won by Kedra Small of City Honors High in Buffalo. Congratulations to Kedra for her winning speech which follows:

THE CONSTITUTION: FOUNDATION OF A NATION

(By Kedra Small)

Every country has its foundation, but just as a house cannot stand for long without a good foundation, neither can a nation. America has endured for over two centuries because its foundation is a unique covenant, the United States Constitution.

As citizens of this great country we cannot help but appreciate the difficult task of our Founding Fathers who wrote such an extraordinary document which contains the Preamble, seven Articles and to this date 26 amendments.

On May 25, 1787, our Founding Fathers gathered in Philadelphia. There were great fears in our country at that time. We had fought hard and won independence from England, and we were facing chaos in our union under the weak document known as the Articles of Confederation. The men who gathered together knew that specific principles had to be established which would unite our country and most importantly provide for the rights of the people.

Our Founding Fathers were wise men, George Washington and James Madison from the State of Virginia, Alexander Hamilton from New York, and Benjamin Franklin from Pennsylvania, to name just a few.

It was recorded that George Washington said, "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair! The event is in the hands of God." After these words, the framers of our Constitution began to debate and decide. Word by word, they fashioned the foundation and the framework, so unique, so new that it was like building a steel high-rise in the age of wood and stone, better able to endure the ravages of the winds of history. In this foundation and framework were the principles which provide for our national stability and personal security.

The checks and balance system, the first great wall of the foundation, insures the separation of powers. This great principle insures that America has a Federal Government. It is the principle that pertains to our three branches.

The Executive Branch holds the highest office in our country, the President who executes our laws and has the power of the veto.

The Legislative Branch consists of Congress, with both the House of Representatives and the Senate. This is where the laws of the land are made. The Congressional Members of both Houses are elected directly by the people and have the power to enact new Legislation with the power to overrule a veto by the President.

The Judicial Branch is our Supreme Court, with its nine Justices who interpret our laws and whose rulings over often controversial issues constitute the supreme law of the land.

The second wall in our foundation, the second principle is the Constitution's dual form of government. This enables our National and State Governments to function separately and also collaborating as one.

The third great wall of our foundation is the third principle. It is very important because it stresses another great right given in the Constitution. It is the principle of having a government by representation and it goes hand in hand with our right to vote. Whether it is by the people directly or indirectly, our elected officials are in office to serve our needs.

And finally, but not the least important is the fourth wall, the amending process. The framers of the Constitution were able to see into the future and recognize that the needs of the Nation would change in order for it to grow and prosper.

Separation of powers, dual form of government, representation of the people, and the amending process are the four principles, the four great walls which form the foundation and give stability to our nation. "This strong document, unique in all of history, has held our country and its citizens together through all the struggles that we have triumphed over: a great Civil War which nearly tore our Nation apart, the assassinations of three Presidents, two world wars and a great world-wide economic depression." [1]

In 1787, our Founding Fathers wrote: "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty, to ourselves and our posterity do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Ladies and gentlemen, this covenant will not remain strong without the knowledge and support of every American.

We must realize, as Thomas Paine wrote: "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigue of supporting it." The rights accorded us in this document will not continue to benefit us and future generations unless we take responsibility and become involved in the decisions of our lawmakers.

But how do we assume these responsibilities?

Vote! We must vote and become actively involved in the political process.

Write! We must write to our elected officials in Congress.

Call! We must call our local political leaders, the mayor, our councilmen, and our county legislators.

We must keep informed about the issues and make sure that our legislators at every level, hear our voices. We must speak out against injustice, for in every age there are those who lust for power and attempt to undermine our freedom, bit by bit, piece by piece.

Sir Thomas Moore stated: "All that is necessary for the forces of evil to win in the world is for good men to stand by and do nothing."

But I say to you that all that is necessary for America to lose its freedom is for good men and women to stand by and do nothing.

The United States of America, with all its freedoms and benefits can only survive on the strength and support of the people, because, ladies and gentlemen, the Constitution survives through us.

As citizens of the United States, it is not only our duty to be aware of the principles in this document but to utilize them fully. We should no longer sit back and take for granted the Freedom of Religion, Freedom of Press, Freedom of Speech, the Right to Assembly and the Right to Petition, which are guaranteed to us in the Bill of Rights.

This document is a safeguard from the oppression of the tyrant. For there are always those in every age who lust for power. Our Constitution protects us from these would be tyrants.

From all the movements of the past, we have but a small task which is to keep this covenant strong, and above all know and understand the full meaning of what its words mean. Yes, ladies and gentlemen, to appreciate and to understand the meaning of these words is the duty of every American citizen.

At the close of the Constitutional Convention, on the backrest of the chair in which George Washington was seated, unknown to those in the room was a painting which depicted a Sun. As the long meeting came to close, the men made preparations to leave. Upon noticing the painting which was protrayed on the back of the chair, a lively discussion broke out as to whether the painting was a rising Sun or a setting Sun, until Benjamin Franklin concluded: "Now we know what it is. It is a rising Sun."

Let us, as citizens of this country, always remember this time in 1787, when a new Nation was born.

Let us have a never ending appreciation in this covenant with its separation of powers, dual form of government, representation of the people and the amending process.

May the Constitution always shine its light of stability and assurance on this country, because, ladies and gentleman, it is a rising Sun.

CONGRESSMAN GILMAN SUPPORTS BIPARTISAN ACID RAIN INITIATIVE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4567, a promising bill that addresses an environmental problem in urgent need of Federal attention. Acid deposition, or, as it is commonly known, acid rain, is a primary concern to all who care about our environment, and has been a sore point in United States–Canadian relations. As a member of the 92 Group's Task Force on Acid Rain and an original cosponsor of this bill, I am pleased that the task force, in cooperation with the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], has been able to fashion legislation which significantly reduces the two pollutants most closely linked with acid rain; sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. I am also heartened by the flexibility that this bill, the Acid Deposition Control Act of 1986, gives to the States to achieve these reductions. I wish to thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIKORSKI], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and most especially my colleague from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], who spearheaded the task force's efforts, for introducing this comprehensive, bipartisan measure. I also wish to commend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], for the leadership he provided in bringing together a viable compromise on this issue.

My congressional district encompasses a large portion of the scenic Hudson River Valley. It is areas such as this which face incalculable damage from acid rain, and it is for areas such as this that the Federal Government must act expeditiously before irreversible damage occurs. Both the United States and Canada have stated, through endorsement of the Joint Report of the Special Envoys on Acid Rain, that "acidic emissions transported throughout the atmosphere undoubtedly are contributing to the acidification of sensitive areas in both [countries]. The potential for long-term socioeconomic costs are high." While per-year structural damage costs due to acid rain are difficult to quantify, estimates run into the billions. The damage done to aquatic ecosystem, forests, and the quality of life to all who enjoy the outdoors, is even more difficult to measure. What is clear, however, is that it is imperative that Congress act quickly to enact legislation to remedy this international problem.

Previous congressional attempts to address the acid rain problem have failed, in part, because they were tailored to specific geographical areas of the country and consequently did not garner national support. Each geographical area of the country contributes to, and is affected by, acid rain differently. Some States, such as my own, New York, have already adopted acid rain measures, while many others have not. Therefore, the most logical approach is to coordinate State action by establishing Federal emissions standards, allowing the States themselves to determine the best method to meet these standards. H.R. 4567 will reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by 10 million tons and nitrous oxides emissions by approximately 4 million tons by 1997, yet permits States and utilities to reduce their emissions without prohibitively high socioeconomic costs.

H.R. 4567 has several advantages over previous legislative initiatives. First, and most importantly given the need to trim Federal spending, the bill finances itself with a modest tax on electricity to be determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. The maximum cost to consumers from this tax is 50 cents on the typical monthly electric bill. The bill also sets two statewide emissions rate standards for sulfur dioxide, one to be met by 1993, the other to be met by 1997, which allows the States adequate time to comply with the standards in a manner best suited to them. The 1993 standard will further ensure that States act in a timely fashion to reduce their emissions rate of sulfur dioxide. In accordance with this legislation, coal-burning electric utilities will not bear the sole responsibility of reducing sulfur dioxide and nitrous oxides emissions to help curb acid rain. Mobile sources, industrial boilers, and smelters will also be called upon to reduce their emissions of these pollutants. Congress will also be evaluating the progress of emissions reductions, and will be afforded the opportunity to adopt correctional legislation following completion of the first phase in 1993.

I believe this bill represents negotiations in good faith by both sides of the aisle. The fact that 46 Republicans and 104 Democrats are original cosponsors of H.R. 4567 is indicative of the bipartisan nature of this issue and this legislation. We have studied the problems for years. The casual link between sulfur dioxide, nitrous oxides, and other pollutants to acid rain is definite, even if it is not fully understood. Congress must take the initiative on what is probably the most challenging environmental problem of this decade. As David Gardiner, the legislative director of the Sierra Club, stated in regard to this measure: "This is the right bill at the right time."

Accordingly, I request that a summary of this bill be inserted at this point in the RECORD, and commend it to my colleagues' immediate attention and urge their cosponsorship.

SUMMARY OF H.R. 4567, THE ACID DEPOSITION ACT OF 1986

The program would result in a 10 million ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions and a four million ton reduction in nitrogen oxide emissions from a 1980 base by 1997, through the following steps:

(1) State-developed strategies are required to reduce emissions. A two-phase program is mandated, giving states until 1993 to reduce sulfur emissions by five million tons from electric utilities, and until 1997 to reduce sulfur emissions by an additional five million tons from major stationary sources. States are given until 1997 to reduce nitrogen oxide emissions by about two million tons from electric utilities and industries boilers. Each state would have the flexibility to pursue any control strategy within each source category to achieve the required reductions. Failure of a state to submit an approvable plan would result in congressionally imposed emissions limitations. Western smelters would have to be in compliance with the Clean Air Act by 1988.

(2) A congressional mid-course correction is possible before second phase. The EPA is required to submit a study to Congress in 1993, to determine the reduction in acid rain achieved under phase I of the program, and the feasibility to meeting phase II requirements. If Congress fails to adjust the program by January 1994, phase II requirements go into effect.

(3) A Federal interest subsidy program will keep residential electric rates from increasing more than 10 percent. A Governor can receive Federal assistance if he decides to require the use of control technology to protect coal production while reducing sulfur emissions. A Federal trust fund is created by levying a fee on electricity generated not to exceed ⅛ mill per kilowatt-hour (about 25 to 50 cents per month on a typical electrical bill). The fund would be available to pay for interest on loans or bonds for control technology to maintain electric rates below a 10 percent increase.

(4) Tougher standards for new power plants. The new source performance standards would be tightened for nitrogen oxide emissions from new power plants. This tightening would reduce nitrogen oxide emissions by about one million tons by 1997.

(5) Tighter standards for new cars and trucks. Beginning in model year 1988, new trucks would have to meet tighter standards for nitrogen oxide emissions. The levels required for trucks would be comparable to those already achieved by new cars. Beginning in model year 1989, new cars would have to meet tighter standards for nitrogen oxide emissions. These standards would reduce nitrogen oxide emissions by about one million tons by 1997.

(6) Instructs the Secretary of State to negotiate emissions limitations with Mexico to ensure that its Nacazari smelter does not excessively pollute the southwestern United States.

THE JOINT BALTIC AMERICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, on May 1, 1986, the Joint Baltic American National Committee (JBANC) will mark its 25th anniversary by awarding the Baltic Freedom Award to Members of Congress and other Government officials.

Among those to be honored will be our colleague, BILL CARNEY of New York, and Senators WILLIAM ARMSTRONG and DON RIEGLE.

Linas Kojelis, Special Assistant to the President, Office of Public Liaison; Mark Palmer, Deputy Assistant Secretary for European Affairs at the State Department, and the staff of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, will also be honored.

JBANC was established on April 27, 1961, by the three central national organizations of Baltic Americans—the Estonian American National Council, the American Latvian Association, and the Lithuanian American Council.

In its recent annual report, JBANC stated:

Despite the occupation of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania by Soviet forces for over 45 years, the struggle for re-establishing freedom and independence of the Baltic republics continues. The Baltic people today continue to maintain their national identities in the face of cruel oppression and increased Soviet attempts to russify their countries. Baltic refugees and their descendants in the West are faced with an equally important fight to keep the Baltic issue alive in countries that frequently display indifference or ignorance to their plight and that of their countrymen.

As you know, the United States has never recognized and does not now recognize the incorporation—by force and violence and deportations and assassinations and terror—of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania into the Soviet Union. This crime against humanity took place when the Communist Party controlling the Soviet Union joined with its treaty ally, Hitler's Nazi Party controlling Germany, in dividing Eastern Europe between them.

How often do you see this terrible story on television "docudramas"? How many times do you see the Soviet Embassy picketed by Americans of non-Baltic birth in a show of solidarity with the Baltic people? How often do we see articles in our news magazines about the plight of the Baltic people and of the terror they have endured? Rarely, if ever, in each case. Our collective memory suffers from "selective indignation" when it comes to crying out against human rights violations. There are some crimes—the violation of the Baltic States among them—that have gone down the memory hole. JBANC reminds us of the tragic fate of the Baltic people and in doing so, performs a service not only for the Baltic people, but for our national character.

During a recent debate, I said that we do not want to see Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Honduras go the way of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. I believe that the more we know about the facts of the forced incorporation of these proud nations into the Communist police state we call the Soviet Union, the more we understand the need to be of help in every effective way, to those fighting today to avoid a similar fate, all over the world.

HART HONORED FOR ESSAY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the civic and scholarly achievement of an outstanding resident of New Jersey's First Congressional District, Michele Hart.

Michele was recently honored by the New Jersey Association of Conservation Districts for placing first in the 1985 conservation essay contest. Michele's essay is entitled, "Why We Need To Conserve Soil on Farmland," and represents the kind of intelligence, insight, and imagination which will lead our great Nation into the 21st century. For as much as development is important to the economic health of our country, I am certain that my colleagues would agree that agriculture is the heart of a strong, healthy America.

I am grateful to the New Jersey Association of Conservation Districts for sponsoring this contest and for promoting a greater awareness in New Jersey of the importance of soil conservation.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure our colleagues would be pleased to join with me, Michele's family and friends, and the entire community in paying tribute to her outstanding achievement.

Please allow me to share Michele's essay with the House of Representatives:

WHY WE NEED SOIL CONSERVATION ON FARMLANDS

Conserving soil on farmiands is very important, and there are many reasons why we need to do so. One such reason is that the probability of being able to start a farm on a piece of land which man has never interfered with is low. If a farmer could start work as nature does, he could doubtlessly maintain fertility and crop production at a high standard. But, because this is unlikely, man must learn to conserve his farmland soil to keep productivity high. After all, if a man dedicates his life to producing food for society, he dedicates his life to the soil which will work for him.

Farmland soil is continually plagued by soil erosion. Soil erosion may be so gradual that serious damage is done before the farmer is aware of what is happening. Each time a hard rain hits bare land, soil is torn loose and swept away. With each drop of rain that hits the earth there is an explosion sending wet soil in every direction. Not only is soil torn loose to be washed away but also available nutrients are dissolved and carried away. Because of soil, sheet, gully, wind, and water erosion, farmland is disappearing and conservation is the only method of regaining it. It must be realized that soil is a natural resource which can be exhausted. The belief of its indestructability is a common misconception that must be corrected.

In addition to protecting and improving the land, soil conservation yields many side benefits. It helps lower the cost of farm production. This increases farmers' profit and helps lower the cost of food and clothing to city dwellers. Soil conservation helps check drought damage in dry seasons and reduces flood crests in small and large streams in wet times. It reduces siltation of streams, reservoirs, and harbors, helping to insure a cleaner water supply for cities and towns, improves navigation, and provides a better habitat for fish and other wildlife. Conservation methods do away with the ugly scars of erosion and provide a more beautiful countryside in which to work and play.

PUTTING STOP TO TERRORISM

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I believe the American people are united behind President Reagan in his decision on the use of military force against terrorist targets in Llbya. A recent editorial in the Wayne Herald argues that since diplomacy, economic sanctions, and public condemnation had not worked, the President had to use a last resort, air strikes on Libyan terrorist bases. The editorial goes on to point out how terrorism can threaten all of us, even citizens in the heartland, far from the usual scene of terrorist actions. That is a valid point. Terrorism is a threat to all of us, to democracies, and to the American way of life. It must be countered effectively, as the Herald points out, "on a worldwide basis."

[From the Wayne (NE) Herald, Apr. 17, 1986]

PUTTING STOP TO TERRORISM

(By Chuck Hackenmiller)

What the United States military did on Monday, strike at Libyan targets, was a bold but necessary move in an effort to control the terrorism carried out at will by Moammar Khadafy and his followers.

In the past, Khadafy had been repeatedly warned of his regime's participation in terrorist activities popping up throughout the world.

He had responded with arrogance and spite—and with more terrorist acts.

Diplomacy didn't work with Khadafy. Neither did public condemnation of his regime's action or United States economic sanctions. One of several last resorts remained and that was for President Reagan to conduct air strikes on the Libyan terrorist bases.

The bombing at the La Belle discotheque in West Germany was, as "irrefutable" evidence points, executed under the direct orders of the Libyan regime. * * *

Ripples of the terrorist acts bring on the understandable concern of individuals who have children or relatives serving at terrorist-prone areas. It can extend close to home.

And that is why we must be concerned with controlling widespread terrorism on a worldwide basis.

REDFISH CONSERVATION AND MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1986

HON. JOHN B. BREAUX

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, the legislation that I am introducing today may well be among my last as a member of this great House of Representatives, but it is certainly far from the least significant. In many respects this bill represents a manifestation of an increasingly recognized need to fundamentally reassess the system by which this Nation manages its marine fishery resources.

For years, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment, I have vigorously encouraged and promoted the full development of the U.S. fishing industry. The resources of the sea offer our people superior recreation and a very healthy diet. Fisheries also provide a very significant potential for employment and economic activity. For example, the development of fisheries in, for example, my home State of Louisiana will be central to our efforts to effect a transition away from an oil and gas dependent economy and to restore economic stability.

But, as was always contemplated by those of us who have devoted much time to this area of law, fisheries development in the United States was intended to be held synonymous with wise resource utilization through the application of thoughtful and effective conservation and management regimes. I, and a number of distinguished Members of Congress, have made a substantial effort to develop and perfect the Fishery Conservation and Management Act and various international fishery agreements to which the United States is a party. Our objective has been to require that fishery utilization and development go hand in hand with resource conservation and management. Our goal has been to ensure that our living marine resources remain renewable for all generations to come.

With disturbing frequency, however, I have been witness to the failure of this system to achieve our intended goals and objectives. Time and time again I have seen the Federal fishery managers confronted with a situation where its already too late, where the resource is overfished and damaged, and where all of our efforts are to restore rather than conserve and manage a fishery. Our great technology has now enabled us to develop fisheries at a "gold rush" pace; far exceeding the pace of the fishery management system we created. Because fishery resources and the fishing industry are so complex, so too is the conservation and management system we have developed. In order to consider and account for all that need be, this system requires a timeframe that, by definition, can no longer respond in a timely fashion to rapid fishery development. Federal fishery management has become crises management; a little too little, a little too late.

In the Gulf of Mexico, possibly the most familiar and popular of fishes is the redfish, also known as the red drum. I can say with no lack of experience that this is a premier gamefish and, as the world has now also discovered, a superior food fish. Ironically, these attributes also threaten to be the demise of this great resource.

Since the "cajun rage" has hit this Nation's finer restaurants, the demand for redfish has grown astronomically. Since 1980, the commercial harvest of redfish in the gulf has grown by nearly 400 percent, and that is acknowledged by the scientists to be a very conservative estimate. In order to satisfy the demands of the now enlightened American diner, gulf fishermen are forced to move further and further offshore in the gulf to find large quantities of these fish. Unfortunately, it is in these offshore waters, which are primarily under Federal jurisdiction, that the large breeding stock of redfish reside. It is this stock on which the reproductive capacity and the very future of this resource depend.

The redfish crisis is that, while these fish are under the jurisdiction and stewardship of the U.S. Government, absolutely no Federal conservation or management provisions exist for this species. Furthermore, our scientific understanding of this resource is so limited, we hardly know what to do about it. Fishermen, commercial and recreational alike, are now completely free to harvest this resource at will and our scientists cannot tell us with any certainty just how much damage is being done. Only the years of experience and intuition of these experts can tell us that no species can for long sustain the kind of fishing pressure now developing on the redfish in Federal waters. Some type of management provisions must be quickly applied, but none currently exist.

Under normal procedures, it could take 2 years for a Federal management plan to be developed and implemented. By then, there might not be enough redfish to worry about. The purpose of this legislation is to allow both our scientists and our Federal fishery conservation and management system to essentially "catch up" to the fishery development process before this resource is irreparably damaged. For once I'd like to see us put the conservation of the resource first. For once I'd like to see us manage a healthy fishery before a crisis develops, rather than see us struggle to restore a fishery that has already collapsed.

The provisions of this legislation are simple and are designed to phase in, through a three-step process, a full-scale Federal fishery management plan for redfish. The first step is to put a temporary halt to the harvest of redfish in Federal waters. The next step is to direct the Secretary of Commerce, through the National Marine Fisheries Service, to develop and implement emergency interim management regulations which apply to the waters under Federal jurisdiction. The legislation gives the Secretary 90 days from the date of enactment to promulgate such regulations and, upon that date, the initial moratorium will be replaced with such regulations.

The third step in the process is for the Gulf of Mexico Regional Fishery Management Council to develop and implement a Federal fishery management plan for redfish which will apply permanently. As I indicated earlier, this process can take 2 years and upon completion would replace the Secretary's interim emergency regulations. As such, I think the legislation provides a very fair and livable mechanism for protecting the redfish resource during the process of developing a sound Federal management regime in the Gulf of Mexico.

Another very important provision of this legislation is one that directs the Secretary of Commerce, again through the National Marine Fisheries Service, to immediately commence a 2-year scientific research program on redfish. Effective fishery management decisions are impossible without a high degree of understanding of the population dynamics and various behaviors of a fishery resource and so this provision is central to the overall objective of achieving a constructive Federal management regime for redfish.

Mr. Speaker, the process I have outlined deviates somewhat from the normal fishery management plan development process to which many have grown accustomed, and so will "rock the boat" of those more comfortable with precedent. But as I have explained, our precedents have not always worked. The "gold rush" is on for redfish, and without this legislation, the redfish is a deadfish by any other name.

SAVE THE COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of maintaining a strong and vibrant Cooperative Extension Service. The extension has not only been instrumental in providing rural families with much-needed information on the technological and managerial aspects of farming, but has greatly enriched the lives of urban dwellers. Indeed, the majority of my own district is urban and has benefited from programs that fall under the extension's budget, especially the 4-H program. I realized that 4-H was popular in my district, but had no idea how popular. After hearing that the program would be subject to severe cuts under the President's budget or virtually eliminated through rewording of the Smith-Lever Act, over 1,000 of my constituents signed a petition to voice their disapproval.

According to one constituent who wrote to my office, there are 98 volunteer adult leaders for every paid staff person in the 4-H program in the city of Chicago. I agree with his conclusion that you would have to look hard and long for a more efficient use of American tax dollars. 4-H provides an opportunity for the youth of Chicago and of our Nation in general to develop into responsible and productive citizens. Youth are able to choose from a variety of activities, including such diverse areas as public speaking and urban gardening, which insure a rich atmosphere of interaction. Without a vital 4-H, many urban youth would have next to nothing in relation to alternative activities—something that could have serious consequences.

In this time of budgetary constraint and fiscal austerity, most understand that Federal spending will have to be curtailed in certain areas. With regard to funding of the extension, States have already begun to pay more of the cost of programs like 4-H. However, to cut Federal funding by nearly 60 percent as proposed by the administration, is both unfair and irresponsible. The extension makes up only seven-tenths of 1 percent of the USDA budget, has proved itself to be of invaluable service to farmers and others, and yet is being subjected to huge budget cuts. Our Nation cannot afford to lose the opportunity to invest in the future of American farmers and American youth.

SOVIET JEWRY

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to participate today in the "Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews," and I thank my colleague, TOM KINDNESS, for organizing this event.

The Soviet Union's 1.8 million Jews live under a regime that routinely interferes with the exercise of their religion and violates their human rights. Denied even those rights that are extended to other religions in the Soviet Union, Jews are permitted no Hebrew publications, no organization, and no regular ties with fellow Jews abroad. Their country contains fewer than 60 functioning synagogues, and not a single rabbinical school.

Among those now enduring the fate of the refuseniks are Sonia Furman and her daughter Asya. For 13 years, Sonia and Asya have been separated from their son and brother, Yakov, who in 1973 was among the lucky few allowed by the Soviet Government to emigrate. Their attempts to emigrate and join Yakov in Israel have now twice been denied.

Asya first applied for an exit visa in December 1978, and for 6 months heard nothing from the government. In the meantime, Asya's father wrote an article for a government newspaper called "Curse on Zionism Which Divided My Family." In May 1979, she learned that her request had been denied on the grounds that she lacked her father's consent and on the basis of public opinion. Asya's parents had been divorced for years. Later Soviet officials acknowledged that the fact that Asya lacked her father's consent was not a valid basis for denying her emigration, but still she was not granted an exit visa.

Asya's troubles did not end there. In the same month that she was first refused emigration, Asya was fired from her job as a music teacher for the blind. It took several years before Asya was able to get a position as a cashier at a photo studio.

Both Sonia and Asya have since applied for emigration but have been denied. The only explanation the government offered for this decision was that there is "no reason for them to leave the Soviet Union."

Today, I call upon the Soviet Union to grant exit visas to Sonia and Asya Furman and allow them to reunite as a family with Yakov in Israel.

TRIBUTE TO BARBARA AMEDURI

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, citizens of Camden County, NJ, were saddened recently by the tragic loss of Barbara Jones Ameduri in an automobile accident.

Ms. Ameduri moved from Orange County, CA, to Voorhees, NJ, 3 years ago. She quickly became active in civic affairs and political campaigns, serving as a Republican committeewoman for Camden County.

This accident occurred just before Ms. Ameduri was to move to Springfield, MO, with her husband, Dr. Clifford J. Ameduri, a physician at Our Lady of Lourde's Medical Center.

Mr. Speaker, we all have individuals in our districts who are dedicated to the political process and who work to better their communities. Barbara Ameduri was one such person, and her loss is greatly felt by her family and all who knew her.

The Courier-Post newspaper obituary follows:

BARBARA JONES AMEDURI, COUNTY COMMITTEEWOMAN

VOORHEES.—Services for Barbara Jones Ameduri, a Republican Camden County committeewoman who died in an automobile accident Monday, will be private.

Mrs. Ameduri, 35, of the Sturbridge Lakes section of Voorhees, was active in local Republican politics.

A native of Buffalo, N.Y., she lived in California before moving to Voorhees in 1982.

A graduate of Criss College, she had an associate degree in computer programming and worked in the insurance field. She was attending Camden County College working toward a bachelor's degree in finance.

"She was relatively new to the county committee, but she seemed to be an outstanding woman," said George F. Geist, Camden County Republican chairman. "She was very dedicated to her community."

Mrs. Ameduri was interested in the preservation of wildlife and was a member of the American Museum of Natural History. She was an avid weight lifter and a world traveler, having visited India, the Soviet Union and many parts of Europe.

Surviving are her husband, Dr. Clifford J.; her mother, Flozell Jones of Florida; her father, Ulysses Jones of Buffalo; and her grandmother, Lee Stearman of Buffalo.

A Barbara Jones Ameduri Scholarship Fund has been established for the preservation and study of wildlife. Contributions may be sent in care of Ronald Capuccio, Esq., 212 Haddon Ave., Westmont, N.J. 08108.

NEBRASKA NEWSPAPER COMMENTS ON LIBYA ATTACK

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the one word I hear more than any other in connection with the American bombing raid on Libya is "justified." That, apparently, is what most Americans believe. As a recent article in the Nebraska City News Press makes clear, the view is that it was time that someone stepped up and did something. The editorial for the News Press is convinced that appeasement is a futile course, and it argues that even if some lives are lost, we have no choice but to confront Qadhafi and others of his ilk.

I commend the article to my colleagues.

RECENT ATTACK ON LIBYA WAS JUSTIFIED

The United States' attack on Libya Monday night was justified, and it is my hope that should Mr. Khadafy continue his terroristic tactics, President Reagan will again order U.S. bombers into Libya.

There. I've come right out and said it, and you all probably think I'm some sort of bleeding heart, dyed-in-the-wool warmonger just itching to pull the trigger. Well, I'm not. I'm just a 23-year-old American who thinks it's about time that someone stepped up and did something about terrorism.

Most of the editorialists in the nation seem to feel that our bombing of Libya will prompt Khadafy to step up his terroristic tendencies, and there is no doubt in my mind that terrorism will increase in Europe and other countries.

But common sense tells me that if bombs are dropped on his home every time he kills someone, Khadafy will be less eager to blow up airplanes and harm innocent people.

The experts say that Khadafy envisions himself as a martyr to his cause, that by bombing his homeland the United States will just enhance his reputation and bring him closer to his dream.

But it doesn't take a student of modern history to know that once a maniacal leader is disposed of, his followers do not usually follow in his footsteps (i.e. Hitler, Mussolini, etc.).

The only thing that has distressed me about the whole situation is the fact that our "allies" have really come through with flying colors, although it is not totally unexpected. Naturally they have more reasons to be afraid of Khadafy because the European community is much more vulnerable to terrorism.

Great Britain and West Germany seem to be the only nations on our side. What about France? Well, that nation seem to have forgotten that without the United States, there would have been no stopping Adolf Hitler in World War II, and France would have never been liberated.

Other nations seem to owe us a similar debt, but they choose to denounce our efforts to end terrorism, and instead they remain neutral in hopes that Khadafy and his Middle East buddies will continue to ship them oil.

They hope to ignore and appease Khadafy, hoping that he will spare them his terror. It seems to me that the European community tried to appease Adolf Hitler once before in 1938, and we ended up with the extermination of 6 million Jews. In other words, if ignorance is bliss, France and the like ought to be in ecstasy.

As for the Soviet Union, it is quite logical that they denounce anything the United States does, forgetting that they've been violating Afghanistan for several years now.

In the long run, we will undoubtedly see terrorism increased around the world, and some lives will be lost in the struggle. But by choosing to confront Khadafy and the other terroristic madmen of the world, we are showing that at least one nation, the greatest nation on earth, is not going to sit around and let the few rule the many.

ARMED DRUG TRAFFICKING ACT

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill entitled the "Armed Drug Trafficking Act," which would amend 19 U.S.C. section 924(c) to include narcotics offenses as crimes of violence under this statute. The effect of this amendment would be to impose an additional 5-year term on individuals who carry a firearm during the commission of a narcotics crime.

On November 26, 1985, the Circuit Court of Appeals in New York State reversed and vacated a sentence imposed by U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan on a drug dealer. In substance the decision held that the Federal violent crime statute providing for a minimum 5-year jail sentence for carrying firearms in the commission of a violent crime cannot be applied to narcotics offenders. If felonies involving the sale and distribution of narcotics are to be deemed crimes of violence for purposes of section 924(c), the court observed, Congress should amend the law.

Drug dealers are not tolerant of mistakes or excuses, many of them will kill to accomplish their objectives. They have no regard for human life, they are motivated by greed. Violence and intimidation are part of the daily stock in trade of professional narcotics traffickers. The abduction and murder of DEA Special Agent Enrique Camarena in Mexico last year, and the violence that has now become commonplace in South Florida and along the Southwest border attest that narcotics offenses are crimes of violence.

Mr. Speaker, Senator ALFONSE D'AMATO attempted to add this provision as an amendment to the continuing resolution bill last year; however, the amendment was dropped in conference. On December 4, 1985, he introduced S. 1894 to accomplish this objective. S. 1894 has been referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Subcommittee on Criminal Law, however, to date no hearings have been held on the bill. My bill is identical to S. 1894, and I am hopeful that the House Judiciary Committee will be able to act on it expeditiously.

I am pleased that Congressman BENJAMIN A. GILMAN, the ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, has joined me in cosponsoring the "Armed Drug Trafficking Act." Our former colleague, Edward Koch, now the mayor of New York City, has taken an active interest in this issue and supports passage of this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO AMERICANS OF LATVIAN HERITAGE

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the many Americans of Latvian heritage. Latvian Americans have contributed significantly to the richness and success of our society, deeply involved in civic, educational, charitable, and religious activities. They have also been one of the true defenders of freedom around the world, and have actively worked to promote the democratic principles and basic human rights which serve as the foundation of our own society.

It is one of the great tragedies of modern times that Latvians in the U.S.S.R. still suffer under the heavy hand of Soviet oppression. Denied basic human rights, with all manifestations of cultural identity ruthlessly suppressed, they have, nevertheless, valiantly and courageously maintained their traditions and heritage. They have not lost their thirst for freedom and they should serve as an inspiration to all of us. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I have a deep respect for these people and their efforts to overcome the brutal and relentless Soviet tyranny. I have actively worked in support of the Latvian cause and will continue to do so until their freedom is achieved.

On May 2–4 this year, several hundred leaders of Latvian American organizations throughout the United States will gather in Washington, DC, to attend the 35th annual Congress of the American Latvian Association. This is a most noteworthy event, and I have submitted to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a copy of a press release from the ALA which provides details about the event as well as the Latvian people.

HONORING THE HOLLISWOOD SCHOOL OF QUEENS COUNTY, NY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend and congratulate the Holliswood School (P.S. 178) of Queens County, NY, on the occasion of its 35th anniversary, which will be celebrated the week of May 12, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, P.S. 178 is truly unique. From kindergarten through the sixth grade, it offers special programs that most other students cannot take until they reach high school. These youngsters can choose from a variety of subjects that range from Latin and Spanish to a music program for gifted children. All Holliswood students are instructed in art, gym, computer, and a special advanced science program. The school has been recognized citywide for excellence; both its science lab and its publications center have won special awards.

Mr. Speaker, in an age when too few schools can offer even the basics, P.S. 178 goes far beyond. It gives its students a look at the exciting worlds of science, physical fitness, and culture—without neglecting a firm grounding in the reading, writing, and math skills they will need to exploit those worlds. The true atmosphere of education that the faculty and administrators have encouraged at the Holliswood School is a gift that the young scholars will be able to savor through their years of schooling and on to adult life.

To celebrate the school's 35th anniversary, the faculty and parents, under the direction of the excellent principal, Carol Harris, have organized a week of education and fun for the students. The events will culminate with a symposium, on Wednesday, May 14, featuring a panel of community leaders, alumni, parents, and special guests from the media.

Mr. Speaker, we in Queens County, NY, are very proud of the Holliswood School because we are honored by its achievements. I call now on all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join with me in paying tribute to the Holliswood School, upon the momentous occasion of its 35th anniversary, and in extending the school, its students, faculty, administration and alumni our best wishes as it embarks on its next 35 years.

TRIBUTE TO LILLIAN KATZ

HON. JOSEPH J. DioGUARDI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 28, 1986

Mr. DioGUARDI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Lillian Katz, founder and chief executive officer of Lillian Vernon Corp., whose company will be celebrating its 35th anniversary this year.

Lillian Katz emigrated from Europe at the age of 10. In 1951, Mrs. Katz decided to supplement her husband's income by starting her own business at home. Despite being a female entrepreneur and being pregnant with her oldest son, she began the process of turning a $2,000 investment into a multimillion-dollar company. Soon after Lillian Vernon's founding, Mrs. Katz decided to utilize her creativity and began designing her own products for mail order sales, and her small company began to grow rapdily. In 1965, the Lillian Vernon Corp. began to manufacture products for other companies such as Revlon and Avon. In 1970, the company, under Mrs. Katz's helmsmanship, decided to devote its efforts toward growth. Since that time, the company has soared to incredible heights.

Even though the Lillian Vernon Corp. has grown to be a mail order giant, "they are still proud to call themselves a family firm." The benefits which employees receive range from employee health programs to gifts for the holiday season. There is even a CPR training program available to the members of the Lillian Vernon corporate family.

Not only is the company generous to the people within the corporation, but they also continue to extend their generosity into the communities of Westchester County, NY. Lillian Katz has made many donations, including: children's furniture for day care centers, a room in the Mount Vernon Hospital, and a nine-passenger van for the handicapped. Also, the company has participated in several blood drives, and they have founded a summer concert series, the "Run for Help" marathon, and a physical education program for the handicapped.

Mrs. Katz has made many contributions to Westchester County. She has created numerous jobs and has generously contributed to various charities. She has proven that being successful does not encompass making profits alone, but being an active part of the community as well. Lillian Katz is not just a businesswoman; she is a model citizen we can all be proud of.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, April 29, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
